This is the mystery of the Christian in an evil world. To state it this way creates problems to be sure. Yet the other position of dualism creates even more problems. One article I read along these lines in a church paper assured the readers that there is no need to worry about what would happen if all people took Christ seriously because revivals never touch many people and they never will; and again the writer admitted that when the state goes to war it does fight our battles for it has the right to fight. Obviously the next step is that of a person who wrote me to say it would be tragic for America to disarm. Then the next step would be to encourage armament and finally to reductio ad absurdam, "I am a conscientious objector living under the Holy Spirit but let us have the biggest army and navy in the world because God wants this in order to protect me and my people."

Yes, I believe that the alternative to the majority view creates more problems than it settles. It builds up the world of what is to the level what ought to be rather than confronting what is with what ought to be.

Our principle then is not that we stay out of government. Our principle is that we do not betray Jesus Christ. Wherever we can serve Christ and show forth his love we can and must witness. We will work in governments as far as that Christ-centered principle allows. Thus we can work in a mental institution but we cannot work in a bomber factory; we can train for service but not for killing; we can risk our lives but we cannot take life.

To accept this is not to live under the illusion that our witness will dispense with the need of Christ to come again in power. To accept this is not to make government a basic agent of Christianization or evangelization. To accept this is not to deny the limited and circumscribed relationship to any government anywhere, any place or any time. It is to accept a fresher freer more creative relationship between the two spheres of church and state, a relationship which will better permit both the word of mercy and judgment to be spoken.

Actually I should not leave the impression that this is a wholly new suggestion. For four centuries we have had relationships with government about the affairs of our own people; for four centuries we have made it clear that we will not cooperate with a government which raises an issue of conscience. It is clear in the light of this that we are simply extending an already established principle rather than creating a new one. May the Lord lead in this pilgrimage of faith, hope and love.

Circuit-Rider of Paraguay

by A. J. Neuenschwander

IN JULY 1948 J. W. Nickel, his wife, and their two daughters, Gwen and Lois, left for Paraguay, South America for a two-year period of service. Nickel has done a great piece of work in organizing and conducting Bible schools in Friesland and Volendam. Not only did Brother Nickel work in Bible Schools, but he was instrumental in starting the building in Tiefenbrunn that houses the day school, the Bible School, and serves as a place for worship for this and the neighboring villages.

Transportation from one village to the other or from one colony to the other is always a difficult problem. Nickel solved their problem by purchasing two good riding ponies and two saddles. In this manner the "Circuit Rider of Paraguay" enhanced his usefulness greatly.

Last fall, Rev. Nickel assisted in conducting a series of evangelistic services in all the preaching centers in Neuland.

Instead of returning home in July, the Nickels will remain in Asuncion, Paraguay to shepherd the newly organized Mennonite Church in that city for several months until further arrangements can be made. Such a great-hearted decision will be rewarded in spiritual enrichment.

REPORT OF SEMI-ANNUAL

by

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, May 9 to 11.—A decision to recommend for approval of the General Conference in August the opening of a mission field in Japan and a revision of the standards of education for mission candidates were among the major results of the recent semi-annual meeting of the Conference Board of Foreign Missions at the Seminary in Chicago, Illinois.

All Board members were present: A. E. Kreider, Goshen, Indiana; D. J. Unruh, Newton, Kansas; P. A. Wedel, Goessel, Kansas; S. F. Pannabecker, Chicago, Illinois; J. J. Thiessen, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan; S. J. Goering, North Newton, Kansas; and H. G. Nyce, Pretty Prairie, Kansas. Mrs. A. M. Lohrentz and Mrs. W. C. Voth, represented the Women's Missionary Association.

The Board is organized under the following three committees: Executive Committee, A. E. Kreider, president; D. J. Unruh, recording secretary, S. J. Goering, treasurer; Personnel Committee, P. A. Wedel and S. F. Pannabecker; Promotion Committee, J. J. Thiessen and D. J. Unruh. Howard G. Nyce is Executive Secretary.

Japan Presents Favorable Situation

Now that the doors to China are apparently closed, the Board has been looking to Japan with the hope of opening work there. At the annual meeting held in Mountain Lake last November, it was decided that we request W. C. Voth, till recently in Hongkong, to visit Japan prior to his return to the United States. The Board appointed a committee of three of its members to study the possibility of opening work. This report was now unanimously accepted. Our opening of work there will depend on the authorization of the General Conference. The Board recognizes the favorable situation for entrance into Japan and agrees to attempt further steps in that direction. We hope the General Conference at the August session will authorize the Board to open work. The Board believes it should be active and aggressive in this situation.

The Board would think of sending two couples to open a work. One couple might be sent this fall and a second couple shortly thereafter. Since language work involves two years of study we are bound to have two years delay before getting into active work. W. C. Voth is now in Japan and plans to be home before the General Conference to give a personal report of his trip of investigation.

Revised Missionary Standards Adopted

The Personnel Committee of the Board presented their report in reference to standards of education of mission candidates. The report follows: "The Board is convinced that the very best preparation is none too good to bring to this task. Generally speaking, it is regarded as essential that the missionary have a good college education, including a thorough orientation in Mennonite history and conference relationships which could be best secured in one of our Mennonite colleges. Training should include at least some work in an acceptable theological seminary or Bible school. Bible school graduates who apply for appointment should present at least two years of college work in addition to Bible training. Practical experience in teaching or preaching is regarded as essential to good preparation. Applicants are advised to contact the Executive Secretary of the Board early in their preparation. Exceptions to the above requirements may be made as deemed advisable by the Board if consulted in advance.

"The Board regards ages 25 to 30 as the most suitable time to begin missionary work. Applicants past 30 years would not generally be accepted unless due to prolonged specialized preparation or because of experience valuable for certain special tasks on the field."

The Board passed the following motion regarding this report: "Resolved that we accept the report of the Personnel Committee in reference to standards of Education for Mission Candidates and that this take the place of the first paragraph under Section II, Qualifications of Missionaries in the Manual for Missionaries page 2, and be included in the minutes of this session."

The Board decided to revise the Manual for Missionaries and bring it up to date.

INDIA: Work Expanded

A recent letter from India regarding extending our work into Sarguja State to the north, was considered and the Board decided to encourage the India Mission to continue the effort of extending the work into this place.

Ratzlaffs to Return

The Board passed a motion that the Harold Ratzlaffs be returned to India this coming fall. It is expected that they will leave the latter part of September or the beginning of October.

The India Missionaries requested that Harold Ratzlaff bring another Jeep along to India but the Board decided that we would send the Chevrolet stationwagon it has on hand at the present time. The Board also discussed the request of having Brother Ratzlaff take along some special equipment as projectors, generators, etc. which resulted in the following motion that this request be granted, giving permission to take this material along. It was further decided that these funds be raised by special projects. The total needed for this equipment will be approximately $1,600.00.

The request of sending another nurse to India as soon as possible has been referred to the Personnel Committee of the Board.

Jubilee Book to be Published

Next we considered the India Jubilee book. Mrs. Harold Ratzlaff who assembled the material and worked with Bennie Bargen, Secretary of Publication Board, in editing the book, gave a report. It was decided to authorize the India Jubilee Book Committee, to proceed with the publication of the fiftieth anniversary book Fellowship in the Gospel, India—1900-1950, and have 2,000 copies printed. We hope to have these printed in time for the General Conference the latter part of August.

The Board hopes to be able to send several of its members to the India Jubilee. Definite appointments have not been completed.

China Closed to Workers

Since the Board cannot send workers into China at this time, they are encouraging Miss Marie J. Regier to apply for employment under the M.C.C. Miss Aganetha Fast, having been returned from China, has been requested to visit her home community in Mountain Lake in time for the Northern District Conference and to visit the churches in that vicinity. Her furlough period will end with the close of the year 1950.

AMERICAN INDIAN WORK: Arizona

Regarding the Arizona field, the Board decided to ask the Albert L. Jantzen, another former China worker, to investigate the possibility of opening a school for the Hopi children and also to study the advisability of employing a nurse or a teacher or both.

Montana

The Board accepted the changes of the constitution of the Montana Mission. Hereafter there will be an executive committee instead of a superintendent of the field. Complying with the request of Alfred Habegger to have a member of the Board at the dedication services for the Petter Memorial Church, P. A. Wedel will represent the Board at the Lame Deer Church dedication, June 11, 1950.

Oklahoma

Several members of the Board, appointed to look after the work in Oklahoma, presented plans for the building of the Arapahoe Church at Canton resulting in the motion that the plans recommended, be accepted and the church be erected as soon as possible. There is a possibility of securing a certain church for material for building a church at Clinton. This was referred to the Oklahoma Committee encouraging them to plan for the building of the Clinton Church as soon as possible.

The Board then decided that the auto allowance for American Indian Missionaries be restudied.

COLUMBIA: Three Voluntary Service Workers

The Voluntary Service Committee reported that three young people—Ellen Harder, Erna Friesen and Reneta Dyck—were ready to go to Colombia, South America for several months this summer.

Kreider to European Missions Conference

A. E. Kreider presented the matter of having a European Mennonite Conference to consider M. C. C. interests and missions in Java. Orie Miller of M.C.C. had expressed a desire for General Conference representation and also the wish that the General Conference assume an interest in the spiritual work in Austria. The Board asked A. E. Kreider to represent it at the European Conference which will be held this summer but before the General Conference session.

The Board approved the revised draft of Certificate of Participation for Missionaries in the Pension Plan.

As a result of a motion that a Committee be appointed to look after all matters pertaining to the Mission Board interests at the General Conference. D. J. Unruh, Phil A. Wedel and Howard G. Nyce were appointed.

Organize Mission Records

For some time Harold Ratzlaff had been filing the Foreign Mission material at the Headquarters Building. The Board passed a motion that S. J. Goering be responsible for having this work continued and completed.

The Board granted a release to John Thiessen, missionary on furlough from India; so that he could accept the pastorate of the Henderson, Nebraska, church for nine months.

A number of requests have been coming in to the Publication Board as well as to the Board for recent pictures of all missionaries. Bennie Bargen has been working on this and suggested a plan to the Board. The Board favors that the Promotion Committee of the Board study and act on the suggestions as outlined by Brother Bargen's letters.

New Canadian Treasurer

The Board decided to follow the custom of other boards and have a Board member serve as treasurer of the Canadian funds for Foreign Missions.

The devotional periods during these Board meetings were assigned to the different members of the Board with the Chairman, A. E. Kreider in charge of the first.

We covet the prayers of the members of our Conference for the great work entrusted to the Board of Foreign Missions.

LEADERSHIP SCHOOL DRAWS 181

God answered our prayers in a way that one hundred eighty-one of our members from sixteen different church schools of the Eastern District Conference attended the classes of the leadership training school held recently and sponsored by the Sunday School Union of the Eastern District Conference. The classes for the school were held in the Souderton Church, Souderton, Pennsylvania, and people came from a radius of thirty miles for each session. The classes most in demand were "Understanding the Child" and "Working with Young People."

Before the school started and during the committee work, much praying had been done for the welfare of our Sunday schools and for the success of leadership school itself.

It is too early to say just what has been accomplished. But already they are asking for another school for next year. During the chapel period between classes, A. S. Rosenberger, dean of the school, had charge of the service and called upon various ministers to lead the service on different nights. John Thiessen of India was there on one evening showing pictures after the school.—Reported by George Scheifele, President of the Eastern District Sunday School Union —Gospel Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: On May 28 baptismal services were held; four were baptized and two new members were received into the church by letter. In the afternoon dedication services were held for the recently remodeled church. Pastor John P. Suderman officiated. Flowers for the occasion were donated by the various business concerns. Lunch was served to all. H. D. Burkholder, Omaha, Nebraska, gave the dedicatory message, his thoughts based on Isaiah 28:16, on the topic, "Sure Foundation."—Corr.

Jottings

NORTHERN DISTRICT

—Bethany Church, Freeman, South Dakota: May 28 our church had baptismal services and reception of new members. For some time now our church has held the morning worship services before Sunday school. If it proves satisfactory, it will be kept that way. Summer Bible school is in progress at the present time.—Corr.

UNDER ORDERS

William Dahlenburg, now serving among the American Indians in Frazer, Montana, and Frank Ewert, graduate of Grace Bible Institute, will be ordained in services at the Friedensburg Church, Avon, South Dakota, in all day services Sunday, June 18, 1950. We covet your prayers.—Ed Duerksen, Pastor.

PACIFIC DICTRICT

—Menno Church, Lind, Washington: A ground breaking ceremony was held after the church services on May 14 at the site of our new church building. Construction is under way. The Men's Brotherhood did the excavation work. The pumice block church is designed in the shape of an L, one wing containing the main auditorium with a seating capacity of 400, and the other wing containing educational rooms. The site of our new church is about 2,000 feet south of the present 41-year-old wooden frame building. Leon Gering donated a three acre tract for the site where underground wire already has been laid and a 256 foot well has been drilled. The three Eastern Washington churches completed the pulpit-exchange. The first of these was on April 30 with P. D. Unruh at our church, W. Wiebe at Newport, and R. Schmidt at Colfax. May 21 Schmidt was at our church, Unruh at Newport, and Wiebe at Colfax.—Mrs. C. C. Claassen, Corr.

EASTERN DISTRICT

—Bethel Church, Lancaster, Pennsylvania: The Abe Wiebes our pastor and wife have a new son, Lloyd Philip, who arrived on Thursday, April 27.

Hereford Church, Bally Pennsylvania: James Knoel, Akron, and Miss Elsie Weber, Akron, Pennsylvania, were married in our church on Friday evening, May 26. Our minister W. S. Shelly officiated.—Mae Latshaw, Cor.

—West Swamp Church, Quakertown, Pennsylvania A new slide and film projector has been purchased for the church by the Live-Wire class of young men and the Never-Idle class of young women. The mother-daughter program and social evening was held May 13. Mrs. J. Herbert Fretz spoke on the subject, "The Mother I Plan To Be," which was followed by a candle-light service. A library for children was started by the Sunday school. The summar Bible school will again use the General Conference material. Mrs. William Sell will serve as superintendent. The marriage of Clara Ann Bauman and Stanley Stauffer took place June 11.—Corr.

MIDDLE DISTRICT

—First Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: A large group enjoyed the mother-daughter banquet, the speaker being Mrs. Ralph Krabill of Creston, who spoke on her work with the migrants. The services on Pentecost Sunday were well attended. The class of nine young people was baptized and joined in church membership; four adults were also taken in, making a total of twenty-three added, including the ten on Good Friday. Wayne Brubaker and Delores Duckworth were married Sunday, May 21.—Geo. McBride, Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Gerhard Schmidt (staying at the George Gerber farm) and Hans Schneider (staying at the Milton Falb farm) are two agriculture trainees from Germany in this community directed by the M. C. C. program of bringing European youths to get training on Mennonite farms. Our minister, Irvin Richert, spoke to thirty-nine graduates at the local baccalaureate services, Sunday evening, May 21. Kathleen Lehman and Wallace Gerber from our church are among this year's high school graduates. The mother-daughter all-day social held at the church May 24 with a bountiful picnic dinner attracted a large number. Quilting was in progress part of the day. The program centered around the great importance of God-fearing, praying mothers and daughters as presented in devotions, recitations, reading, and pantomine. A baby son, Robert Michael, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilmer Baer May 18. Judy Elaine, now almost a year old, was adopted by the Roy Kirchhofers. Sharon Mae, thirteen-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Badertscher, former members of our church, was laid to rest in our cemetery May 20.—Mrs. Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

WESTERN DISTRICT CHURCHES NOTE!

Contributions for the Home Mission work of the Western District Conference have been insufficient to meet the need. In view of the fact that allowances for workers are not too large to begin with, such amounts should be sent to them promptly at the end of the month, but it is impossible to do so at the present. Undoubtedly, churches want to know of such a situation. Let us pray about this matter and give as God directs.—P. T. Neufeld, Treas., Home Mission Committee.

Into the Beyond

MRS. EMELINE (FRETZ) DETWILER, Souderton, Pennsylvania, aged 92 years, 5 months, and 7 days, the oldest member of Zion Mennonite Church, Souderton, and a teacher in the Primary Department of the Sunday School for 46 years, passed away a few hours after being hit by a car while going to Sunday school, May 21. She was the step-mother of Harry Detweiler, chairman of the Mutual Aid Board.

MRS. J. J. SCHULTZ, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, a member of the Gospel Church, Mountain Lake, passed away suddenly May 26, 1950.

JOHN A. ALBRECHT, Marion, South Dakota, born September 3, 1869, a member of the Salem-Zion Church, Marion, died May 14, 1950.

CALVIN LUGINBUHL, Bluffton, Ohio, born March 12, 1884, a member of the Ebenezer Church, Bluffton, died May 16, 1950.

ERNEST W. CLAASSEN, Paso Robles, California, born September 16, 1919, a member of Second Church, Paso Robles, died May 20, 1950.

MRS. JOHN K. REGIER, nee Anna Unruh Buhler, Kansas, housewife, born January 15, 1855, in the village Nikolaidorf in South Russia, a member of the Buhler Church, died May 22, 1950, at the age of 95 years. She was the mother of P. K. Regier, executive secretary of General Conference.

MAY S. WOLLMANN HOFER, Freeman, South Dakota, born March 13, 1906, a member of Bethany Church, Freeman, died May 25, 1950.

SEMINARY GRADUATES INTO SERVICE

PRESIDENT Conrad Bergendoff of Augustana Theological Seminary, Rock Island, Illinois, delivered a strong message at the concluding events of our school year here Sunday night. A member of the Augustana Lutheran Synod, Bergendoff stressed the fact that we cannot attempt to meet the many challenging problems of our time if we have not first established a personal relationship with Jesus Christ as Lord and Saviour. He urged the members of the class to start their work at the point of personal religious experience, and then go on from there to make the gospel a living, meaningful message and way of life for our day.

Students have now gone to various parts of the country, some to return next fall and our graduates to start their work in various assignments. Of the senior class, Henry Grimm is pastor of the First Church, Summerfield, Illinois; Orlin Frey has been elected pastor of the Goessel Church, Goessel, Kansas; Ronald von Riesen will continue his work as executive secretary of the Board of Education, but will move his office to Newton, July 1; Marvin Dirks continues as a faculty member of the Seminary; Erna Friesen leaves soon by air for the General Conference Voluntary Service Unit in Colombia, South America; Marie Kroeker will work with the General Conference Board of Education this summer and next fall will start her work as teacher in the Mennonite Bible Academy of Beatrice, Nebraska; Sara Mae Wiens has not yet announced her placement for next year; Erwin Goering continues his services at Bethel College; and Missionary Harold Ratzlaff will remain in this country for the General Conference and then return for a second term of service in India.

FREEMAN APPOINTS NEW FACULTY MEMBERS

NEW faculty members appointed to the staff of Freeman Junior College are: Marvin Dyck, graduate of Bethel College and receiving a master's degree from Kansas University this spring, will teach biology and chemistry; Gertrude Hohmann Dyck, wife of Marvin Dyck, also graduate of Bethel and expecting a master's degree from Northwestern University this summer, will assist in the voice department; Walter Jost, graduate of Bethel College and holding a master's degree from Wichita University, will teach private voice, piano, and instruments, and direct academy music activities and a school orchestra; Martha Fast, Bethel graduate with eight years teaching in Kansas public schools, will teach home economics, academy girls' physical education, and act as resident counselor in the college girls' dormitory; Harold Hartman, graduate of Bluffton College, will teach college and academy mathematics, junior business, and manage the college farm; and, David Wollmann, graduate of Augustana College, will teach physical education and be the coach.

—Zion Church, Donnellson, Iowa: On Pentecost Sunday, May 28, we were happy to have John Boehr and family, who were on their way to Bluffton College to attend the commencement exercises, stop at Donnellson and attend the morning worship and communion services with us. He served us with an inspiring message. June 1 to 4 the Young People's Retreat of the Iowa Mennonite Churches was held at Camp Arrowhead near Ottumwa, Iowa. On Sunday, June 4, our annual get-together picnic was held at the same place.—A. D. Krehbill, Corr.

WESTERN DISTRICT

—Tabor Church, Newton, Kansas: On Ascension Day the boys and girls of the community again presented a public program following three weeks of daily vacation Bible school. These classes were held in the church basement with fifty-four pupils enrolled, Mrs. Marie Funk, Mrs. Vic Funk, and Ray Frey were the teachers. Our pastor H. B. Schmidt and Mrs. Schmidt had the privilege of celebrating their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary on May 21.—Mrs. Raymond S. Schmidt, Corr.

—Bergtal Church, Pawnee Rock, Kansas: The Freeman Junior College choir presented a fine program the evening of May 4. The tornado that swept through this territory destroyed our old stone church near Dundee which was about 76 years old. It had been repaired and redecorated a few days before in preparation for our anniversary celebration on May 21. Funeral services for Lt. Victor Unruh who was killed in action over Germany in 1944, were held May 5 with Pastor John E. Kaufman officiating. Nine children were consecrated on Mother's Day. Peter Dyck, a physician of South America, was in our midst May 15 on his way back to South America from Canada where he saw his mother before her passing away and attended her funeral. On May 21 our church celebrated the 76th anniversary of the organization and beginning of the church. Henry Hege brought the anniversary sermon and J. W. Fretz the address, "The Hidden Treasure." Six charter members were present. Oldest item on display was a 351 year old handbound Bible from which the first sermon in this community was preached.—Mrs. John K. Friesen, Corr.

—First Church, Burns, Kansas: On Pentecost five individuals were baptized and taken into the church. We observed Holy Communion on June 4. Our midweek Bible study and men's chorus have closed for the summer months. On Mother's Day we had children's consecration. There were eight families participating in the service. Summer Bible school is in progress jointly with our local Methodist Church.—Mrs. Dave Stucky, Corr.

—Deer Creek Church, Deer Creek, Oklahoma: The men's chorus from Pretty Prairie, Kansas, gave a musical program here recently. Summer Bible school was held from May 22 to 27. The children were divided into five classes ranging from three years to the eighth grade. The teachers were Pastor Richard Ratzlaff, Mrs. Harold Bechtel, Mrs. Waldo Krehbiel, Miss Gladys Dester, and Miss Florine Hohman.—Mrs. Allen Moyer, Corr.

Bethel Hospital Issue

Bethel Life . . .

by Elaine Stewart

BRR-RING-G-G! Fire alarm? No, it is just a score or more alarm clocks up and down the halls of Sarepta Nurses' Home, announcing the arrival of a new day. Several pairs of heads raise sleepily from their pillows, wondering what the day will bring forth—some muttering vaguely about the injustice of the man who invented alarms to go off so early in the morning.

It is not long until a line of girls, still in a daze of sleep, moves mechanically to the dining hall. But wait—is that food I smell? Strangely a little life begins to appear in the group until finally they are chattering like magpies as they enjoy the food placed before them. Then, their voices lift together in a song of thanksgiving and a prayer to God for strength and knowledge to face the tasks ahead. Yes, this is the beginning of a day at Bethel.

What happens next? you ask. Oh, that is really very simple—or rather, we often wish it were simpler! The large group soon separates, each person going to her own special place of duty. There are baths to give, doctors to assist, meals to cook, and myriads problems to face and solve, each more difficult than the other.

The rustle of starched uniforms and hushed voices announces the arrival of the "day force" to the patients. Window shades are raised and the sunlight plays about the rooms as the various good mornings are said. Then, wash pans and soap are whisked out—and the work has begun.

After a good scrubbing, and all the other care is completed, the patients are ready for the daily visit of the doctor. This is one of the high lights of the day, and the student nurse is often in suspense, wondering if she will be asked to perform some difficult task in his presence.

It is not long until a faint aroma of food suggests that dinner time has arrived. This means more rushing than ever, until each patient is happily situated with a tantalizing tray of food before him. Then, what could be more fitting than a long nap? Doors are quietly closed and while the nurse goes to eat her dinner and relax, the patients catch their "forty winks" of sleep.

Bethel is full of traditions, outstanding little things that set it apart from other institutions in the world. Things such as zwieback on Saturday night, and singing on the floors on Sunday morning. Not the least of these customs is the quiet time for devotions each day. This is the time when the patient-and-nurse relationship ceases and they stand as one, united together in their worship of God. It may be only a bit of comforting Scripture and a prayer the nurse offers, or again, she may choose some poetry that gives strength and encouragement to the weary soul. Whatever it is, there are shy "thank yous" and often a few tears as the prayer closes. Yes, in this time more than any other, the nurse learns to understand and appreciate her patient.

Bethel Deaconess Hospital, Newton, Kansas opened its doors in 1908. Pictured above is the main entrance and the original building. It now has a clinic, a nurses home, a deaconess home, a home for the aged. This summer construction is beginning on the Sister Frieda Memorial Chapel and an addition to the home for the aged.

Just as all things end, so the days at Bethel come to a close. It was a good day, and as our thoughts wander back over its events, our hearts again lift in Prayer to our Father. It was done for Thee, Lord. Forgive where I have failed—and Father, watch over my patients, and bless them every one.

. . . Through the Eyes of a Probie

by Ella Voth

WHEN do we get our caps?" "OOh, it scares me." "Do we have to practice on our roommates?" "Isn't this Nursing History enough to keep one hopping?" These and many other questions were typical "probie" questions. Impressions of the new probies upon arrival in the quarters of the nursing school were deep and varied. First of all, they had to find themselves in the maze of business and superior upper classmen. Then to learn the "do's and don'ts—"Don't visit in others' rooms during study hours," and on and on. And those studious probies! Nursing History, Nursing Arts, Pharmacology—no end to books and classes, seemingly. Standing in awe of those wonderful people, upper classmen, the probies listened with big ears and shy questions. Tours through the dormitories and hospital helped to acquaint them with a wonderful, mysterious place. And so many names and faces to learn! One's own name was repeated over and over, too. And a "pilly" initiation didn't help to initiate them into the real thing, but by the performance of a "major operation" and the wearing of green probie caps, the now "humble probies satisfied the whims of upper classmen.

A Nurse's Prayer

ECAUSE the day that stretches out fore me
Is full of busy hours, I come to Thee
To ask Thee, Lord, that Thou wilt see me through
The many things that I may have to do.
Help me to make my beds the smoothest way.
Help me to make more tempting every tray.
Help me to sense when pain must have relief.
Help me to deal with those borne down by grief.
Help me to take to every patient's room
The Light of Life to brighten up the gloom.
Help me to bring to every soul in fear
The sure and steadfast thought that Thou art near.
And if today, or if tonight, maybe,
Some patients in my care set out to sea
To face the great adventure we call death,
Sustain them, Father, in their parting breath.
Help me to give throughout this livelong day
As one who loved Thee well, Dear Lord, I pray.
And when the day is done, and evening stars
Shine through the dark above the sunset bars,
When weary, quiet, I turn to seek my rest,
Lord, may I truly know I've done my best.

—Anonymous

As all probies, however, these also managed to struggle through bed-making class, history exam, needle injection class and emerge triumphant. The first day on floor duty was a great day, even though mistakes were made. The thrill of meeting people and serving them is one impression that will long remain with the probies as the seriousness of being a nurse was impressed upon the new students.

Other impressions and experiences were the lot of the probies. Knitting, crocheting, mending, pleasant talk and music—these became quickly associated with the Wednesday night social hour. Programs are also presented during this hour, and then there is gay laughter echoing from the North Room. Soon the probies became conscious of class distinction and class lines. Those of one's own class are one's buddies, those with whom one feels most at home. So class meetings were begun, and parties planned. A social function the probies have found enjoyable are the mealtimes—times when gaiety, small talk, and family letters hold sway. And of course, the fun of our own dorm kitchen makes numerous opportunities for fellowship to function at its best. And going to the outside for plays, concerts, church, and special programs is an experience seldom to be missed.

Capping becomes foremost in the probies' minds for then —after this most important ceremony—they will be full-fledged student nurses.

Another lasting impression is the musical atmosphere found at this training school. Devotions at the table morning and evening with its music is a bright spot in the day. Saturday night Bible class helps one to prepare the S. S. lesson more fully, as well as providing for group Bible study. In any work with people, Christians endeavor to bring them into contact with the Saviour, and in this phase of nursing, the probies too have found rewarding experiences as they have daily devotions with those they care for—for "to be a nurse is to walk with God."[1] What more could be desired?

. . . Through the Eyes of a Junior Nurse

by Ruby Unruh

ALMOST immediately after we received our caps and at last did not consider ourselves "little probies" any more, we found ourselves in a round of special services. What are the special services? They are the diet kitchen, operating room, laboratory, obstetrics with first tastes of night duty, and emergency call. The kitchen affords opportunities to learn to plan menus, calculate diets, and cook the special diets. One gets so used to weighing foods and servings that finally you catch yourself automatically calculating the weight of your own meals in grams and mentally dividing them into proteins, carbohydrates, and fats.

In the operating room there is an array of gleaming instruments with which to get acquainted, techniques to learn, methods and habits to acquire, and gloves to sterilize. There are night emergencies when one must rush over to the operating room and, in a minimum of time, the doctor is doing a lifesaving operation and he needs your assistance. Shall I give him the scalpel or will he want a clamp? Let's see whatever is the name of the odd-looking retractor. Will he want wire or silk for sewing next? Then all too soon eight weeks of surgery are up and we find ourselves in the laboratory. For two weeks we are surrounded by a variety of tests and procedures and we somehow pick up a fundamental knowledge of human bodies and their intricate workings and the various methods by which these functions are tested. During this period we are also responsible for the emergency room and are often called on duty to help with any emergency that might arise.

We cannot forget to mention our class work. Surely something that requires so much of our time cannot be of minor importance. Diet Therapy, Medical Diseases, Surgical Nursing, Nursing Arts, Drugs and Solutions, Operating Room Technique, Charting, Massage, Bandaging, and Bible are only some of the classes we have had. However, we realize, when we hear older students talk, that there is still quite a lot more book learning to be done.

We also have our entertainment. Wednesday evening social hour and Saturday evening Bible Class, special programs, hiking, playing, picnics, parties, and singing all play a part in claiming our leisure time. Sometimes we wish we could do without sleep for it seems such a waste of time. Altogether it is a busy and active life—and how we love it!

A thrill for the new nurse comes on the day of the capping exercise. It is the first milestone in the nurse's training.

. . . As an Intermediate Sees It

by A. Boehr

ALTHOUGH there seems to be no definite time or date a student nurse considers herself as passing from a Junior to an Intermediate, yet you are conscious of a unique change of type in your work and responsibilities. By this time you have witnessed the entrance and orientation of two new classes and have lived over again with them your first few exciting days in the nurses' home. You are a source of information; for by this time you know your way about the hospital, the garden, the laundry, the dormitory and its rules; and the town (if you have taken time to do so). You have a bit more confidence than when you first crossed the threshold of your new abode or were initially crowned with the cap of the school. The events that take place about the hospital don't appear as exciting and new as before. This is the middle of your period of training and perhaps time goes more slowly. If you had not been able to find just the suitable time for a class meeting or party before, you would be very skillful at maneuvering if you could gather half the class together during this period. Each one seems to work a different shift and roommates see each other only at class time. When class is over, some return to bed, others begin work on the floor, some gather spontaneously for fellowship, while still more must practice for a program or snatch "40 winks" of beauty sleep out of a full schedule.

This is the time your "big sisters" leave you for affiliation and at first you feel "shoved out on your own," with a heavy weight of responsibilities you feel too inadequate to bear. It is then you begin to realize there are more personalities with which to become better acquainted and your world of friends widens out into a beautifully patterned circle. It seems that during this time you feel more challenged to do your very best than ever before. More and more you are gaining new knowledge and experience and more and more you feel inadequate and, at times, frightened as you realize all the complicated "exactities" involved in the nursing profession.

Perhaps the highlight of this year is the four months you spend on the obstetrical floor. A separate unit of its own in the hospital, it is here you are happy for the gains of both new and veteran parents and deeply saddened at their losses. Domestic training is at its peak—diapering and feeding babies, and other routine hospital tasks as bathing, arranging flowers, keeping rooms in order, etc. Your ability as a teacher is put into play as you attempt to instruct the new mother in the care of her own body as well as that of her baby's. Then as the day of departure arrives and you escort the little family to the car, you wish you could go along to watch what the father does when he is first entrusted with the care of his new offspring, how the mother carries out her routine of care, and how the baby grows and develops in his new world.

All this, along with the rest of what goes into training is a challenge to keep healthy in mind, spirit, and body for those you serve. This is the joy of nursing. This is the busy happy life.

St. Louis: Psychiatric Nursing

by Martha Thimm

INASMUCH as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." With these words giving us strength and courage, we entered our three months of psychiatric work at the Bliss Mental Hospital in the southern part of St. Louis. Since then each day has been filled with new, varied, and interesting experiences, causing us to realize that mental illness is really a disease—something that can happen to any of us. As we listen to our class lectures, we daily see where each of us has normal tendencies toward these diseases, and how grateful we should be for having been brought up in the quiet and peaceful country farm or in a small town under the influence of Christian parents. For mental illness does not result alone from sin, but environment seems to play a large part as well as the conflicts that many individuals have been unable to meet and adjust to.

Contrary to public opinion, there is every opportunity for Christian service here. Although we are not permitted to have daily devotions with our patients as we do at home ,there is one way in which we can serve and that is by giving kind and thoughtful care to our patients. Also, we may take part in the nurses' choir which sings at the Sunday morning Protestant Chapel Services for patients. For our own spiritual enrichment, the Hospital Chaplain sponsors weekly vesper services in thee nurses home.

Often our thoughts go back to Bethel. For instance, when we open the linen closet at Bliss we see half empty shelves and are reminded of the ample supply of bright, neatly folded and clean smelling Bethel linen. It also makes us realize the value of training in a small hospital, for in such a situation we feed that we are better equipped to give our patients more individual care. On the other hand, there is a tendency toward living a sheltered life at Bethel while living in a large city brings us face to face with temptation and challenges us to make decisions upon the basis of our own convictions.

The greatest joy of anyone who works with these people is to see them released and again able to take their stand in the social world. As we go back to our home schools, we hope to be better equipped to see the mental needs of our patients as well as the physical and thus be prepared to serve humanity better.

Kansas City: Pediatric Nursing

by Virginia Schowalter

SEVEN weeks ago we six Bethelites arrived safely in Kansas City. The baggage we carried was of two kinds—suitcases and stories. The suitcases contained everything from fountains pens to uniforms, and the stories were the "tall Tales" everyone at Bethel had told us about affiliation. By the time we actually got here we did not know whether to laugh or cry. The Union Station seemed cold and unfriendly as did the nurses' home until Tinka, the dog, quit barking at us.

We have learned to like the work here and almost hate to think of leaving. Mercy Hospital admits only children under sixteen years of age and is entirely a charitable institution. It was founded "for sick and crippled children to be forever non-sectarian, non-local and for those who cannot pay." Come to Mercy Hospital with me and meet a few of our little friends. This is Wilbur—a darkeyed little six year old who neither speaks nor hears. His face beams with enthusiasm and delight when he is playing with his dolls; however, when he becomes frightened or unable to understand what he is to do, he literally winds himself about the rails of his bed. In the nursery we find little Baby Boy Covey. As yet we have not heard his first name for he came to us as a tiny premature baby. Every three hours he is fed and made comfortable in his little incubator. The rest of the time he just sleeps and sleeps. These are but two of the one hundred fifty patients we serve daily.

. . . Through the Eyes of a Senior

by Mary Richert

THREE years ago we began training, June 1950, and graduation seemed ages away, but now we find ourselves wondering where the time has gone. The old saying, "Time goes fast when one is busy" certainly proves true.

After two months of intensive preliminary studying we were gradually introduced to nursing procedures. We well know how our patients feel because we learned the nursing procedures by practicing them on each other. Sometimes these practice procedures were humorous and made quite an impression on us. There was the time we were learning how to feed patients who were unable to feed themselves. In the process one girl dropped apple sauce all over her roommate's chin. Also, there is the time we learned to give hypos. Again roommates had to suffer for each other's ignorance. Most of the girls had to stick each other three or four times before they got the sterile water given. Then part of the girls went to their rooms and cried as though their hearts would break. One of the girls recently stated, "I was nearer quitting training then than at any other time." Strangely enough it was much easier giving hypos to our patients because we knew they needed them.

During my training days I have learned to love and understand people as never before. As a rule patients are very appreciative, and we have found in them lovely friends.

We have experienced rich blessings while having devotions with our patients. We have seen suffering draw many families closer to each other and closer to the "Great Physician." We have grieved with those who have lost loved ones, and we have rejoiced with those who have welcomed the arrival of little ones into their homes.

Yes, as we review our three years of training, we feel they have been well spent. Three years packed with hard work, new experiences, enriching lessons in understanding and love, and fun.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS. The Mid-Century convention of the Northern Baptist Convention was held May 22-26, 1950, in Boston. The Stewardship Address on Tuesday evening was presented by Harold Stassen. The Convention at Worship was in charge of Theodore F. Adams. Congressman Walter H. Judd also addressed the conference.

THE FIVE ASHRAMS will be conducted this year by the Department of Evangelism under the supervision of Dr. H. H. McConnell. Built around a specific Christian concept—"the Word became flesh"—the Ashrams, since they were introduced in 1940, have grown steadily in numbers and influence.

The places and dates of the Ashrams are as follows: Bridgewater College, Bridgewater, Va., July 10-20; Northern Baptist Assembly Grounds, Green Lake, Wisc., July 22-29; Keuka College, Keuka Park, N. Y., July 31-August 7; Mount Wesley Encampment, Kerrville, Texas. August 9-16; Camp Sierra, Calif., August 18-28.

CHICAGO—For what may be the first time in history, a stirring revival is sweeping a city of Catholic-dominated Portugal. In one week, 332 people— all Catholics—came forward for salvation in the Marinha Grande Baptist Church, Portugal.

Each night since January 1 when the service began, more than 700 people have jammed the church, with hundreds of others turned away for lack of room. No invitation was given during the first three weeks. On the 22nd day of the meetings, a simple invitation was given, and 182 people came to the front to accept Christ.—Protestant Voice

SCOTTDALE, Pa.—Total sales of the Mennonite Publishing House during the past year amounted to $810,027, it was reported to the Mennonite Publication Board here. The sum represented an increase of 39 per cent over the previous year.—Protestant Voice.

BERLIN — Increasing activities against the Jehovah's Witnesses sect are reported from throughout the Soviet Zone of Germany.

In Potsdam the homes of Jehovah's Witnesses preachers were recently searched by Eastern Zone "people's police." Theological books, religious publications and hymnbooks were confiscated on the ground that they were not licensed in the Soviet Zone. —Protestant Voice

NEW YORK—J. M. O'Neil, head of the Department of Speech at Brooklyn College, predicts that the U.S. Supreme Court decision barring religious teaching in public schools will be reversed. If the Court itself does not reverse its opinion, he said, Congress will be forced to intervene. "There is no basis for the decision except the private opinion of the jurists. It has been criticized by practically every authority on constitutional law. I don't see how it can stand."—Gospel Herald

Book Notes . . . . ENJOY THE POETRY OF THE BIBLE

POETRY OF THE OLD TESTAMENT, by Sanford Calvin Yoder, Scottdale, Pennsylvania: Mennonite Publishing House, 1948. 426 pp. $4.50.

THE expressed objective of this volume is ". . . that a better understanding of the poetical books and selections of the Bible in its most lyrical translations, the King James Version, will result from this small effort to point out and bring before the reader this material in its proper form." To implement this purpose Yoder has searched out all the poetic sections of the Old Testament outside of the Prophets—the poetic portions of the Pentateuch and the historical books as well as Job, Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Song of Solomon, and Lamentations. He has removed them from their context, eliminating the versification and verse numbers of the usual versions, and has set up the material in poetic form. Thus almost four-fifths of the book is the reprinting of the text of the poetical portions of the Old Testament in a form that makes it possible for the student to make a completely fresh approach to this portion of the Scripture. To the average student of the Bible, it will be a new experience to read these portions in a form like any other poetry without the usually interrupting chapter headings, verse and marginal comments, or even the two-column-to-the-page style of the usual Bible.

The rest of the book, something over 70 of the 426 pages, is devoted to a general introduction dealing with the people and the land that produced the poetry, the language in which it is produced, the structure and unique characteristic of Hebrew poetry, and brief introductions to each group of poems or books of poetry.

One is impressed with the spirit of this portion as the writer moves among difficult problems of interpretation and authorship and deals with questions that have been vigorously argued in the past. He sets forth quite dispassionately what to him seems most feasible. Those who want an unquestioned "thus saith the Lord" on matters of interpretation and authorship will probably not find this to their liking. However, Yoder is not inclined to accept the findings of recent criticism and in that he is not out of line when one considers the changes that are taking place in the field of Old Testament in the direction of the re-affirmation of many of the older positions.

Being the able work of a careful teacher who is reporting and interpreting the work of the scholars, this book will have its major value as a guide for students who are being being introduced to this field of biblical literature. For the layman who has been diligent enough in his study of the whole Bible so as not to overlook these poetical books, this volume will surely open a new vista.—J.J.E.

RECEDING HORIZONS

As the seventy-fifth anniversary year draws to a close, so also the supply of the memorial booklet, From The Steppes To The Prairies, is being sold out. The number remaining is becoming smaller and smaller and very shortly, those who may still wish to buy a copy will find it difficult to secure them.

So here is a suggestion: While there is yet time, place your order and forward it immediately to one of your Conference book stores—Rosthern, Newton, or Berne, Indiana.

Editorials

IN THE QUESTION and answer department of a widely circulated Christian magazine a question was raised, "Why are there no tracts on the Ten Commandments?" After elaborating to some extent on the point that there is nothing "gospel" about the law, that the law "kills," and that there would be no point in putting out such material that would have no appeal to people, the writer finally came around, in his last sentence, to the observation that the only conceivable value he could see in tracts on the law would be in helping people to see their need of a Saviour! One is veritably amazed at the way Bible-believing Christians can treat the law so lightly. Let it be clearly stated that we are making no case for salvation through the keeping of the law. It is our conviction that man is saved by grace through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. But the word "saved" has no meaning without the knowledge of the law. If the gospel is to shine forth in all its saving fulness in our day, there must be presented the whole will of God for people and for the world. Otherwise people will either turn away from a so-called gospel which does not come to grips with right and wrong or they will embrace this half-gospel and continue in their sins making the church odious in the sight of the world.

The church must avoid two pitfalls. One is preaching salvation without repentance; the other is preaching repentance without salvation. Sinai and Calvary belong together. The law is the schoolmaster unto Christ. The law is the holiness of God revealing itself to show us that we are sinners and under the judgment of God. We have alienated ourselves from fellowship with God by our evil and our sins. Calvary exposes the love of God that makes available the reconciliation of sinful man through the grace and mercy of God. Yet there is something artificial about dividing the two in the above fashion. For the love and grace of God is too inescapable at Sinai where God despite man's rebellion continues to woo man by showing him his need. And there is a kind of judgment at Calvary quite unequaled at Sinai that is terrifying to those who having tasted the goodness of God yet, turning away, crucify the son of God afresh—the terror of having deliberately turned their back on the extended saving hand of God. Judgment and mercy are of the essence of both Sinai and Calvary. Therefore our gospel must present the love of God in such a way that it will lead to an open and permanent break with all sin and present the law of God in such a way that it will lead to an enduring, saving experience with Jesus Christ.

ORDINARILY WE THINK of the tragedy of divorce very largely in terms of a precious relationship broken between husband and wife and between children and their God-ordained home. Life has few tragedies greater than this. There is, however, another tragedy connected with divorce. In any marriage there is not only a welding together of two lives. There is also a welding together of two whole family relationships by the power of love. If the bond of marriage is broken, then the bond between two whole groups in society are broken. Now the very essence of the Kingdom of God is the relating of lives filled with the love of God to one another in order that together they may glorify God. Divorce, then, is not only the breaking up of a family; it is the battering down of God's own building.

WE HAVE JUST finished reading the story of a church whose fellowship has been ruined. For two generations, it had gone along in happy Christian fellowship. Then came a young pastor filled with zeal for his partisan opinions. The church ultimately was divided into two fragments. Its former unity under the Lordship of Christ was ruined. We need to understand that zeal can be both good and bad. Zeal is a quality or passion of the human mind whose real character must be determined by the objects on which it is employed and the principles by which it is directed. There is a true and a false zeal—differing as widely from each other as a heavenly flame from the infernal fire. The one is fervent, disinterested affection, expanding the heart; it delights to unite with the whole empire of God in the pursuit of his glory, which all may enjoy without envious rivalry. The other is a self-interested principle, contracting the heart and ready to sacrifice the good of mankind, and even the glory of God, to its own individual advantage. It crumbles the moral system into discordant atoms. It detaches members from their proper center, turning former friends into recriminating opponents. "This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish." (James 3:15). How much of that misguided heat that spends itself upon religious partisanship or would "call fire down from heaven" exposes its blind devotees to our Master's tender rebuke, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of!" Let every true defender of the faith do his utmost to get rid of this mistaken and frequently corrupting zeal. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Pure spiritual zeal is holiness in action. It stems from the fact that the Christian's life and disposition is wholly controlled by the Lord Jesus. When this is so, the fruit of God's Spirit will enrich all.—Watchman-Examiner.

From the Mission Front

Baal vs. Jehovah in Colombia

by Janet Soldner

EVERYTHING was set for a quiet, uneventful Sunday evening when LaVerne Rutschman, one of our missionaries brought a young father to my clinic. Ordinarily he would not have found me at home at seven o'clock on a Sunday evening since that is the time when we are on our way to our Anoclaima station for the evening service. However on this particular Sunday evening Irene Tanaka went to Anolaima instead of myself. The Lord who knows all things always directs in every way.

My Case and a Flashlight

The father told me about the serious condition of his thirteen-months-old baby. After listening to what he had to say my heart sank, since I was sure there was nothing more I could do. Then too, I hesitated a bit as he had already consulted three doctors. Nevertheless the man was very insistent that I go to see the child. He was still hopeful that something might be done to save the little life. Because of his look of confidence and entreating words I was unable to refuse. After hurriedly putting a few medicines into my case and with flashlight in hand I was ready for the half-hour walk on the cobble stone road to Cachipay.

Upon arriving at the home I found an anxious and nervous mother watching over her dear little one. Friends and neighbors were also greatly concerned for the child, so they too were there to help and give advice.

We found a very sick child and it was indeed difficult to give the parents much hope. The anxious parents were constantly asking, "Do you think he will live, is there still hope?" Naturally I could not make any promise except that the Lord can heal. It was a comfort to be able to turn them to the Great Physician who can heal all diseases.

Gladly we offered to get Dr. G—in whom the missionaries have placed a lot of confidence. But in order to get Dr. G—it was necessary to make a long distance telephone call to Anolaima and get in touch with Arthur Keiser who was in charge of the evening service there and tell him to go past the clinic with the truck to bring the doctor to Cachipay. Fortunately we had no trouble in telephoning and the doctor was willing to come. How different in comparison to the doctor which the father had asked in the morning to see the child and who had answered, "I'm not interested." How different from what our Lord did when he was asked to heal the sick. When Dr. G—arrived he immediately diagnosed the case. But since the child had aleady been sick for two weeks and had not been given the proper medications, he could make no promises.

The Priest Reprimanded

On the same Sunday afternoon the priest had been called in to perform the last unction. The priest reprimanded the family for having rented us a room in which to hold services. It was for that reason that the child was sick and God was punishing them for mingling with the Protestants.

We felt that this was a contest between Baal and Jehovah. Would the family believe that the priest was correct in saying that God was punishing them for renting a room to us? Would the town believe the same? We knew that the Lord could work a miracle if it was His will to do so. We prayed that the Lord would show the family who was the true God who answers prayer. God did answer our prayer. The child did get well. We praise Him for the healing of this little one. Also we are glad for the increased interest which the father of the child is showing in the gospel. The mother is hesitant but we trust that she too will come through.

MISSION VISUAL AID

"HAPPY Children of Cachipay" is a filmstrip produced by the American Leprosy Mission visualizing the work among the children of lepers at our mission station in Colombia. The filmstrip has sixty-six pictures from the mission station. The pictures are of good quality and the accompanying script is well-written and edited.

The filmstrip is unique in that it is an evaluation of that work from a non-Mennonite source. Besides this it makes clearer the fact that our work in Cachipay is supported in part by the American Leprosy Mission. It is available through the regional field secretaries of American Leprosy Mission and through the Branch offices. The main office is at 156 Fifth Avenue, Suite 1134, New York 10, New York.

A Call for Searching of Heart

by Charles C. Ellis

(The following is a pre-conference message by the moderator of the Church of the Brethren reprinted from the April 29 issue of the GOSPEL MESSENGER. The Church of the Brethren has their annual conference in early June.—Editor.)

THE amazing, appalling and unexpected situation in which we find our world just now, certainly calls for a sincere searching of heart on the part of every Christian.

The long-time delusion of inevitable progress through the marvelous discoveries of science and the ridicule of the Biblical prophecy of a catastrophic ending of our boasted civilization have given place to something very different. It is not necessary here to repeat the alarming statements of the very scientists who have been responsible for casting the dark shadow which hangs today over our world. In view of such frank statements, however, the wishful thinking of a few radio commentators is much like the whistling of the small boy to keep up his courage. Serious-minded men can no longer evade facing the facts, though they shatter opinions which they have long held.

Whatever the obligations of men in political life and however we react to their decisions, it is very clear that there is one supreme obligation resting upon all Christians, namely, to put themselves in such relation to God that they may be heard of him, and to learn what to ask for in this tragic hour.

Assuming that we know that if we regard iniquity in our hearts the Lord will not hear us and that unless we are concerned only for the will of God it is useless to pray, we may then inquire what form our petition may take.

Perhaps our first concern should be to ascertain the will of God. How many of our prayers miss the mark because we assume that we know the will of God, when a careful study of the Scriptures would reveal how far we are from knowing his will? It is so easy "to be wise above that which is written," that we would do well first to pause and obey the command to search the Scriptures. The wisest of men have long since conceded that in the Scriptures we have the only dependable revelation of the will of God. This we do well to remember, no matter what our attainment of human learning.

If Christians are to heed the often repeated admonition. "Fear not," while living in the midst of a world that is overwhelmed with "a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation which shall devour the adversaries," they must assuredly set their trust in the unfailing Word of the Lord, whose word endureth forever. They must know the promises of that Word and plead them in prayer. Can we come humbly enough to admit that we do not know what we should pray for as we ought? Can we come with the God-given wisdom that is willing to concede that since holy men of old spoke as they were moved by the Holy Spirit it is not a thing incredible that this same Spirit moves the minds of godly men to utter the words of divine revelation when they lift their hearts to God?

How then may we venture to pray in this crisis time of the human race? Would it be amiss to hold before the Lord the statement of his own Word that "the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof, the world and they that dwell therein," and plead his mercy upon his own creation, and his power (greater than any other in heaven or in earth) to stay, in his own way, the construction of all these weapons of destruction?

If the silver and the gold are his, and the cattle upon a thousand hills, should we not confess our sin of holding them in ownership instead of stewardship, and promise him greater faithfulness, not in the future, but at once? Must our missionaries feel impelled to give two tenths while we use God's money not for the necessities of life, but for worse than useless luxuries and pleasures?

Can we not join Abraham in the assurance that the judge of all the earth will do right, and implore him who came to destroy the works of the devil, to hold back from our world these demon-inspired destructions?

Very humbly, my brethren, do I submit these suggestions, in the assurance that as you search the Scriptures you will find the mind of Christ and the Father for this very hour. Lift your eyes from Washington and from Moscow and from the United Nations to the city of God, to him who is at the right hand of God interceding for us now. Let us cease from man whose breath is in his nostrils and humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God. This is an hour not for more conventions or for more uninspired talk. It is an hour to wait upon God and to pray without ceasing. It is an hour to correct our own lives and to believe and prove the Word that says: "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land." Perhaps the hour is here when we should pray more earnestly for the coming of our Lord.

Brazil Pastor Coming for Conference

PETER Klassen, Witmarsum, Cor. Pres, Getulio, Est. Sta. Catarina, Brazil, school teacher, Bible school leader and evangelist, will come to North America under the sponsorship of the Board of Home Missions, to attend the General Conference, Freeman, South Dakota, August 23-30.

For many years Klassen has served the two communities in Witmarsum and Curitaba, Brazil.

He has served in Paraguay as evangelist and Bible-school teacher on two occasions. The first trip was made in 1947 and the second in 1949. From Volendam, reports come that the Bible-school conducted by J. W. Nickel and Klassen was very successful. The school was conducted in two sections—the day and the night section. This arrangement was made to enable many young men who were busy during the day, to attend the night classes.

In the period following the close of school Klassen and J. W. Nickel conducted evangelistic meetings in the different villages of the Colony Neuland. Elder Hans Rempel reported that nearly fifty converts were bap-

by Aaron and Betty Epp

AS A partial fulfillment of the requirements of two of our courses in Seminary, we chose to make a study of the parsonage situation as it exists in our General Conference. Questionaires were sent to 240 churches of which 167 responded. Of these, 96 churches had parsonages and 71 churches did not. However, some of these questionnaires were returned too late, hence we were able to use only 152 reports from which we made our study. Each questionnaire offered opportunity for the pastor to make suggestions. We want to use these facts and suggestions as a basis of this summary.

In making this summary of the complete study we want to think in terms of churches already having parsonages, those considering the securing of a parsonage, and those who have bought a home to serve as their parsonage, having remodeling in mind.

The Size of the Parsonage

When building a parsonage the church should have in mind a long range view and not try to economize with the size of the building. Quite a few of the ministers expressed their desire for an extra room.

Out of 137 families, the average number of children was 2.8. The small average number of children per family may be due to the large turn-over of ministers in recent years, most of which have been young men coming out of school.

The average number of rooms in a parsonage, according to 89 reports was 7.5. The average number of bed rooms preferred by the ministers was 3.5. This latter figure might suggest that there be 4 bedrooms, one of which would serve as guest bedroom.

The pastor likes to entertain different groups or organizations of the church in his home. In order to do this in a gracious manner it is necessary that there be a large living room.

Pastors like to invite young people over for an evening of recreation, hence it would be helpful if the basement would be finished with this in mind. One church has its parsonage basement so arranged that small church meetings can be held there when roads are bad, since the church is located in the country.

The Minister's Study

Every church ought to consider seriously the minister's study room. It should have adequate facilities for his daily work, as well as for his mental and spiritual growth, thus making it possible for him to "wait upon the Lord." A number of ministers suggested that there be a separate entrance into the study or that the study be located so that visitors need not go through the whole house to see the pastor.

Very often the minister's wife must meet more obligations than the average woman in the community. Careful planning of the kitchen can do much to economize her time, thus giving her an opportunity to give more time to her church work.

A satisfactory heating system is essential, because of the minister's frequent absences from home. A suggestion given was that thermostat-controlled heating be installed wherever possible. It was surprising to note how many parsonages did not have satisfactory heating systems.

Of the 89 churches having parsonages, 4 are completely furnished, 28 partially (mostly heavy furniture —refrigerator, stove, piano, etc.), and 57 parsonages are entirely unfurnished. A number suggested that the parsonage be furnished with the heavier pieces of furniture.

Many Buy a Parsonage

The reports showed that many churches are not able to build new parsonages. Thus homes have been bought with the intention of remodeling them later on to suit the needs of the pastor. A danger revealed in this situation was that the remodeling might never take place. Several reported that their parsonage was too poor to remodel and recommended the building of a new one.

When homes are bought they are frequently quite incomplete. The following are some of the things to which a well chosen parsonage committee could look after: storage space, improved wiring, insulation, storm windows, new walks, paint, etc.

The Parsonage Committee

The parsonage committee seems to be one that, as yet, is not used in many churches. One reason may be that the value of a committee of this kind is not known. It should be the duty of this committee to make regular check-ups of the parsonage to see that it is kept up in all respects and that it will not appear "run down" within several years. It was suggested that the church make regular investigations rather than making them only between change of pastors. Forty-three ministers went on record as preferring a parsonage committee.

The survey reveals that there are parsonages in our conference which are in a poor condition, and that there are parsonages which are ideal. The house of the minister in many ways is a concern of the entire community. The people own it and often visit it. The house need not be a model, but it should be one upon which the people of the community can look with a certain amount of satisfaction.

We would recommend that any church interested in building or remodeling a parsonage write to the Seminary library for a loan copy of this study, and profit from experiences of many of our own churches. We would also recommend the securing of a copy of The Home of the Rural Pastor by Ralph A. Felton of Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, New Jersey. The latter made a thorough study of 1171 parsonages found in the rural churches of various denominations in America.

in American Protestantism, and that the denominations have been referred to as the "warring sects." But the situation is not as hopeless as it would appear on the surface. He contends that "Protestantism, worldwide, has reached essential unity on all the basic doctrines of the Christian faith. We are 'one in hope and doctrine' as we sing in a well known hymn."

The book is inspirational reading for the minister, full of fresh insights for the layman, and an answer to life's most perplexing problems for youth.—P. K. Regier

WHY ARE THEY STILL THERE?

"Our Only Hope Is America" Say D.P.'s

by Norma Jost

IT'S LIKE A fairytale . . . almost mythical . . . but soon you find yourself believing it with all your might. It's a land where the human driftwood of this last war may find a haven . . . where a man can earn his own bread after getting it through a bread line . . . where a man can buy clothing for his family after receiving it through bundle distribution . . . where later on he might even have a roof to call his own after living bunched and huddled with hundreds of others who share his same fate . . . a land where he can breathe clean, free air . . . the United States.

A great sadness comes over one as he walks through a DP camp . . . looking . . . thinking. Here is a little island of persons driven from their homes by fear. An island whose roots stretch back into Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Ukraine . . . and perhaps into Siberia where there may be others of their own who may be living or dead.

Through Barbed Wire

And here, behind walls or fence live thousands scattered throughout Western Germany. Here little children peer at you through barbed wire. Yonder sit a group of white-haired men basking in the warm spring sun and talking of the old days when they had their own oxen, plow or harrow. A group of women scrub clothes with a brush on a cement slab. An old lady hangs out amazingly white wash on a common line.

Skipping down a small walk, making a morning spaziergang, are the children from the kindergarten. Sixty bubbling with laughter, untainted yet by the cares of the others around them.

From Weeks Ago—the Smell of Cooked Cabbage

And than the big colorless buildings with some of the windows boarded shut. Outside some of the windows bits of wash hang to dry—a child's undershirt, an old pair of socks, a faded pair of khakis . . . the color of the building and the washing blending into one. In the next window sits a bottle of milk, some food. But the inside . . . the utter drabness, the miserable muck in which these millions live, the utter uselessness of it all seems to press over you like a cloud of heavy smoke. The hall is cluttered with empty boxes, old trunks bearing the names of Brokovitsch, Drominski . . . A kitchen with huge vats in which boils and bubbles the noon meal . . . bushels of potatoes . . . gallons of gravy stew and a vegetable soup with only cabbage. The smell of cooked cabbage hangs everywhere . . . not from today, or yesterday, but from weeks ago.

Behind one of the doors which bear the numbers 168, 169 and on down the many halls are the DP's . . . the women, the children, the old men . . . those whose hearts still lie in their homeland, but to which they will never again return. By the window in 168 sits a tiny withered grandmother, perhaps 80 years old. She wears a white scarf tied under her chin. She sits in the stream of sunlight with a little pasty-colored girl. The thin-legged girl beside her on the window still reads a letter which has come.

Scrubbing Her Area of the Floor

One's eyes quickly scan the room . . . beds . . . about twelve or fifteen of them. In front of some hangs a blanket or old bed spread hung on a wire to bring a little privacy at night. A few small bare wooden tables . . . in the middle a small and very delapidated coal stove which surely cannot spread warmth very far on cold, clammy days . . . suit cases in the corners . . . a few kettles . . . a mother scrubbing her area of the floor. The only bit of cheer in the midst of these deplorable surroundings is the sun streaming in the window . . . and you think of the many days here in Germany when there is no sun.

> "But won't the people say, 'Why don't they go somewhere else . . . We don't want those Yugoslavs here . . . Why don't they go to Australia or South America?' "

Their story can be multiplied by four digits or six. "We fled. The family separated. Some were taken away. Now our only hope is America. We didn't pass the Australian test. We cannot go to Canada. No, there has been no work for a long time. We get one piece of clothing a month from IRO. A coat must last four years. A pair of shoes . . . two . . . and then what, when the soles wear out in six months? Food . . . yes. There is quantity . . . plenty of potatoes, plenty of soup. But after months, years, the potatoes begin to taste like the cabbage soup and the soup like the potatoes."

We've heard stories about America. Is it true? Do they only work with machines there? In our homeland the women had to help with the farm work. Milking cows was a woman's job. The hands of the mother are gnarled and worn, but once they were beautiful hands . . . Is it true that in America if a man comes home from work on a night shift, perhaps, he dare not waken his wife and must sit on the doorstep until she wakens? We laugh . . . Oh my no! The man continues . . . My friend wrote me from Australia that it is so hot there in summer that he must go and run water over his head every hour! It's not so hot in America, is it? . . . But many places it's very warm. Do farmers get good pay? Are food and clothing expensive? And the mother again . . . But won't the people say . . . why didn't they go somewhere else . . . we don't want those Yugoslavs here . . . why didn't they go to Australia or South America . . . No, I don't think all the people will think that . . . not if they try to understand . . . not if they have love.

The land of beginning again . . . Sadly, though. the way is narrow, and the gate is small . . . and those that will enter it will be only a few of the many left. The visas are few . . . the regulation laws too strict . . . the physical demands too high for too many . . . and it will remain only a dream in the hearts of thousands and millions."

BETHEL COLLEGE

THE Junior Choir School of the Bethel College Church directed by Mrs. Jacob J. Enz, held its closing program for the year on Sunday, June 18. Besides the choir, two guest artists appeared on the program. Mrs. Henry D. Dyck, contralto, sang among other selections, an aria from the St. Matthew Passion by Bach. She was accompanied in this selection by Mrs. Enz on the piano and Rupert Hohmann on the violin. Rupert Hohmann, the second guest artist, presented a group of violin selections.

The Junior Choir School of Bethel College Church is a unique institution. It is built on a pattern considerably different from that of the usual junior church choir. With the objective of superior church musicianship for each member, the boys and girls, representing two races and different denominations, are required to attend two rehearsals a week in which music fundamentals, history, sight singing, and ear training are stressed in addition to practice on the selections to be performed publicly. In addition to group training, members of the choir are given monthly private lessons in voice to insure proper individual development as a foundation of effective group work.

Among other numbers the choir sang James Bixel's "Little Lamb, Who Made Thee?". Professor Bixel of Bethel College wrote the anthem specially for this choir.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

MRS. Elizabeth Warkentin, wife of our late president and founder, A. Warkentin, left for Atlanta, Georgia, on Friday, where she will take up residence with her son, John Warkentin. a Psychiatrist and teacher in the Emery University School of Medicine. The Seminary community has appreciated the fellowship with Mrs. Warkentin during these difficult days since her husband's passing. She has contributed in many ways to the life of the school and we wish her God's richest blessing in her new place of residence. Perhaps it was particularly fitting that Professor Don. E. Smucker was able to represent the Seminary at the dedication of the Warkentin Memorial room in the new addition of the First Church of Newton, Kansas. This dedication took place Sunday, June 4. In his address there Smucker quoted II Peter 2:11 in which we read about strangers and pilgrims on this earth. He likened the life of Warkentin to a pilgrim who moved through four distinct phases of life: his life in Russia, life in Germany, life in Newton, Kansas, at the church and Bethel College, and his life as founder and first president of Mennonite Biblical Seminary. In his further remarks he then went on to point some unique combinations of virtues in Warkentin. Noting that this great leader was both a very pious religious man and a very scholarly man, that he was a quiet man but a forceful leader, that he was both teacher and preacher, that he was a Mennonite scholar whose main interests were in Old Testament studies, that he was a man of peace in a world of war to suffer for his non-resistant position, and finally, that Warkentin in his latter years here at the Seminary lived solely by the Grace of God because of the terrible agony and suffering imposed by the disease of cancer. Thus, as a unique pilgrim he completed his life in Chicago where he left a lasting impression on the Seminary.

Ellen Harder and Erna Friesen have received their pass-ports for entrance into Colombia and are scheduled to leave this Saturday for the General Conference Voluntary Service Project in that South American country.

Book Notes . . . . WHAT ARE YOU LIVING FOR?

WHAT ARE YOU LIVING FOR? By John Sutherland Bonnell. Abingdon-Cokesbury, New York: 1950. 188 pp. $2.00.

The author of this book is well known throughout the nation because of the fact that he is the speaker of the "National Vespers' conducted by the ABC network and pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of New York.

The book consists of a series of sermons, which the author has divided into four larger divisions as follows: "Invitation to Adventure," "From Doubt to Faith," "Courage to Overcome," and "The Challenge of Responsibility." Repeatedly he brings the reader face to face with the question, "What are you living for?" Out of the life of a Jacob of old he points out that material success may yet be the greatest failure and Jacob has his prototypes today. "We worship success. We have made a god of it, and before its shrines tens of thousands bow in homage . . . This nation is full of men and women who are hurling themselves into life with such reckless abandon that they are wringing themselves physically and spiritually dry."

In a chapter stressing the importance of faith he says that "our capacity to believe will determine very largely the effectiveness of our lives." Of how many of us can it be said, "He does not believe enough to be great"! No one can have a satisfying answer to the theme-question of the book until he can say, "For me to live is Christ."

In the last chapter of the book the author discusses the fact that there are more than two hundred divisions

MOUNTAIN LAKE COMMUNITY TO OBSERVE DIAMOND JUBILEE

June 25-27

The Mountain Lake community plans to observe its diamond jubilee on June 25, 26, and 27—a joint enterprise of the churches that were transplanted from Russia to Minnesota in the early 1870's. Speakers from the outside will be H. H. Janzen of Winnipeg, Peter Dyck, Goshen, Indiana, and Erland Waltner, North Newton, Kansas.

PACIFIC DISTRICT

—Glendale Church, Lynden, Washington: Our congregation observed the dedication of children on Mother's Day. Five children were dedicated. On May 16, Paul Smith, speaker, and John Henderson, song leader, brought us an outstanding Youth for Christ service. The church had an enjoyable picnic dinner and time of recreation at the Berthuson Park on Memorial Day. In connection with this we had a short farewell service for Mr. and Mrs. Webb Bamford and family who are leaving on an extended vacation trip and also for Verna Jantz who is leaving to work in the "Go Ye" Missions. Elizabeth Ann Jantz has already left for similar work. The Ladies' Mission Circle held their regular meeting on June 1.—Mrs. Clarence C. Schmidt, Corr.

—Grace Church, Dallas, Oregon: Preparations are being made for the coming Pacific District Conference which is to convene in our church June 14 to 18. Mrs. Ferguson led week-day Bible school during the school term which just came to a close. The enrollment was 520. Child evangelism classes also came to a close. Daily vacation Bible school will be held from June 19 to June 30.—Mrs. Frank J. Schmidt, Corr.

WESTERN DISTRICT

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Oklahoma: A Children's Day program was given Sunday morning, before a setting of cut flowers. A large number of visitors, those who had moved away, returned to enjoy the day with us. The picnic was held at Kiawna Park, near Hinton. We have been having plenty of rain. Harvest is at hand and some have already begun.—Corr.

—First Church, Geary, Oklahoma: On May 28, Alfred Germer was accepted into the church by the right hand of fellowship and on June 4 two members were received by baptism, Robert Leck and Norman Zweiacher. From May 1 to 12 Abe Peters, our pastor, and wife, with the help of several lay-members conducted a pre-school age vacation Bible school with an enrollment of twenty-one children. From May 22 to June 2 such a school was conducted for school-age pupils with an enrollment of 45.—Corr.

—Lorraine Avenue Church, Wichita, Kansas: The Friendship Circle mother-daughter supper was enjoyed by a large group at the May meeting. Two films about the Christian family were shown. The Young People's Sunday school class recently sponsored a Chinese supper, complete with chopsticks and Chinese food. Miss Grace Liu of Bethel College was the speaker. A family night program was given by members of various families the evening of Mother's Day. The play "United Family," directed by our pastor, George Stoneback, was presented by a group of young people. Three new members were received into our fellowship, May 28. Our vacation Bible school will be held for two weeks beginning June 19 through 30.—Mrs. Waldo W. Leisy, Corr.

—First Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: On Pentecost five young people were baptized and became members of our church. On May 14, consecration services were held for ten infants. A group of young people represented our church at the Sunday school convention held recently at Henderson, Nebraska. D. V. B. S. started May 29 in our church basement with four teachers and forty-two pupils participating. All C. E. meetings will be discontinued for the summer months and we will take part in the summer union services held every Sunday evening at the Chautauqua Park.—Mrs. Abraham Jantzen, Corr.

—First Church, Halstead, Kansas: During the absence of the pastor on Sunday morning, May 28, Reverend Koeneke gave the morning message. The annual Sunday school picnic was held at the Harvey County Park all day Sunday, June 4. The children presented a Children's Day program in place of the regular church services. Union services were held in the evening of June 11 in Methodist Church with the other two churches, Presbyterian and Methodist Churches. The children participating in the summer Bible school had charge of the program. The film, "God of Creation," was shown in keeping with the theme of the Bible school. A display of the handwork was observed after the meeting. At noon, June 11, the Mary-Martha Mission Circle observed its annual family picnic dinner and business session.—Betty Franz, Corr.

—First Church, Pretty Prairie, Kansas: D. C. Wedel of Bethel College and W. F. Unruh, field secretary of the Western District, gave the Sunday morning messages, June 11 and 18, during the absence of our pastor, Howard G. Nyce and family, who are visiting relatives and friends in Pennsylvania. He will also deliver a series of missionary messages in his first pastorate in Quakertown.—Corr.

—Harleigh M. Rosenberger, Bluffton graduate in 1941, who has been pastor of the First Baptist Church of Lockport, New York, for the past five years, has accepted a new position. Beginning May 1st he will serve as co-minister with Roy A. Burkhart at the First Community Church in Columbus, Ohio. Harleigh writes that "sharing in the preaching and pastoral ministry in this church of some 4,000 members is a real challenge."—Bluffton College Bulletin.

tized and received into the General Conference Churches as a result of this effort. During his stay in North America, Klassen is planning on attending the Canadian Conference, Rosthern, Saskatchewan. July 6-23, Brother Klassen is to visit the churches in Ontario with time to visit his brothers and participate at the silver wedding anniversary of his brother D. J. and Mrs. Klassen. It is expected that he visit churches in the Western District until General Conference. After that he is to visit churches in Western Canada. Klassen has many relatives and friends whom he has not seen since they were separated when he went to South America and they to Canada.

He and Rev. Ernst Harder are to represent the churches in South America that belong to General Conference. We welcome our brother to our churches in North America.

Work Camp in Germany

By Dorothy Hurley, Carlock, Illinois

TO FORTY young people from Mennonite and affiliated Colleges the words WORK CAMP will always hold a special meaning for it was our privilege to be a part of such units during the latter part of the summer of 1949. After an exciting tour of most of the countries of middle Europe where we had the opportunity to view the most famous historic spots as well as glimpse at the home life of our Mennonite brethren there, we made our way by devious routes to Germany, the location of our work camps. It was with mixed feelings that we crossed the border into Germany, the country which we had heard so much about in the past few years. It was only then that some of us began to realize what a great part propaganda had played in this formation of our much distorted mental picture of this land.

Our American student tour group was divided into three parts and the members equally distributed to three international youth camps. One camp was situated in the northern city of Hannover where the members helped to construct a home for delinquent refugee boys. The second camp was in Frankfort, in central Germany. Here the young people lived in tents and cooked in an old sheepstable on the banks of the Main river. The project consisted of building cottages for refugee girls.

The third work camp, situated in Stuttgart, of which I was privileged to be a member was a small construction unit whose project was that of building a recreation hall for a children's summer holiday camp. The following paragraphs, then, will deal with Stuttgart in particular and in most respects all work camps in general.

In each unit there were approximately fifteen Americans and about an equal number of young people from other countries. Denmark, Switzerland, Italy, France, Holland, and Germany all were represented in these international groups headed by M.C.C. personnel.

Our camp was situated on the outskirts of Bad Connstatt, a suburb of Stuttgart. The camp site was in the very heart of the beautiful orchard-clothed hills of this little community.

It was in the late afternoon that our group tumbled out of the cramped quarters of our bus and caught the first glimpse of camp. Our eyes quickly took in the the "L" shaped former Army barracks, the two wash tents and the piles of rough brick and stone which were to be used as building material. In one wing of the barracks were two airy bedrooms filled with regulation army cots. A small portion of space was given to our pantry which was well supplied with dry milk, powdered eggs, and other M.C.C. canned goods. Our kitchen was simply equipped with a large, smoky stove and a cold water sink. The remaining part of the "L" was the dining hall and assembly room. A few feet from the barracks were the wash tents complete with water bucket and numerous tin basins.

On the other side of the barracks was a small area marked off for the new Recreation Hall. Before actual construction could begin we had to clear it of shrubs, stones and trees. On the first day of work we hewed down an old gnarled apple tree and from its green fruit we were furnished with abundant American-styled apple-dishes for the remainder of the time in camp.

A typical work day began at 6:00 when we were awakened by the musical ringing of Swiss cow bells (a souvenir donated for this purpose). Breakfast was served at 6:30 but there was generally a few minutes lee way allotted to us unfortunate ones who could never quite forsake our warm cots until the last possible minute for the chill ritual of splashing our faces in the icy-filled basins. After seating ourselves on the rough wooden benches around the laden tables we paused for a short period of devotions. Then came a hearty breakfast of fruit, tomato juice, hot chocolate, soy-flakes, bread, jelly, and rye-coffee. All of this food was not served at one particular meal but it was from this variety that the cooks selected the menus. As soon as breakfast was finished we settled back while our camp director briefed us on various topics of information and gave us the schedule for the day. From then on until 8:30 we had sufficient time or letter writing, making our beds and finishing other menial tasks. There was only one exception to this rule and that was when ever it came your turn to do dishes then your time was spent bending over the little steaming tin dishpan.

At 8:30, equipped with picks and shovels, we started the actual work for the day. There was a variety of jobs for each of us. We dug trenches for the foundation, mixed cement and concrete by hand, rolled stone blocks and cleaned bricks. Each of us volunteered for at least three days of kitchen duty which consisted of all of the regular tasks that any smoothly run household has.

By 11:30 our backs were beginning to ache and our hands unaccustomed to such toil began to blister. It was always a welcoming sound to hear the bells announcing quitting time for dinner. This gave us a half-hour to rest and wash before sitting down to our main meal.

The time flew on golden wings and the 1:00 work bell came soon. During the whole afternoon until 4:00 we kept working although at times we lagged a little under the hot sun and the burden of labor. To a bystander, the tasks of shoveling loose soil, mixing concrete and carrying it by bucket and wheelbarrow might have seemed more like play than actual work but any work camper would know by his calloused hands and aching back that it was much more than that. However, it was not unpleasant work because there were always willing hands to share each task and no one ever refused the opportunity for friendly conversation and discussion.

The 4:30 coffee hour was always one of the highlights of the day. This was our time for relaxation and recreation. It was at this hour that we often entertained speakers who came to us to lecture on the current problems of Germany, its churches and young people. These speakers stimulated much discussion and thought which did not stop at the end of the coffee hour. Sometimes this period was spent in visiting the refugee camps of Stuttgart, or other work units, or by just relaxing, writing letters, and talking.

After supper was over and the dishes cleared away we might attend some entertainment in Stuttgart, play games, or listen to lectures and once in awhile just walk among the trees or gather in groups for a good talk-fest.

The week ends were never spent idly for come rain or sunshine we always found ourselves rumbling along in the big M.C.C. stock truck over the German countryside where we visited famous historic spots, Mennonite communities, and other points of interest. One day we had the very special pleasure of cruising down the Rhine in the former Hitler Yacht now owned by the U. S. Army.

No matter what activities the day held it was closed by a devotional period. Whether we came to worship by the wavering candlelight or whether we gathered under the apple trees washed in the last rays of the setting sun, we never failed to experience that strong bond of love that surmounted language barriers, cultural differences and other obstacles.

Camp life was an adventurous experience for all of us . . The novelty of meeting new faces, hearing strange languages, and living in rugged fashion was surely enjoyable, but the experience went far deeper than the sheer joy of it. The main aim of this international camp was not that of just working or having a good time but of developing a deeper understanding between individuals of different nations and of furthering good will among Christians of the various nationalities. Education was surely a part of this experience and the voluntary physical labor an expression of love for the less fortunate of our fellow men.

Life in a small compact group always presents problems and our camp was no exception in this respect. There was generally a difference of opinion on most topics whether it was the values of capitalism or the most effective means to mix concrete. However, with love as the hub of our Christian community and with the mutual interest of all members as the wheel on which our relationship revolved it was relatively simple to solve what might have been extremely knotty problems. We soon learned to share and to give and receive with good will. There were counsellors and committees which handled our group problems in very democratic fashion.

It was soon evident that our chief source of education was to be through direct contact with the members of the unit and the people of the surrounding community. The Evangelische Church and the Y.M.C.A. provided various opportunities for us to visit in German homes, and to meet other young people. Such excellent cooperation proved the presence of love and interest on the part of these people.

Some of the most memorable and best loved moments of camp life, I believe, were spent around the tables in the dining-hall. It was here, that we gathered in knots of two's and three's around a candle to write journals or letters home. Frequently, before the ink was dry on the first line our writing materials were pushed aside in favor of a friendly chat or a spirited discussion. Many times, however, when we were tempted to put letter-writing first we soon discovered what an opportunity we had in talking with these young people, hearing of their war experiences and sharing with them the problems that face youth everywhere over the world.

Work camp taught us many lessons as we partook of worship, work and social contact. As a group we learned to share and to bear responsibilities together. It was necessary sometimes to sacrifice individual desires for the benefit of the group. Here too, it took a great deal of Christian love and tolerance. I think the parting words of a young German student best express the sentiment all of us hold for this camp experience, when he said on closing day "Often when you come to the close of such a program as this you say it was successful but your inner-most belief is opposite. However, this camp was different; here love really worked. Here we found genuine happiness based on Christ as our cornerstone. In this respect it was successful." Perhaps our nations too could profit by such a belief.

A Child-Like Faith

By Banchha Nog, Sirko, C. P., India

(Banchha Nag, author of this article, is a young man who is working in Sewa Bhawan Hospital preparatory to entering a science college. His ultimate aim is to serve his people as a doctor. Banchha is a graduate of Jansen Memorial High School. His home is in Sirko, C.P., India.—Ed.)

CLAD in rags, feeling her way with a stick, there came not many days ago a woman named Shubba Bai of the village Jhilmilla to Sewa Bhawan Hospital. She suffered from cataracts. Joy of life had taken flight from her face and despondency and hopelessness had taken its place. Why shouldn't she be despondent? Why shouldn't she be hopeless? She a widow, blind and poor with only a seven year old grandchild to help earn a living, lived in utmost poverty with only a few possessions.

But God's grace which passeth all human understanding has endowed men and women with wonderful powers. H. E. Dester, our chief medical officer, decided to remove her cataracts. She was led to the operating theatre. Dester and Banwar were the surgeons. Before the operation she seemed to be very hesitant, but her attitude was completely changed when she saw light after the scales had fallen from her eyes. As soon as the operation was finished, joy returned to her and she very unwillingly allowed us to bandage her eyes. It was the same joy that the blind man, cured by our Jesus Christ, must have experienced. She is an alert, aged Christian and knows her Bible somewhat.

In the morning, whenever we saw her, we found her with the bandage open. When we asked, "Why so?" she would gladly reply, "Oh, I can see!" To show her inner excessive and intense joy she was sometimes inspired to speak in poetical terms. We were very fond of listening to all her words. She would admire the beauty of nature and thank God the giver of eye sight.

My readers will be interested to read that she was so confident of the restoration of her eye sight and so happy that she left the hospital before she was supposed to—with the stitches still in her eyes. She revealed a wonderful faith in God and the hospital workers were amazed to witness her abundant joy. We have faith to believe that she is so completely cured and is giving her neighbors and friends in her village an example of real faith.

Y.P.U. Workshop at Camp Byron

On August 18-23, there will be a youth Workshop at Camp Byron, South Dakota for the young people of the General Conference. Vital questions on local youth organization and work will be dealt at the five day workshop. Here are some of them:

1. What sort of materials can we use to make our local society programs vital to youth?
2. How can we organize to serve all of youth's needs—worship, study, service, and recreation?
3. How can we have a vital and meaningful worship service indoors or out of doors?
4. What sort of crafts can we introduce in our local church?

These and a host of other tasks will be dealt with at the workshop. Plan to attend. Camp costs are $1.50 per day per person.

Our Peace Witness in Europe

by Paul Peachey

—From a talk given by Paul Peachey at a conference of Historic Peace Churches, held at Heerewegen, Holland, on August 4.

As I think of our peace witness, it seems that our strength is also our weakness. As a historic peace group, we have not yet succeeded in contemporizing our witness. Even though there has been a rebirth of a consciousness of our mission, our efforts are still to largely vindicative. Sometimes I wish we could begin with the creative freshness of New Testament times without thinking of our past. But having said this, we have on the other hand a unique opportunity, first, to take up where we left off about 1530 or thereafter, when the creative movement in the movement declined, and second, the perspective of a tried pattern can be of tremendous value.

There are three general areas of peace witness open to us that have to do with our strategy rather than with our tactics or technique:

FIRST, we can serve as something of a beacon to the churches of the Reformation confessional tradition, avoiding of course every trace of a holier-than-thou attitude. Perhaps for the first time since the Reformation confessions themselves are being questioned. For instance, Otto Witt, the German Lutheran pastor who wrote "Christ und Kriegsdienst," stated recently that the weakness in the Lutheran churches regarding war and similar questions has always been that no one dared to challenge the original confessions.

It is interesting to note how when Christian participation in war is rejected, other questions are also raised. The above-named pastor who has accepted New Testament nonresistance out and out, also has not baptized his eighteen-month-old daughter. Both questions are live issues in the German church today. The two major questions on the agenda of the national synod of the Reformed Church in France this year were baptism and international relations, especially pacifism. Since time did not permit both to be handled, only the latter was taken up. The major study question for the Arbeitsgemeinschaft of German pastors and theologians from the Bekennende Kirche this year is baptism.

One must not suppose, however, that there will be an immediate, perhaps not even eventual, acceptance of another position on these questions. Another German pastor told me recently the problem for him is not whether the Anabaptist position was or is the correct one, but how these principles can be effected in the Evangelical churches. It is not so simple as just trying to convince other people of the correctness of the Anabaptist position, either past or present.

SECOND, in our peace testimony we need to concentrate on primary rather than secondary, direct rather than indirect, peacemaking. By primary or direct, I mean the peace which comes about by the conversion of the individual, by which genuine peace is achieved in all his relationships. By secondary or indirect, I refer to the influence which radiates even among non-Christians from such individuals and groups. The primary is theologically rooted, dealing with the basic root of human depravity, including war. The secondary represents the work of specialized peace movements which may promote better international or intergroup understanding, but which can never reach the root of the problem. It would be a mistake for us to become such a movement, for our own peace witness is inseparably bound up with our total Gospel message and mission, that of total Christian living.

On the other hand, there are indirect values. Any community benefits indirectly from peacemakers living in it. And we should not be indifferent even about our indirect influence for peace. In fact, we probably have more responsiblity in this area than we usually recognize.

THIRD, We need to articulate or make assimilable the motivation behind our relief program. Somehow we must spell out the personal spiritual equivalent of the loaf of bread given "In the Name of Christ."

A number of methods or techniques might be suggested, which, however, do not represent official M.C.C. thinking, but come rather as suggestions that I might offer as a worker on the field.

1. We should continue our relief and refugee services as an important method of promoting peace.
2. There are things we can do to strengthen and awaken peace convictions and groups among our 65,000 European Mennonite brethren.
3. We should define our position and purposes to other church groups. Contacts for such purposes can be cultivated, by good-will expressions to synods, etc. We cannot of course fully identify ourselves with other groups, whether for inconsistency or for other reasons.
4. We should seek out the interested or searching individual, congregation or group, who are studying this question, to give what aid and help we can.
5. We should give opportunity for fellowship in an atmosphere conducive to Christian growth, in conferences, work camps, peace institutes, travel, etc.
6. Many Protestant churches would now welcome "Gospel teams" or "peace caravans" from M.C.C., to fellowship, work, and relate of our whole pattern of Christian life and thought.
7. We could with profit establish with non-church youth or other age groups, such as labor union youth, who will never be reached through the churches.
8. Finally, something which I would say guardedly because it can be misinterpreted, The Mennonite Voice should become as well known as the Mennonite Broetchen. "Mennonite" here is not to be understood as competitive to "Christian" but rather a testimony which speaks on issues on which other voices have been dim or confused. There is the press and the radio. Perhaps there is a place for a publication discussing peace and other major isues. Some of this thinking may be dreamy-eyed, but we must keep moving forward.

A big man is not one who makes no mistakes, but one who is bigger than any mistakes he makes.

nations through Church World Service, as well as by Lutheran World Relief and Catholic Rural Life.

"When you give to CROP, indicate which church you choose to distribute your gift," is the suggestion of the Rev. Milton R. Vogel of Topeka, secretary of the Kansas Council of Churches, who is state CROP vice-chairman for Church World Service.

CROP, Rev. Vogel pointed out, merely gathers the food for the churches and turns it over to the churches for distribution abroad. All the effort by CROP will be to gather actual food, rather than money, to meet its state goal of 82½ carloads for the 1950 Kansas Friendship Food Train, he said.

Fifty wheat-growing counties will be canvassed during their harvest time under the direction of county CROP committees. Corn and other grains will be collected in the same way this autumn in the remaining counties.

NEW YORK. Evanston, Ill., has been chosen as the location for the next assembly of the World Council of Churches, in 1953.—Ch. Sc. Monitor

OMAHA, NEBRASKA. — Delegates and officers of two smaller Mennonite bodies met on the campus of Grace Bible Institute, Omaha, May 31-June 1, comparing and studying their faith and practice and seeking ways of uniting their bodies for future work and practice.

They are the Evangelical Mennonite Church, made up of congregations located in Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, and Kansas, and the Evangelical Mennonite Brethren, having churches in the western states and Canada.

INDONESIA.—One hundred fifty thousand new members have been added to the Batak church in Indonesia since 1940, when the Rhenish missionaries were interned. This increase has come largely through the effective witness of laymen, for there are only 90 ordained ministers in a church of 550,000 persons.—Gospel Messenger

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA. The church is being taken to the people of Indianapolis, Ind., by a mobile unit equipped with loud-speaker, moving pictures, record player and television. The unit owned by the Indianapolis District of the Methodist Church, is driven through new residential areas, notifying people, by means of the loudspeaker, of locations of churches of all denominations. Plans are being made to take the unit to the homes of shut-ins who want brief devotions.—Gospel Messenger

DALLAS. Because he believes too much emphasis is placed on wearing new clothes each Easter, the J. Daniel Barron, pastor, conducted Easter services at Grace Methodist church here while wearing old clothes.

He wore a nine-year-old suit and a pair of shoes purchased three years ago. The shirt was two years old and his tie six.—Protestant Voice

*Includes one large gift of $18,000 from an estate.

Includes one large gift of $6,000 from an estate.

Includes $10,000 needed for loan capital.

Contributions continue to come in rather slowly. Approximately 42 per cent of the year is now past; 33 per cent of the total budget needs have been met. This indicates that we are just one month behind. There are still several boards and committees whose recipts are considerably below average. We are happy to note the increase in gifts for the Seminary during May.

In behalf of the boards and committees we sincerely thank each donor who has contributed toward the work of our Conference. Both your gifts and your prayers are needed to carry on this your work.

DELEGATE CERTIFICATE NO. 1

The first General Conference Delegate Certificate has just been returned to Headquarters Office. It was mailed June 20, only three days after the blanks were mailed from Newton. "Delegate Certificate No. 1" comes from the First Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Kansas, H. T. Unruh, pastor. The congregation has 350 members, hence 12 votes. (One for every 30 members or fraction) This church has selected eleven delegates for the session at Freeman, South Dakota. The Conference secretary will be anxiously awaiting word from each of the congregations concerning their representation.

Editorials

THERE IS A SUBJECT about which pulpits are strangely silent these days. That subject is voluntary poverty. Economically Jesus was a poor man; furthermore he seems to have drawn men away from their jobs as fishermen—jobs which insured them considerable security. From all we are able to gather Paul, too, did little more than was necessary to take care of his most immediate needs. To the rich young ruler, Jesus said, "Go . . . sell . . . give . . . come . . . follow me." Note the imperative mood! And how we love to rationalize the situation by saying that it wasn't so much the riches as it was the love for riches that Jesus was concerned about. O yes, we say we owe it to our family to provide a comfortable standard of living. But, most often, in the attempt to do this there is a denial of time for the family and love for the family that makes family life die. A family with a heap of living even though lacking a heap of this world's goods is infinitely the richer. We venture to add that this may be related to the Sabbath problem. Jesus went about doing good on the Sabbath. Even for many Christians the Sabbath is a kind of weekly hang-over when they recuperate from the mad rush after the almighty dollar during the week. We have ourselves quite well convinced the high standard of living is the supreme good even at the cost of spiritual values. Dare we honestly to face the fact that we are worshipping a standard of living? And, what should condemn our hearts even more, is the fact that we have been and are maintaining this standard of living at the price of the blood of our fellow human beings. We want our comforts and even luxuries whether our fellow man has clothes and food or not. Will we dare to lower our standard of living so that others may have the privilege of living itself. In this area is a frontier with few pioneers. Will we be ready to accept a lower standard of living so that we may devote more time to the spread of the gospel and the turning of men to Christ?

THE ARTICLE in this issue by Malcolm Wenger may be misread by some as a slur on the indifference of the Cheyenne Indians when he says that the dearth of native leadership is deeply felt. We thank God with all our hearts for the progress along these lines that has been made as evidenced in the ordination of the first Cheyenne elder, Milton Whiteman. But let us remember that this is not primarily the problem of the Indian; it is the problem of the white man! Perhaps this is the judgment that our nation is reaping after it pushed the Indian off his own land and even fought and killed him when he resisted. Our conscience would burn us the more, it would seem, if after such a background of affairs we should pull up stakes just because there are no outward results. Wenger is right; we must stay on till the seed is well planted and native leadership for the church to spread the word in its own orbit is available. Furthermore, we would like to raise the question whether the glamour of a far-distant mission field in Africa or the Orient has held our attention and our prayers in a way that caused us to ignore this intense need on our immediate doorstep. One might go on to add that members of our churches who are on vacation trips ought to make it a point to visit these mission stations if they are passing through Oklahoma, Montana, or Arizona. The missionaries need constantly to be kept aware of the fact that they are not laboring alone and that our prayers and our interests are with them in this most difficult field of labor.

COMPARATIVELY FEW REACTIONS have come in concerning the rather far-reaching and significant changes called for in the proposed Revised Constitution for General Conference which was printed in the May 9th issue of THE MENNONITE. Conference delegates ought, by all means, to read this revision of the Constitution before coming to Conference. Time will be precious as at all conferences. For that reason it would be a matter of regret if much time is taken to clarify points that would clarify themselves if time had been taken beforehand by individuals to read the revision. The Revision Committee has worked long and hard on this task. Every major step in the progress of its work has been authorized by Conference or by the Council of Boards. They have encouraged questions, comments, and constructive criticisms now so that all the major problems may be carefully considered before Conference convenes. To revise a church constitution is to a very large extent a matter of determining anew the will of God for our Conference in our time. This is a corporate act that demands a corporate mind. But if there is to be a corporate mind, there must be careful individual study. Send any questions, comments, or criticisms to H. A. Fast, chairman of the Revision Committee at North Newton, Kansas.

Scientists report that during the 600 years between the first use of gunpowder and TNT, explosive power was only doubled; with the splitting of the atom, it was jumped 17 million times.

According to their own figures the liquor industry pays about two billion dollars in revenue to all of our governments. The lowest estimate cost of crime in our country is fifteen billion dollars or about one hundred twenty dollars for every man, woman and child; gambling costs us ten billion dollars, vice, traffic accidents, relief, etc., costs several billions more. These evils are caused and greatly increased by drink, and the huge sums of money spent on them should go for necessities and comforts to help stimulate industries. If this were done our tax burden in peace time would be greatly diminished.—The Spotlight.

AMONG THE ADULTS—Reaping the Fruit
Milton Whiteman (left) the first Cheyenne elder

"How Long Are You Staying?"

by Malcolm Wenger

MR. WENGER, how long are you going to stay here?"

It was one of those sudden questions which a child at times asks an adult without warning. As I looked at the face of the young Cheyenne boy who had asked the question I began to wonder: how long would we be serving as missionaries here at Busby among the Northern Cheyenne Indians?

"I don't know," I told him, "I suppose as long as we are useful here."

Then the thought came, "How long will we be useful to our Lord here?" How long should we as a Mennonite Church expect to continue the work of the mission here at Busby? It is now over forty-five years since this work was begun. Must we think of it as continuing into an indefinite future or is it possible that we can look for a time in the not too distant future when we can say that our work as a mission is complete and we can turn our energies to another corner of the white harvest field of the world into which our Master has sent us?

Always Looking Beyond

As we wonder about the answer to that question let us consider the example of that great missionary, the Apostle Paul. We remember with amazement how he stayed at most places no longer than a few months or perhaps a few years and then moved on. He never seemed to consider any place permanent. He was always looking beyond. He not only looked ahead but prepared to go on—on to Rome, on to Spain. He said to the Romans, "Since I no longer have any room for work in these regions . . . I hope to see you in passing as I go to Spain." We cannot assume that Paul meant that he had personally witnessed to all who lived in the vast territory from Jerusalem as far as Illyricum, or that any large percentage of the population had become Christians. And yet, Paul considered his work in those parts completed! What he must have meant is that he had planted living churches throughout that territory and that having established them his work was done. It was now the church's responsibility to continue to spread the gospel in their own Jerusalem.

Why is it that we here at Busby are still far from that place where we feel that we can press on and leave the unfinished task to the Cheyenne church. The answer is not clear or easy. But let us compare our work here with that of Paul and see if we can see the points of weakness for which we must ask God's guidance and help.

The Need of Leadership

Of Paul the Scriptures say, "And when they had ordained them elders in every church and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord on whom they believed." Acts 14:23. How we feel the need of such leadership in the church here at Busby. We rejoice that Milton Whiteman was recently ordained as the elder of the church at Lame Deer, but we have no comparable leader here at Busby. God has graciously answered prayer in the salvation of three older men. May he also make clear His choice of men to be leaders here.

Paul wrote to Timothy, "The things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses the same commit thou to faithful men who shall be able to teach others also." (II Tim. 2:2). We feel the need of Cheyenne Christians who will share the burden of teaching. At present we do not even have a Cheyenne Sunday School teacher at Busby. Will you help by prayer that this part of the work of the church here may be strengthened?

To the Corinthians Paul wrote, "I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator or covetous, or an idolator, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner . . . " Paul expected the church itself to deal with those in its midst who did not measure up to the standards of conduct of the Christian. The church here has yet to take that responsibility. May the Christians here learn wisdom, grace and patience in dealing with those who have gone astray and in seeking to lead them to repentance and

by Donald Isaac

Miss Cornelia Franz of Inman, Kansas and Donald Isaac, son of Mrs. F. J. Isaac, former missionary in India, are Voluntary Service workers and have given much appreciated service during the retreat for Indian young people and now in Bible School at Clinton. Miss Franz has a class of from 20 to 24 first, second, and third graders every day. Donald Isaac teaches the fourth and fifth grades. The two other classes are taught by the Arthur Friesens. Donald Isaac writes about their experiences as follows.—Arthur Friesen.

NEVER having personal contact with the Indians of this country, I welcomed the opportunity of being able to attend the Young People's retreat at Roman Nose Park. The experience gave me a new appreciation of a people whom most of us only learn to know through reading the history books. I believe many of us become intolerant of these people just because we don't have this personal contact with them.

There were times when their ways of doing things ran counter to what we would like them to do but there were also the other times when they were just plain young people. It was moments when I saw them in the cabins or going swimming or playing softball with them that I really learned to appreciate them. There were those chapel programs that they were in charge of that gave me a reverence for and a better understanding of their spiritual-mindedness. Added to all of this, there was that unforgetable consecration service on the last night of the retreat. With only candles, held by each one, to pierce the darkness, I couldn't help but feel that there was a sincerity on the face of each one even though at times they might not show this.

At the Bible School I got this same appreciation for the Indian boys and girls. Here you see the same bright, shining faces that you expect to see at any Bible School. They are eager to learn the Word of God and we must do all in our power to foster this since these Children seem to have so little opportunity to study God's Word.

Donald Isaac and Indian youth at a Mission Retreat.

The greatest spiritual benefit I have derived from this contact with them through the retreat and Bible School is that I received a greater love and appreciation for the Indians. When I get a glimpse into the way which the missionaries have to carry on their work, I am not surprised at some of the things I see. The missionaries are doing a fine piece of work but it also takes money to carry on successful mission work. The government is carrying on a fine piece of work with the Indians but they are not concerned with their spiritual welfare. That is our responsibility.

holy living. Our Mennonite communities usually have been under Christian influence for so long that it is hard for us to realize the problems and temptations that face first or second generation Christians in a non-Christian society.

A Problem of Stewardship

Again from Corinthians (I Cor. 16:2) "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him . . . ." I think without exception non-Christian people are able to support their religions. This is true of the non-Christian Cheyenne as we note in the sun-dance being conducted just now. God asks us to give only to the extent that He has prospered us. Thus all can share in the work of the church. Yet how slow we often are to learn to give not grudgingly or of necessity but cheerfully. Pray that all of us including our Cheyenne brothers and sisters in Christ may learn that "He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully."

From Ephesians "Provoke not your children to wrath; but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Is not the Christian home and family one of the bulwarks of the Christian church? Yet in so many cases here at Busby only one or two members of the families in the church are Christians. It is our hope that a number of the unsaved fathers here may be brought to Christ and that wherever possible family altars may be established and that parents may feel the responsibility of leading their own children to Christ.

These Things We Must Accomplish

Perhaps these things we have mentioned are some of the things that must be accomplished before we as a mission can feel that our work is accomplished and that we have "no longer any room for work in these regions." Let us pray together that such a day may not be too far away and that we may be able as a Mennonite church to press on to other parts of the waiting world into which Christ has commanded us to go.

I come before God's throne,
the father of all men, and cry for peace
yet will my brother's death before my own.

Retirement on the Field

by Mrs. Rudolphe Petter

HREE years in heaven today. Three years with Jesus. For my morning worship I again read from the 14th Chapter of John, and the 20th and the 21st of Revelation. I tried to visualize with my finite mind what it must mean, in the twinkling of an eye to be swept from earth into bliss unspeakable.

An Indian with one crippled arm, who has perhaps frequented our home the most since we came from Oklahoma in 1916, was out in the hills today (January 6, 1950) to get wood. He remembered the day. He hurried back home, unloaded his logs, and headed direct for my cottage. He was very sad. "Zessensze was a good man," were his words.

He talked a long time. He told me again that when I was away a short two weeks in June, 1946, attending the reunion of my class with which I had graduated from Wittenberg College, Springfield, Ohio, fifty years ago, he happened to pass the mission station. "Something urged me to go in. I rapped on the back kitchen door, but got no response, so I walked in. Zessensze was leaning his head against the cold kitchen heater. He was having a heart attack. He told me to get some medicine on his desk in his study and to give him some water. He said, 'God is calling me home. Be good to Meneha. Help her all you can when I am gone.'

"He then complained of being cold, so I led him to his bed, took off his shoes, and covered him up. Then I went down in the basement and started a fire in the furnace. When I came up he felt better, so I left to go up town to inform some neighbors who came promptly to see him. The attack was then over."

His granddaughter, Amy Petter, had been staying with him during my absence. He had let her go home thinking that I would return any moment. Together they had miscalculated the time it would take to make the trip back from Ohio. Somehow I had an urge in Chicago to take the plane, but hesitated. When the Indian with the crippled arm had finally gone today, the "flood gates" opened wide for me, and I gave way to uncontrollable grief. I wept bitterly, even more than that week three years ago when my husband's body was being prepared for its last resting place.

Yes, three years with the Master for him. As for me, three years bereft of an intimate companion in the home. Three years alone in a big house and now in my new cottage home. Three years of much anguish of mind and soul. Three years to adapt myself to changes that had to be made.

My home for thirty-three years stood gaunt and bare on its high foundation without shrub or tree or vine, when I arrived with our Ford roadster in the fall of 1916. Carrie Warren, a part Arapahoe, part Negro girl whom we had raised at the Cantonment Mission School, accompanied me on the 1,200 mile trip, mostly as a travelling companion, but incidentally to crank the engine when I stalled it. Having driven only 100 miles before we started, I was indeed an inexperienced driver.

Gradually the growth of trees, vines, shrubs and flowers and a fine shelter belt towards the north wrought quite a transformation.

A log cabin had been built for Vxzeta (Anna Wolfname) and family. She assisted when the Scriptures were translated and printed right here on the mission station.

Finally the Mission Board instructed me to move this old cabin to a more favorable location. There was rough lumber already on the premises with which to add what was needed. With three tractors and one big truck a friendly rancher we have known for years directed the moving.

Except what the electrician did in wiring my cottage, all the work was done by part or full blood Indians. James Shoulderblade did the most, including all the finishing. His grandfather had been a white man married to an Indian woman down in Oklahoma. His mother had been a pupil at our Darlington Mission School when the Haurys were in charge.

Not being able to handle a hammer or a saw myself, every bit of labor had to be hired in these days of high cost building operations. In my distress, I appealed to my home church at Trenton, Ohio, and not in vain. A few individuals each gave a generous sum, and the church made up the balance of the amount I had asked. Loyal friends in Whitewater, Kansas, and a few others gave me assistance. May God richly reward them! With Job, each one of them can truly say, "I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy."

Petter Memorial Church

by Alfred Habegger

June 11, 1950.

"I HAVE hallowed this house, which thou hast built, to put my name there forever; and mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually. I Kings 9:3"

The above was the text on which Phil. A. Wedel based his message for the dedication of the Petter Memorial Church at Lame Deer, Montana June 11, 1950.

The new church was filled with Indians, whites and mixed-bloods, who had gathered for this memorable occasion. Milton Whiteman, native co-elder of the church, served as interpreter, explaining the thoughts in the Cheyenne language as they were spoken by Wedel.

Hymns of praise were sung, out of the new Mennonite Hymnaries, donated by the Women's Missionary Societies of the General Conference. This gift was highly appreciated by the mission workers, the church and all worshippers.

The Litany of dedication was read in the English by the Malcolm Wenger the Congregation responding in unison. After each item of the Litany was read in English Alfred Habegger read the same thoughts in the Cheyenne language and M. Whiteman read the response in the Cheyenne language. Malcolm Wenger led in the dedicatory prayer, in English, and M. Whiteman in the Cheyenne language.

Rev. Whiteman called on Cheyenne Christian men and women to express themselves as to how they felt with regard to the dedication services, the new church, and the blessings that have come to them because of the preaching of the Word of God in the past. Many testimonials were given, deep joy was expressed, and a feeling of gratitude for the help given by Mission friends, and the blessings God has given them.

A number of white people who also worship at the Lame Deer church, also expressed their joy of having this new house of worship, their appreciation of the work of the Missionaries, and their appreciation of the fellowship enjoyed this day.

Bible School in Oraibi

by Leonard Wiebe

THE busiest season in the year for the Arizona Hopi missionaries is the late spring time as we make preparations for daily vacation Bible school. After we have been notified who the personnel of our helpers will be, the missionaries meet to decide where the Bible schools are to begin and who is to be the helper at each school. The Bible study course is chosen and ordered before and preparations are made to present the Bible stories in the most interesting and enlightening manner. Along with the Bible study we have handwork for the children, sewing for the girls and woodwork for the boys. This year we plan to do something different in that we are using small weaving looms for the girls' project. The Women's Missionary Association usually supplies us with the necessary articles for the girls' projects. The boys' woodwork is most always prepared by the missionary. As a rule we have an enthusiastic response in our Bible schools.

A Bible class at the church once a week with some young people that live at the Hopi high school during the winter months is a source of blessing to us. The Hopis like to sing; a half an hour is spent in a rousing sing-time. We noticed very definitely how the Holy Spirit worked in the hearts of the young people. Even though there were no open professions of conversion, the change of attitude and attention to the lesson at the close of the school year was very noticeable and we could feel the presence of the Holy Spirit. As the young people went back to the dormitory the last night I had the class they sang choruses which we had not sung that night at the church and without any prompting.

The women sewed many beautiful quilts this past winter in the weekly sewing classes. Some of them made special effort to work out a pattern that was very pleasing in design and color combination. They also made many lovely garments from remnants of material from a factory in Berne. They know how to make the best use of pieces that would seem almost worthless.

More Refugees to South America

220 in M. C. C. Summer Service

AKRON, PA.—On June 11 a group of 88 Mennonite refugees left Europe aboard the SS Prothea, sailing from the port at Genoa, Italy, and bound for Santos, Brazil. Those going to Paraguay, including almost the entire group, are expected to disembark at Santos, and travel by air to Asuncion, Paraguay. About five or six of the group are to join relatives in Uruguay, and therefore will continue with the Prothea to Montevideo. Some of those going to Paraguay are also joining close relatives. Of the group of 88, 43 are I.R.O. eligibles and therefore have their passage expense provided; the remaining 45 are non eligible for assistance under I.R.O. and their passage is being borne by the Mennonite churches.

Summer Service Units Open

Fifteen hospital units and eleven other service units in Canada, the United States and Mexico will provide summer work for 220 young people. In the hospital units, the volunteers serve as attendants, in occupational and recreational therapy, and in other capacities. Other units include community welfare: Bible-school teaching; service to orphans, delinquents and other unfortunate children; work among migrant laborers; construction of an M.C.C. mental hospital; help at the M.C.C. headquarters; and other work. Units will continue until mid-August. In addition to these units, six more European units have been planned to provide challenging work for 46 additional American student volunteers and over 100 European young people.

These service assignments take young people into places of acute human need, where they not only can make a significant contribution, but also can gain a clearer vision of Christian service in a world of sin and need.

Students Leave for Europe

A group of forty-five students and other individuals, representing nine Mennonite colleges, left for Europe on June 16. The purpose of the European tour is two-fold: (1) to study conditions and life in Europe, among the Mennonites and otherwise, and (2) to make a contribution to post-war rehabilitation bv a period of voluntary service. The group plans to return from England on August 31. The Student program is planned by the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges, with Menno Travel Service, and the M.C.C. Voluntary Service office assiting.

From the Home Mission Front

Mountain Workers to Visit Churches

A CALL from some churches had come to the Board of Home Missions for information on the work carried on in our Mountain Mission Work. As a result, arrangements have been made that the two workers, Miss Lillian Lehman and Miss Marie Liechty, Greenville, Tennessee, are to visit a number of our churches and tell about the work they are doing in their field. They teach Bible and Bible stories and Bible memory work in many schools. During the summer they assist in conducting summer Bible camps for the boys and girls with whom they work during the school year. Their schedule is as follows:

July 6, Missionary Society, First Church, Bluffton, Ohio.
July 7, Ebenezer Church Missionary Societies, Bluffton, Ohio
July 9, Worship Service, First Church, Wadsworth, Ohio
July 11, Zion Church, Donnelson, Iowa
July 12, Pulaski, Iowa
July 13, Wayland, Iowa
July 14, Emmanuel Church, Noble, Iowa

After this, the girls will go back to their children's Bible camp, Watauga, Tennessee, R. F. D. No. 1. Our prayer is that the Lord might bless these workers and the messages they bring to give information, and to arouse interest in our Mountain Mission Work.

RETIREMENT ON THE FIELD. . . cont'd from p. 446

Friends in government circles here at Lame Deer gave me every encouragement and help in their power. The government carpenter was always ready with suggestions, help in use of tools, and gave some of his own spare time. Having had no experience whatsoever in building operations, and with no blue print, my little house "grew very much like Topsy." I yielded again and again to the suggestions and advice of my workmen, though I began to have some definite ideas as to what I wanted.

My co-workers sanded the floors, and did all of the interior painting, while I cooked the meals to free them for speedy work. Even Mrs. Habegger is quite expert with the paint brush, and her advice was often very valuable.

Indians and whites agree that the result is very pleasing. All up and down the valley my cottage has attracted considerable attention. I have had many callers who came to see it and admire my fine fir built-in bookcase, my kitchen cupboards and work counters, my ironing board in the wall, my bathroom, and now my disappearing stairway that gives me easy access to much needed storage space in the attic.

My Indian friends are especially happy about it. The ground crew surely thought the big machines would pull the old shack to pieces as it was jerked from its moorings and compelled to lurch forward rapidly to the new location. They were amazed as gradually it grew to what in time will be an adequate and comfortable home. As yet it is still cluttered with much that was ours in the big house, including an accumulation of treasures covering a period of more than fifty years.

(To be concluded.)

Eyes for Spiritual Realities

by E. J. Bohn

OCCASIONALLY we hear someone say, whose eye sight is beginning to grow dim, "What I need is new eyes." In a day when the material has caught our eye to the extent that we at least act as if that was the most important reality for us, we must do something to somehow recover the ability to see essential realities more vividly. That will demand new eyes, or what the Bible calls "vision." It seems that was what Paul was thinking about when he wrote to the Christians at Corinth, "While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." It is precisely for this, the unseen things, that "new eyes" are needed. We have well developed eyes for the seen but not for the unseen.

Our optical structure, with its marvelous retinal system of rods and cones, and its adjustable lens, is well fitted for the perception of colors and shapes of objects. In addition we have greatly enlarged its scope by the invention of the telescope and the microscope. By the means of these inventions we have been enabled to see things which had never been dreamed of in ancient astronomy, physics, and biology. They gave us "new eyes" for things in the heavens and in the earth which we otherwise would have been bound to miss forever.

When Men Depend Only on the Material

But there are realities of a different order that even the wondrous structure of the human eye cannot reveal to us with the aid of any microscope and telescope that was ever invented or ever will be invented. These are the spiritual realities that are so essential for every human being and that he see them sometime in his life. For without them man does not live a truly normal life. Without the unseen realities, he has made his acquaintance with only one dimension in life the material. But man is also made for another dimension, the spiritual or unseen world. It is when he is aware of the latter that he really begins to live.

Plato, the Greek philosopher, long before St. Paul wrote II Corinthians had realized that there must be such an unseen reality as the soul. In fact he had a very exalted estimate of the soul. Plato the pagan philosopher had come to this conviction on the basis of reason, whereas Paul the Christian, as he himself declared, received his Gospel concerning the spiritual realities directly "from Jesus Christ."

As Plato contemplated the nature of man, reason revealed to him that there was more to man that what the human eye could perceive. Without the soul he could not explain man. With the soul he could give an answer to the question, as to what man is and his relation to the invisible, or as he sometimes spoke of it "the highest Good." He was sure that mere unthinking matter could never be an explanation for the kind of world we live in throbbing with life, and above all man, a self-conscious being possessed with the powers of mind.

The history of mankind has revealed what happens to us when we have tried to live a life based only on the material. Then man misses something that is very essential for a normal human life. His outlook on life takes on an aspect of pessimism which sometimes descends to despair. For man has within him, we have learned from long experience, the potentialities of appreciating and enjoying certain great values of life and principles of living which make possible for him a life of a far richer and more abundant sort than mere animal existence. The person who has come to know the meaning of the well known triology of Paul, when he speaks of the great values of faith, hope, and love has seen realities that are not seen through the human eye or ever can be seen in that way. Such a person has developed an "eye" for spiritual realities, which alone can give us an intimation of what the best way of life is, and which can best bring us into communion with God.

Morals to a New Low

Thus, it has always been true that when any civilization has come to have a materialistic outlook on life, the more ultimate and unseen verities by which men live the richest and most abundant lives, have been criwded out. Whenever the material has been considered as sufficient to live by, there has been a consciousness of the lack of a great undergirding Reality which is necessary to give hope and faith in life. Life loses its zest. Then too there is no inspiration for high and noble ethical living. In such periods morals fall to a low ebb. They confirm the words of the writer of Proverbs, "Where there is no vision the people perish." This seems to have been the inevitable outcome of every materialistic age. We may well ask, are we not in danger of this very thing today when many seem to regard the material world as sufficient to live by.

WESTERN DISTRICT

—Emmanuel Church, Moundridge, Kansas: Summer Bible school was again conducted in our church for the children of the community. Forty-seven children were enrolled. Teachers for the three classes were Pastor Garman Wedel, Marie Wedel, and Viola Unruh. The Sunday school fellowship dinner was enjoyed by the congregation Sunday, June 11, in Lenna Square, McPherson, Kansas. The Emmanuel Mission Society raised $692.80 in cash during the past fiscal year. For Foreign Mission work $306.90 was sent. Other projects supported were the Retired-Missionary Pension Fund, Foreign-Student Exchange Fund. Relief, Biblical Seminary, Chicago, as well as numerous other worthwhile causes. Dr. Fred S. Brenneman showed his pictures on Alaska and gave a lecture on his recent trip there in the Emmanuel Church, Sunday, June 18. —Mrs. Garman Wedel, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Oklahoma: Twins were born to Mr. and Mrs. Harold Entz, May 5. They were named William Richard and Barbara Sue. Harvest is in full swing and will be over before long. Several families will go north again with combines.—Wilfred Ewy, Corr.

—Alexanderwohl Church, Goessel, Kansas: Our congregation welcomed the family of Mrs. Enns and her three children on June 2. A grocery shower was given and also a collection was held which amounted to $89.90. We all rejoiced with her. The Hospital sale held the last week in May amounted to eight hundred dollars which is to be divided to get a new washing machine and to complete the new room in the hospital. May the Lord add his blessing.—Mrs. J. C. Reimer, Corr.

—Meadow Church, Colby, Kansas: Since our pastor and family served the Vona, Colorado, church on Mother's Day, the mothers gave a program in our church during the morning services. May 21 the choir together with a number from the church attended and participated in the singing festival at Meade, Kansas. Hartill from Northwestern was the special speaker and was enjoyed by all. May 28 was an eventful day in our church. Fifteen young people were baptized and received into the fellowship of the church. Eleven were baptized in the church during the morning service and four were immersed during the afternoon service. —Mrs. W. H. Regier.

—The Kansas University Mennonite Fellowship met for a communion service the evening of May 21. Waldo Hiebert of the Hillsboro M. B. Church conducted the service. Having completed a year of interesting and successful meetings, the Fellowship plans some activities during the summer session and cordially invites all newcomers to attend.—Walter E. Ewert, Corr.

—Johannestal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: On May 14 we had infant consecration of eight babies. On May 24 a goodly number of the ladies of the church got together for an informal tea which was sponsored by the Mission Society.—Mrs. Arnold A. Plenert, Cor.

—Eden Church, Inola, Oklahoma: Sunday, June 11, two young girls were baptized in the forenoon; in the evening we had holy communion. On Memorial Day, children's day was observed under the trees with a fine program and a sale of the ladies' articles for missionary purposes. Summer Bible schools closed after two weeks of school at two places with an attendance of 37 at one place and 21 at the other. Harvest is here with the finest of weather.—Jacob Froese, Corr.

—Lehigh Church, Lehigh, Kansas: We have just completed a two week Bible school with fifty children enrolled. Children's Day was quite different for us this year in that we had our Sunday school lesson followed by the children's program and a bounteous dinner all at Marion Park. The P. W. Penners spoke and showed pictures at the morning and evening services of Sunday, June 11. The "Y. M. M." is making six layettes for our Indian Missions.—Cor.

—First Church, Geary, Oklahoma: On June 4 two young men were baptized and taken into the church. June 11 Miss Ruth Lehman was united in marriage with Steward Jones from Childress, Texas, in the local church with Pastor A. H. Peters officiating. The Lord richly blessed the vacation Bible school this spring; we had an enrollment of 66 children; this included children 3 years old through high school. The teachers were Mrs. Ida Dalke, E. J. Lehman, and the Pastor and Mrs. Peters.—Corr.

MIDDLE DISTRICT

—First Church, Bluffton, Ohio: Sunday, June 4, J. N. Smucker gave his last sermon as our regular pastor. He will remain with us in the community and the church while carrying out his new duties as editor of THE MENNONITE. Grover T. Soldner of Bluffton will fill the pulpit until the arrival of the new pastor, Alvin Beechy, sometime in August.—Mrs. N. Laurence Burkhalter, Corr.

Elvina Agnes Neufeld, daughter of John and Mrs. Neufeld received the doctor of medicine degree from the University of Illinois on June 16. This degree was granted with honors with Miss Neufeld being singled out for her outstanding grades through this four year course. Next year she will interne in the Swedish Covenant Hospital of Chicago. Incidentally, her cousin, Arthur Thiessen, son of Missionary John Thiessen, has been elected president of the Senior Class of the University of Illinois School of Medicine.

MINISTERS HANDBOOK COMING!

The Conference Headquarters Office staff were highly delighted recently, when from one of the printers who is bidding on the printing of the MINISTERS HANDBOOK we received a little dummy with sample pages already made up, from selected portions of the manuscript prepared by the special committee.

This dummy is prepared in a very attractive deep-blue cloth covered body which, with gold lettering, should furnish a very attractive little pocket-size handbook.

This publication is high on the list of forthcoming General Conference Publications.

Twenty-fifth Anniversary of Youth Organization

AN anniversary may mean many things to many people. To us in the Western District the twenty-fifth retreat anniversary took on new meaning when it became the point of a new beginning at our own retreat grounds.

The anniversary was observed on May 14 with the laying of the cornerstone for the camp dining hall. A good crowd was present for the brief but interesting program.

Albert Gaeddert, chairman of the camp board of trustees, was in charge of the cornerstone ceremony and in his remarks stressed the importance of remembering, as we build this new camp, that Jesus Christ is indeed the cornerstone and that He must be Saviour and Lord of our lives. Inscribed on the cornerstone are the words, "Remember Now Thy Creator" and the date, "1950." Short talks were given by four former retreaters and by Roy Henry, chairman of the retreat program committee. The anniversary address was given by J. H. Langenwalter, who has for more than our twenty-five years of retreating given his life to work with and for young people. A resume of his talk, "The Next Twenty-Five Years," appears in this issue.

A feature of the program was the naming of the camp. Those present voted on three names which the committee had selected from the entries in the camp naming contest sponsored in March. The name which received the largest number of votes was "Camp Mennoscah." This is a combination of "Mennonite" and "Ninnescah," the name of our river. Arthur Waltner of the Pretty Prairie, Kansas, C. E., had suggested Camp Mennoscah and was named the winner of the contest.

The Next Twenty-five Years

by J. H. Langenwalter

THE best way to celebrate an anniversary is to look ahead so that the next twenty-five years may be better. The best way to look ahead today is to heed the injunction of Jesus to His disciples when they wanted to talk about the "success" which they had had in their first attempt. Mark 6:30.31. "And the apostles gathered themselves together to Jesus; and they told Him all things, whatsoever they had done, and whatsoever they had taught. And He said unto them, Come ye yourselves apart into a quiet place, and rest—refresh yourselves—a while. For there were many coming and going, and they had no leisure so much as to eat." Heeding such wisdom really prepares one for what is ahead. Our age needs that kind of approach and these grounds can give opportunity for such experiences.

The coming years will be times for pioneering—going on before—ahead. They will be years for leadership, already prepared and also that still to be developed.

Paul's five-fold admonition in I Corinthians 16:13, and 14 is worthy of our special consideration today.

1. "Watch"—keep a look-out for the kind of things God has in mind for our generation.
2. "Stand fast in the faith"—the confidence that God is really the kind of Being that Jesus said He is, our Father!
3. "Quit you like men"—be human with an upward inflection of that word, neither sub-human nor inhuman.
4. "Be strong"—be becoming strong—open yourselves up to the opportunities which God gives us to draw upon His resources.

5. "Whatsoever ye do, let it be done in Love"—that stream from the heart of God which warms our hearts, strengthens our minds and builds up our spirits for His service.

If there be questions raised during these years, and there probably will be, let us meet them as did an old neighbor of Thomas B. Reed, the noted speaker of the House of Representatives for many years. A visitor from Washington had belittled the crops raised on the bleak hillsides of a farm in Maine. He had closed his rather contemptuous questions with, "Well, what do you raise hereabouts?" The farmer straightened himself up and said, "WE RAISE MEN HEREABOUTS!"

Almighty God, Our Father, we thank Thee for this added opportunity to help young men and young women to find themselves here and to be raised to a higher level of understanding Thy ways for their good and for the good of many whose lives may be blessed through their service. Amen.

The Retreat Program for 1950

THE Retreat Program Committee has as its duty the planning of the summer retreat programs in such a way as to meet the needs of the retreater. The members of that committee feel that the underlying purpose of the Christian retreat is to bring the camper to a closer relationship with God and with Jesus Christ our Savior and Lord. It is felt also that the effectiveness of a camp program depends largely upon its ability to lead the retreater through an experience which is different from his usual round of daily living. This new experience should give him the opportunity to look at life from a different point of view. Perhaps his very desire to attend a retreat springs from an inner urge to withdraw from the ordinary channels of living in order that he might look upon himself, his life, and his religion from a fresh vantage point.

It would seem that the Christian retreat experience should be a supplement to the religious training of the home and church. It could hardly be a substitute for either. Therefore the Committee has endeavored to plan the program in such a way as to supplement the religious training of the retreater; to furnish fresh outlooks, to deepen his convictions, and to lead him to greater devotion and service to God, to Christ, and to the Church.

Early every morning group devotions will be led by members of the staff and by campers. These services—as all others—will of course be held out-of-doors. There will probably also be time for individual campers to withdraw apart from the others, if they wish, to have private devotions following the morning services. Bible courses and courses in Christian Service will be offered under the leadership of missionaries and other church workers. Each evening worship services will be conducted with a committee of campers and the director of the retreat in charge. The final worship period of each retreat will terminate with a commitment and consecration service, during which time each retreater will be given the opportunity to commit or recommit himself to Christ and the work of His kingdom.

The retreat experience should also tend to develop leadership for our churches. The individual's opportunity for development of self-expression and initiative is a vital part of this program. Therefore this summer's retreats will follow a pattern initiated last year in regard to the actual planning of each day's activities. A retreaters' planning committee will be selected by the retreaters themselves. The function of this committee is to work with the director and retreat leaders in order to arrange the day's activities within the program set up by the Retreat Program Committee. It is felt that through such retreater participation the responsibility of the retreater will be heightened, and perhaps his basic needs will be more adequately met.

Closely related to this apporach will be the Retreaters' Forum, in which the campers will decide what topics shall be discussed at each morning's discussion period. It is our belief that the leader of such a discussion group will more wholeheartedly give himself to leading a forum were he knows his subject springs directly from those participating. For the retreater it will mean that he will more easily ask questions and otherwise participate when he is aware of his part in the forum setup. Such a setup is enthusiastically approved by those retreaters who participated in this type of forum conducted at our young people's retreats last summer.

In addition to the activities mentioned above there will be the afternoon hours for rest periods, crafts, hikes, fishing, and other sports and activities which may be decided upon by the staff and campers. In the evening there will be campfire, singing and recreation. And of course there are always camp chores!

Plans are being made to have an intermediate retreat, two young peoples' retreats, and a retreat for adults. Details for each of these retreats are now available to those who are interested in the retreat programs. All who attend the retreats at our own grounds at Camp Mennoscah should receive a special blessing from their experiences as they work, plan, play, and worship together in God's great out-of-doors.

How the Camp Came to Be

THE idea of having a camp of our own was born in the late summer of 1944 while our young people's retreat was being held at Camp Wood. It is doubtful whether any one of those who first talked about the matter had a very clear idea of all that would be involved in such a venture. Until that time, camping experience for most of us had been limited to five days each summer at Camp Wood, an established Y.M.C.A. camp which was equipped with almost every modern convenience. We had really never done any "camping," and it is probably safe to say that our dream of a camp of our own was a picture similar to this one camp which we knew fairly well—with a few improvements thrown in. Whatever we thought at that time, suffice it to say that the dream was born; and although during the next few years many difficulties were encountered, the dream was not allowed to die.

The story of how our camp site was selected and some of the details leading up to its purchase more than two years ago has been recounted previously in these pages. What concerns us at this time is the plan for the development of this 160-acre tract of farm land into a Mennonite camp with high Christian ideals, a place where the young people of our churches—and their elders, too—may come for spiritual renewal, for new challenges to Christian living and Christian service.

When a group of inexperienced persons begins to think in terms of camp site development, that in itself presents a problem. It is, at first, a case of trial and error—much trial and almost as much error. We discover, at length, that there are books on the subject, and that there are also experienced individuals who can help. And so the work moves on. Much goes into this kind of venture: thinking and planning, hoping and dreaming, discussion and argument, hard physical, labor, and, above all, persevering faith and prayer.

Final agreements for the purchase of the first 80 acres were accomplished too late in 1948 to permit camping on the new site that year. Also, the owners of the land were given the option to continue living on the place until March, 1950. This arrangement turned out to be both a problem and an advantage; a problem, because many aspects of the development program could not be undertaken until we actually had possession; an advantage, because we soon discovered that although we were anxious to move ahead, our plans for this new venture were more nebulous and unorganized than we had at first realized, and we were not ready to begin actual work. If it is true that slow, hard growth results in a good product, we should have the beginning of a good camp; for this was no "mushrooming" process.

With many misgivings it was finally decided that we should try to hold the 1949 retreats at the new camp site. The arguments against such an adventure were many, for there were no buildings available for our use. But there were also arguments for trying something new: giving our young people the opportunity of real out-door living, letting them become acquainted with the camp site, and getting their ideas on camp development.

The experiences of those who had the responsibility for the "physical plant" for the 1949 camps, if faithfully set down, would make interesting reading for camp managers. Before the camping season ended, many campers and leaders had learned some elementary lessons in the art of improvising, thereby enriching their lives and learning anew that not all lessons are found in books. The three small groups of campers who availed themselves of this new experience were unanimous in pronouncing this type of retreat a success, some of them suggesting that cabins would be entirely unnecessary because they much preferred to sleep out under the stars.

By this means and through many other avenues, interest in the project has grown. In the fall of 1949 it became evident that definite steps must be taken to decide what direction that camp development program should take. The former owners of the first 80 acres were ready to leave the farm; a second 80, adjoining the first tract to the east, had been added in the spring of 1949. There was farm land that could produce for the benefit of the camp. But how to handle this—that was the problem.

It was at this time that Adam and Helen Mueller offered their services and expressed their willingness to go out as caretakers to manage the farm and supervise the building program. The committees gave much prayerful thought to this matter, and after due deliberation it was at length decided to accept the offer and send the Muellers out to pioneer on this frontier. On April 1, 1950, they moved into the farm house on the camp site and since that time have been giving their time and strength fully to this work.

The work is done in consultation and cooperation with an administrative committee made up of five members who are representatives of the three elected committees of the Western District Young People's C. E. Fellowship. The Muellers work on a salary basis and all income from the place flows into the camp treasury. Donations of livestock and equipment become the property of the camp and are used for its benefit. All farm work is done by horsepower and manpower.

Since April 1, the cultivated land has been seeded or planted to crops suitable to the type of soil. Approximately 50 acres east of the river was plowed and seeded into Sand Lovegrass by volunteers from the Bethany Church of Kingman, the Mennonite church nearest to the camp. Electricity has been brought to the camp. The farm buildings are equipped with power, and everything is set for connecting the camp buildings when they are ready.

The most outstanding piece of work which has been done is the dining hall foundation. The site for the building was levelled on Thursday, May 4. On Friday volunteer workers—both boys and girls—from several churches dug the trenches for the foundation. More volunteers from other churches came on Saturday to pour the footing. The forms for the foundation were built and set on Monday, May 8, by 19 volunteers, and the next day, with the help of other volunteers, the foundation was poured. Approximately 80 different workers helped with this job.

This marked the beginning of the actual building program at the camp. This is what our young people have been waiting for. More volunteers are ready to come to continue the work. The committee hopes that it will be possible to complete at least the shell of the dining hall before the end of the summer. The availability of building materials and necessary funds will be determining factors in this.

Another project which should be undertaken promptly is the building of the maintenance road from the township road to the building site. Many other things need to be done, such as planting trees and doing an overall landscaping job. There will be conservation work, too, to keep the river from washing away the soil. There must be wise and careful planning, and there is room for suggestions and help of every kind—physical, mental, spiritual, financial.

This project is not a job to be done by the caretakers or even by the committee: this job is the responsibility of every person in the Western District who believes that God works in many and mysterious ways to touch the hearts of young people to win them to Himself. Our prayer in this work is best expressed in the words of Purd E. Dietz:

"O keep us building, Master; may our hands
Ne'er falter when the dream is in our hearts, . . . "

Beyond Our Own

The Presbyterian Church has accepted a new goal in its drive to give new homes to Europe's Displaced Persons. Last month the Church's General Assembly, with one of the heartiest voice votes of the whole meeting, agreed to add another one thousand assurances to the Church's first goal of 2,000 because of the new DP legislation passed by Congress. — Presbyterian Life

GENEVA — Two Evangelical pastors in Dusseldorf, Germany, have recently returned from the USSR after being granted unexpected pardons from sentences of 25 years hard labor. To mark their return, their parishes held services of thanksgiving. Covenant Weekly

A list of 40 speakers headed by Billy Graham, Robert A. Cook, Torrey M. Johnson, Stuart Hamblen, Harold J. Cook announced that at least 20 representatives of foreign countries will be present. Watchman-Examiner

The Foreign Missions Conference has voted to join the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., the new interdenominational organization. At a special meeting called exclusively to consider merger with the Council, 86 delegates of 45 mission boards and agencies of 32 denominations, by a vote of 76 to 7, decided to dissolve the Conference in favor of the new agency.— Watchman-Examiner

Book Notes

Summer brings Independence Day and with it thoughts of our government and our responsibility to our country. The following titles would be especially stimulating reading at this season:

Brown, William Adams, Church and State in Contemporary America. Scribners. 1936

This book is a study of the relation between church and state throughout the world, particularly Germany and Russia. It considers the contemporary scene in America but also dwells on the possibilities of the future. "It has something of interest for all church members." An 18 page bibliography increases the value of the book.

Gabriel, Ralph H., The Spiritual Origins of American Culture. This is Hazen Pamphlet No. 14 published in 1945.

Jones, E Stanley, Christ of the American Road. 1944. Abingdon.

The author discusses "how we can apply the Christian creed to our own social problems" A few chapter headings are, "What and Where is America?", "The Central Genius of American Democracy," "The Gap between our Faith and our Government." The last two chapters in the book are "new and fresh," discussing an "Emerging American interpretation of Christianity" and "Future Religious Development in this country." According to T. C. Johnson the author here is "indeed a prophet worthy of honor in his own country."

When We See the Spiritual Realities

Note what happens to the people who have had an "eye" for the spiritual realities of life. We may especially note some examples from the Bible. The word "behold" is a frequent one in the Bible. One is almost surprised how often it appears when scanning through its pages. It is really calling on the reader to see the spiritual realties which he is bound to miss with the human eye. We are asked to see with "new eyes." When Nicodemus comes to Jesus by night, our Lord asks him to see with "new eyes." At least we have the implication there that before Nicodemus can see the kind of Kingdom that Jesus is talking about he will have to see with a new set of "eyes." When Jesus appeared on the banks of the Jordan, John said "Behold the Lamb of God." Others had not seen Jesus in that humble role, but John did. He had an "eye for something more than the material. After Saul of Tarsus' Damascus Road experience, we read "immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales." Paul the Christian now began to see the spiritual realities and their possibilities in a more abundant life of service with Christ so that he could finally say, "For me to live is Christ." He now saw more than words and letters or legalistic precepts, but spiritual realities which began to dominate his life in a new way. It changed him from Saul the persecutor of Christ to Paul the great lover of Christ; from a man who was in despair concerning his spiritual life to a man of great faith and hope in the possibilities of the Good life in Christ, which is indicated by his words, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me;" and his deep insight into the grace of God, "agape" kind of love, enables him to write with such penetrating vision the great love chapter of the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians.

One can see that when men have had faith in the spiritual reality undergirding all the universe, and all that is therein, that then they have had an "eye" for the great invisibles which can not be "holden" by the material. Then life takes on new meaning and purpose, for there is faith in a perfect and eternal one who demands our best efforts and highest loyalty.

Looking Toward Freeman

In "Looking Toward Freeman" it would be well for all of us who expect to go to Freeman to "look to Jesus" for guidance and direction and blessing. All of us who plan to attend the General Conference believe the Lord has a particular mission for our denomination, and we need to come to the Lord in prayer so that we may discern that mission.

Then, as we leave Freeman, having received our orders and leading of the Lord, we need to give ourselves in faithfulness and loyalty to the whole work of the whole church. It is essential that we give our moral and prayerful support to the plans that will come out of Freeman. We must not go "everyone his own way" and divert our loyalties to interests without.

In "looking toward Freeman" we should all endeavor to be an inspiration to each other in faith and service. The cords of faith need to be lengthened and the stakes of service need to be strengthened. We should acquire both at Freeman.

Editorials

DISTANCE IS A MAJOR PROBLEM in maintaining the sense of unity necessary to do effective work as a Conference. This problem is being overcome in several ways. One of these is the sending out to churches and district conferences of missionaries, relief workers, and others, who report on the work that they are doing in the name of Christ and the Conference in various lands and various ministries the world over. But with the tremendous need for the personnel on the field the amount of work along this line that can be done is limited. Furthermore, it may be questioned whether it is best for the work on the field to demand excessive blocks of time from the missionary's furlough for the rather rugged task of travelling throughout the churches. The more of this that can be done, the better; but successful work on the field demands that a larger portion of the missionary's time must be spent in a more creative way such as providing opportunity of developing other missionary techniques. For some time now the Conference has employed a full-time executive secretary, whose duty it is to visit churches and district conferences for the purpose of keeping the personal touch with these groups. Some of the boards occasionally send representatives to the various district conferences. More of these should carry with them displays of material to be set up so that appeal through the eye-gate may be fully utilized. District conferences are becoming more and more alert to the fact that they can do their own work much better if they are aware of the relationship they have to the total Conference task; consequently, they are making room on their programs for General Conference representatives. Finally, our Conference publications are the silent messengers that help to bind together the minds and hearts and hands of our people in a common task. All these are part of our total missionary effort, and since the General Conference assembles only once in three years the above methods represent an irreducible minimum as means of keeping ourselves conscious of the widespread, many-sided task, commissioned to us by the Lord.

IN CONNECTION WITH THE LATTER means, namely publications, the coming General Conference at Freeman in August will be presented with an opportunity to extend its mission of binding together the hearts of our people around our common task of reaching a lost and bleeding world with the saving and healing gospel. We refer to the plan for the Universal Distribution of our Conference weeklies—THE MENNONITE and DER BOTE. This plan which was explained in detail in the April 4th and May 9th issues of THE MENNONITE (pages 232 and 344) is concerned with the fact that about two-thirds of our churches, 160 out of 240, in the General Conference have no systematic coverage of their membership as far as the Conference publications are concerned. Just how far can we fulfill the will of God as a Conference if only a third of our churches see to it that the Conference weekly gets into every home? Is it any wonder that non-Conference groups both missionary and relief as well as other causes drain off thousands of dollars from amounts that should go toward our own work merely because they understand the printing costs of the materials they send to our people to be an integral part of the missionary task? The Central District is enough concerned about thois problem that they are financing the Christian Evangel, their monthly paper, out of their conference treasury and they see to it that it gets into every home of their district. All the boards of our Conference have approved a plan to get THE MENNONITE or DER BOTE into every Conference home. Under the plan each church of the Conference will be invited to submit its list of addresses of its homes; the local churches will be invited to contribute a nominal amount per member, but the payment is optional and whatever the churches do not contribute on this basis will be distributed among the various boards in equitable proportions. Information is basic to unity and fulfilment of our God-given task. If we are determined to work together, the above plan should receive the instant approval of delegates at Freeman in August.

DECISION HILL ought to be prominent on the horizon of every retreat program. No group of young people should meet for the period of worship, study, recreation, and fellowship involved in a retreat without coming face to face with the finality of Christ's claim upon their lives. Here we are not talking about prematurely forcing upon youth a vocational choice nor forcing the experience of youth into one mold. Christ has need of followers in many vocations, and He wins His way into the hearts of people by different ways. But the basic need of conversion and whole-hearted consecration must be kept at the forefront as the starting-point for anyone who is to be useful to Christ and His church. Decision is the point at which we decide to let the facts of the gospel take on flesh and blood in our lives.

ONE OF THE SUREST ways to wreck the progress of any group-work is to inject the element of suspicion. The Hartford Courant recently stated that with this "morbid suspicion" it ". . . is getting so that every American is willing to suspect anyone, and forget their standards in the process . . ." Some one else has called it a practice of "methodic dubitation"—a studied doubt of the words of others evidencing a lack of trust. Now we would certainly not mean to suggest the opposite extreme of closing one's eyes in complete and uncritical acquiesence, which would be similarly destructive. In between there is a road of patient, longsuffering desire to understand, which demands that the whole of the other person must be regarded as sacred. This is the road of the Christ who kept on loving Judas while he systematically walked in the way of death. This is the road of the Christ who would not disqualify a Peter who in the most critical moment proved his disloyalty in the threefold denial. Children of redemption, not condemnation, should persistently and patiently reach out to others.

The Open Window

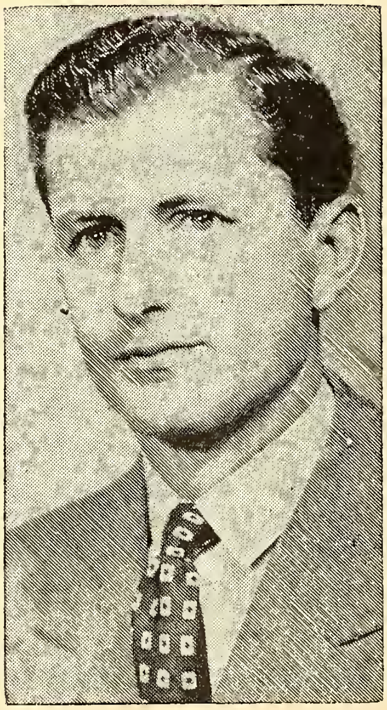
by John B. Graber

"NOW his windows were open in his chamber towards Jerusalem." (Dan. 6:10).

Probably nothing speaks so eloquently in the story of Daniel the prophet as the incident of the open windows and all its associations. It is worthy its place in this book that records the purest heroisms, the most lustrous fidelities, and the holiest patiences of history. It rises in significance as one remembers Daniel's exalted position in the Assyrian Empire. He was one of the three presidents who shared among them the highest official dignity of the kingdom, and it was already whispered in the city that the king had a mind to set him still higher, giving him honor and power above the other two. Yet in spite of this station and rank Daniel does not falter but is seen in the fulness of his spiritual stature.

The Place of the Open Window

Daniel, in all probability, was grandly housed since the Assyrians were known for their architecture and art. The suite of rooms he used was on the western front and always had its lattices thrown open. The man who looked out through them was a Jew who was away from the land of his people and the temple of his God. There was all the pathos of exile in that far gaze. Babylon could never be to this man what Jerusalem must ever be. It had given to him those things that are much to many men—place, power, wealth, but it was not rich enough to give him a home.



John B. Graber, Pastor
West Zion Church
Moundridge, Kansas

How similar is the experience of Daniel to that of every Christian. He too finds himself in a Babylon. Upon entering a saving relationship with Jesus Christ he is suddenly made aware that the world from which he has been redeemed is in open antagonism to the things of God. Though being instantly justified before God and made a fit subject for heaven, he is now removed from the world but left in it to bear a testimony against it.

Thus to every believer the world becomes the great impediment to Christian life and growth. In Daniel's day it was full of spurious divinities, fascinating enticements, and gross immorality. King Darius had just signed a decree making prayer to the God of Daniel illegal for thirty days. Our world is no different from Daniel's. Ours is a day of jazz orchestras, night clubs, comic strips, liquor and tobacco advertisements shrieking palpable lies, idle card-playing parties, itching ears giving heed to cheapjacks, harassed folk seeking the delicious delusion of public applause, and striving for the gratifications of the passing moment. This is our Babylon. Here is where we too have the western window of the soul thrown open towards the heavenly Jerusalem in order that we might overcome. How clear the the teaching of the New Testament at this point: "Love not the world neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world" (1 John 2:15,16).

The Perspective of the Open Window

Daniel's open window afforded for him a fresh and constant intimacy with his native Jerusalem. He loved the meanest street in the city of his people better than all the stately palaces of Babylon. Babylon could not minister to the few elemental needs of his life. The true worship was found only in Jerusalem, therefore, it was his soul's native land. His daily prayer beside the open window kept ever in his awareness the oneness of Jehovah God and the stern morality of Judaism over against the idolatry and sensuality of Babylon. Furthermore, this trysting hour provided the needed succor to live above the world about him.

Like Daniel we too have a distant Jerusalem for which our souls yearn. As pilgrims and strangers here we seek, like Abraham, for "a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." The breath from the open window keeps us aware of the new life in Christ Jesus. It constantly reminds us that we are not only creatures of time but heirs of eternity. It makes us conscious of a spiritual realm of which we are ambassadors and from whence we receive our sustenance. We are not heaven-seekers. That we have already found in the Lord Jesus Christ. We are but travellers on the way to the New Jerusalem interpreting life in its light.

The Product of the Open Window

The hours were not vain that Daniel spent at the open lattice. It produced in Daniel a holy life. When his enemies were searching for a place whereby they might dethrone him the consensus was: "We shall not find any occasion against this Daniel except we find it against him concerning the law of his God." Another product was a vigorous faith. The law of the Medes and Persians

Northern District Conference Convenes

An Editorial Report

MOUNTAIN LAKE, MINNESOTA.—The Northern District Conference met for its 57th session at the beautiful re-built Gospel Mennonite Church at Mountain Lake, Minnesota, June 10-14. The general theme of the Conference was "The Supremacy of Christ." This theme was woven into the various programs by the women's organization and in the youth sessions as well as held dominant in the main sessions of the Conference.

Mission Service on Sunday

The services on Sunday were held at the high school auditorium to accommodate the large group in attendance. The mission speaker was John Thiessen who has spent thirty years as missionary in India. In his morning talk he gave the historical background and development of the India mission field, which this year celebrates its 50th anniversary. In the evening meeting Missionary Thiessen spoke on what mission work really is like.

The Conference sermon was delivered on Sunday afternoon by George Dick of Bloomfield, Montana, this year's Conference president, on "The Sufficiency of Christ."

Monday and Tuesday Business Meetings.

The main business sessions of the Conference were held Monday and Tuesday forenoon. Under the able presiding officer the work moved forward in orderly fashion. There were also inspirational messages; Monday forenoon by L. H. Linscheid of Freeman South Dakota speaking on the theme, "The Supremecy of Christ in relation to Humanity." In the afternoon J. D. Unruh of Freeman, South Dakota brought a fine report of the work of the M.C.C. in Europe where he has recently worked.

One unique feature of the Conference was a forum on Tuesday forenoon when the three members of the business committee spoke on the three views of the Millenium; pre-millenialism, post-millenialism and a-millenialism, each presenting the views commonly held by those of the group he represented.

Separate Meetings on Tuesday Afternoon

The Women's Missionary Society had their program on Tuesday afternoon under the general theme of The Supremacy of Christ in Women's Missionary Societies." At the same time there was also a program by the men with reports from South America and the Detroit Peace Conference.

Young People's Day

The young people had their meeting on Wednesday with the general topic of "The Supremacy of Christ in Young People's Lives." During the forenoon the Conference communion service was observed.

Delegates and Officers

There were delegates and visitors from eleven states. The Ernest Crouses from Germany were present and had part in the program.

One new church was accepted into membership, the First Church of Glendive, Montana where Leonard Harder is the pastor. Next year the conference will convene at Munich, North Dakota.

Some Unusual Features

This is the one Conference where there is still no charge made for meals, the host church bearing this expense.

The children were not forgotten. There was a picnic provided for them and then special programs of their age levels.

The communion service was held in connection with the Youth-day program instead of during the adult sessions.

The Mountain Lake communities love to sing. There were a number of fine choruses,—some consisting of as many as 60 voices,—from the various churches of the community. Another special feature was a Junior Choir from Freeman.

The Peace Committee gave a strong report with emphasis on the part ministers and churches take in holding this great doctrine before youth. The special men's meeting also showed much interest in the matter of peace.

There was also much praise by visitors on behalf of the fine place of worship the host church has provided for itself. God's blessing was manifest throughout the conference, each day starting out with a special prayer service.—J.N.S.

had decreed for Daniel thirty prayerless days. Babylon had challenged Jerusalem. It had pitted its powers against the powers of the God of Daniel. Babylon had a law that altereth not. So had Daniel. When he knew the king had signed the degree he went to the accustomed place, "and gave thanks before his God as he did afore time." The final product of Daniel's open window was a telling testimony. Whenever the heavenly unalterable and the earthly unalterable meet, one has always to alter, and it is never the heavenly. Babylon was never more surprised in all its life than on the morning that Daniel was found unharmed in the lion's den. Babylon, like the world, thought that the den of lions was the final act in the story of one who for the sake of his God defies the world. Babylon did not know that when Daniel was thrown into the lion's den he fell into the hands of a living God.

May the story of the open window be the experience of us all. We can only face a hostile and sinful world like Daniel of old in the light of life's western window. It is there that we become stronger than Babylon because we are enabled to see beyond Babylon. Only by a daily fellowship with our Lord Jesus can we keep the shadow of Babylon's favor and fierceness from between ourselves and the Holy City, and be assured of a great deliverance in the day of testing.

Harder Heads Pacific District

by Willard W. Wiebe

DALLAS, OREGON.—Sixty miles south of Portland, Oregon, is the beautiful city of Dallas where the fifty-first session of the Pacific District Conference convened from June 14 to 18. This lovely city of nearly five thousand population, with three large Mennonite churches of as many different conferences, is located in a rich farming and lumber community. Gathering in the Grace Mennonite Church where J. J. Regier now serves as pastor, one hundred and fifty-five delegates and visitors represented the tweny-one churches from the four western states of Washington, Oregon, California, and Idaho. The newly remodeled Mennonite Brethren Church of that city was also graciously made available to the conference for dining facilities and some of the larger evening sessions.

The Conference theme, "Good Stewards of the Manifold Grace of God," proved a fitting description of the spirit of this annual gathering which began on Wednesday with separate and combined pre-conference committee meetings and continued Thursday with an all day Worker's Conference. On that evening the conference sermon, delivered by Paul N. Roth, president of the Pacific District, officially opened the business sessions. Friday and Saturday saw this body of Christians busy with the work of the Lord.

Actions Taken

Some of the reports to the Conference and actions taken revealed amongst other things: a broadening of the field of evangelization and missions, the adoption of a set of Sunday school and Christian Endeavor standards to be used as guides and goals in the churches of the district, a concern for a greater understanding and application of the doctrine of peace and non-resistance, the passing of a new budget totaling $7,040, etc. It was interesting to note that 85% of every Conference dollar went directly into mission work.

Reports of the auxiliary organizations of the Conference also gave the delegates great reason for rejoicing. During the past Conference year the laymen of this district financed the building of a chapel at the Conference mission at Sweet Home, Oregon. The Women's Missionary Association have as a special project the partial support of the training of Miss Elvina Neufeld of Chicago, a future medical missionary to India. The Young People's Union reported the continuation of their support of Missionary Malcolm Wengers in Montana. These were some of the actions taken by the auxiliaries which lended appropriate meaning to the conference theme, "Good Stewards of the Manifold Grace of God."

Visiting Speakers

Visiting speakers added greatly to the "mountain top" experience of these days. J. N. Smucker, president of the General Conference and editor of THE MENNONITE, the Alfred Habeggers, missionaries to the Cheyenne Indians in Montana and Arthur Jost, administrator of The King's View Home, our west coast mental hospital, all brought messages and reports of inspiration and challenge to the conference.

Special programs during these days rounded out the conference program with added interest. On Tuesday evening, just prior to the Wednesday meeting of the conference committees, the dedication service for the new chapel at the Sweet Home Mission took place. This mission is located about 65 miles southeast of Dallas. Friday evening the Young People held their annual banquet after which the program of the Women's Missionary Association was held. The Young People's program was given Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon the Oregon ministers were responsible for a musical program.

The conference came to a close on Sunday evening in the local high school auditorium as new officers were installed and a missionary challenge was given by Alfred Habegger.

Harder, New President

Officers of the Pacific District Conference serving in this coming year are as follows:

President, H. N. Harder of Aberdeen, Idaho; vice-president, Clyde H. Dirks of Portland, Oregon; secretary, M. D. Linscheid of Aberdeen, Idaho; treasurer Jno. C. Jantz of Portland, Oregon.

The following are serving on conference committees: Evangelization Committee, W. Harley King of Paso Robles, California, P. D. Unruh of Colfax, Washington and W. A. Regier of Pratum, Oregon; Education Committee, J. H. Ensz of Visalia, California, Mrs. Ira Stevanus of Los Angeles, California and Paul N. Roth of Canby, Oregon; Peace Committee, Edgar Nafziger of Pratum, Oregon, F. J. Wiens of Portland, Oregon and Willard W. Wiebe of Lind, Washington; Business Committee, Ben Rahn of Paso Robles, California, George W. Kopper of Monroe, Washington and Dan Toavs of Lynden, Washington. The new editor of The Workers' Exchange is Clyde H. Dirks of Portland, Oregon.

The leaders of the auxiliary organizations of the conference are Mrs. H. N. Harder, president of the Women's Missionary Association; F. J. Wiens, president of the Men's Brotherhood; Mrs. Alfred Schwartz, president of the Young People's Union.

Abe Lincoln's father was never at a loss for an answer. An old neighbor of Thomas Lincoln was passing the Lincoln farm one day when he saw Abe's father grubbing up some hazelnut bushes and said to him:

"Why, Grandpop, I thought you wanted to sell your farm?"

"And so I do," he replied, "but I ain't goin' to let my farm know it."

"Abe's jes' like his father," the old ones would say.

2,320,000,000 is the total population of the world according to latest estimates. Over one-half live in Asia, 9% in North America, and 17% in Europe exclusive of Russia for which no figures are available.

Central Area Hospital Discussed

AKRON, PA.—The committee appointed to study the development of a Mennonite mental hospital in the Central area, met on June 5 at Newton, Kansas. Representing the various Mennonite groups, the committee members gave attention to a number of questions dealing with the anticipated hospital project. Their suggestions, including the selection of the hospital location in Kansas, and various other steps in preparation for the launching of the project, will be further considered by the M.C.C. Executive Committee.

It is expected that as soon as the present building program for Kings View Homes, the West Coast M.C.C. Mental Hospital, is consumnated, the Central Area project can be undertaken.

Correspondence Opportunity

Recently a number of letters have been received from young people, mostly men, in Japan who desire to correspond with American young people. They are able to use the English language, and seem to have an intense desire for correspondents. This appears as a unique opportunity, not merely to establish acquaintance with a youth in the Orient, but may also be of real witness value. Persons interested should write to the M. C.C., Akron, Pa., giving name, address, age, sex, educational and vocational information, and any special interests in the letter exchange.

Voluntary Service Notes

Visits to Summer Service units over a period of 3 to 6 weeks are being planned by Lois Gunden of Goshen College, Edna Ramseyer of Bluffton College, and Roy Roth, pastor of a Mennonite church near Peoria, Ill. Their assignments include orienting units, counselling with leaders and members, giving a spiritual ministry, and leading discussion groups on how the summer's experience can be applied in the home community and church.

Plans have just been completed for a unit of three to five girls at the Bethania Home for the Aged in Manitoba.

The Eighth Orientation School for Voluntary Service enrollees was to open July 1, with seven members. These persons will be assigned to community service at Gulfport, Miss.; mental hospital work in Topeka, Kansas; and at the Brook Lane Farm in Maryland, construction work at Reedley, Calif.; migrant work near Winton, Calif.; work at Santa Clara, Mexico; and service at the M.C.C. offices at Waterloo, Ont.; and Akron, Pa.

The next Orientation School is planned for September 1. Any persons interested in joining the group should send application to Voluntary Service, M.C.C., Akron, Pa. Additional volunteers can be used in the units mentioned above and in work with children in the Industrial Home School Annex in Washington, D.C.

Industry in the Chaco

David Schrag recently sent a report giving observations on the status of industry in the Mennonite colonies in the Paraguayan Chaco. Crops which must be sold as exports in the raw state usually bring a very small return. However, if a finished or semi-finished product can be made from the raw material, the return is much greater. Herein is a challenge to both the colonies and the M.C.C. which is concerned in assisting the colonies.

Much has been done in the various colonies to make smaller or larger industries possible. The gifts-in-kind program has provided valuable equipment. Special efforts in providing burr mills, saw mills, oil presses, a cotton gin, machine tools, and other equipment have been very helpful. In some cases individual colonists have developed private industries; while in other cases the group uses the cooperative method.

A great deal remains to be accomplished in helping the colonies to utilize properly the economic potential which is at their disposal in the form of natural and other resources.

Follow-up Work Reveals Needs

The workers at the Weiler Children's Home in France have been making special efforts to visit homes of children who had earlier been cared for in the Home. In some cases a discouraging picture is seen, where children who were brought to health and happiness, once again are in the midst of poverty, hunger, and filth. Then one wonders what lasting values were given to them, and if anything more could have been done for them.

Yet there is encouraging evidence. One hears a child in the midst of need, singing the songs he learned in the MCC Home; one notes that while another child no longer has rosy cheeks and smiling face, he nevertheless has not been ill from extended malnutrition, as might have been otherwise; one feels the deep appreciation of a mother who now again is able to care for the child which she could not provide for during a period of need. These values, and others even more intangible, confirm that the work is worth while and effective in sowing seed that may yield fruit.

Leaders Interview Immigration Official

A delegation of five Mennonite leaders called upon Deputy Commissioner A. R. Mackey of the U. S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, on June 12 to express the attitude of the Mennonite churches regarding recent measures which have been introduced before Congress, particularly by Senator Cair and McCarren, which would deny U. S. citizenship to applicants who are unable for religious reasons to bear arms in defense of the country. The delagation, consisting of John L. Stauffer, Noah G. Good, Wilmer S. Shelly, William T. Snyder, and J. Harold Sherk was cordially received by Mr. Mackey and Assistant Commissioner A. C. Devaney, and gave the testimony through a written statement as well as oral discussion.

Dutch Peace Group Reports Activity

The Mennonite Peace Group in Holland recently issued a report on it past year's activity. The Peace Bureau, an advisory service to conscientious objectors, served 86 individuals, 45 of whom were Men-

Church-Related Colleges Need

College-Related Churches

by H. J. Long

CHRISTIAN colleges were born out of a great heartfelt need and will only be perpetuated by a sense of that same need. The responsibility lies in the lap of the church and Christian public as to whether the Christian college with her glorious record is now going out or whether she is now coming into her highest usefulness. May we direct this question to you: Is your church college-related? Much has been written about church-related colleges but may we reverse the question and then break it into several?

1. Is it college-related in that it is making full use of the facilities that your college has provided for you, such as music groups, supply ministers, youth leaders and speakers for community organizations?

2. Is your church sending its young people to its church-related college and thereby insuring them a Christian education?

3. Is your pastor a booster for Christian education or does he sacrifice that ideal on the altar of keeping his young people at home because the church needs them so badly?

4. Is the church financially supporting the Christian college in proportion to its contribution to the welfare of society? If so, she will come into her own with a future more glorious than her past. If not, her story will soon be written. Do you have a vision for your church college? That vision must be implemented by the real business of providing the young people for whom the whole program exists.

To do this task will call for a three-way sacrifice. First, it will require Christian young people with an independence of spirit who are willing to work hard and sacrifice several hundred dollars annually for a Christian education rather than to follow a line of less resistance and accept a secular education in the tax-supported school, having it largely provided for them.

Second, it is going to require a devotion on the part of college staff and administrative officers not expected of those in institutions which are tax-supported. It has been said that teachers are what they are being paid. Nowhere is this truth as striking as in the Christian college, for one of the largest contributions keeping the average Christian college going, is that service contribution of its faculty members, in some cases conservatively estimated at a minimum of one thousand dollars annually per staff member.

These two contributions still leave the picture incomplete. Thirdly, the church and Christian public likewise have an important part to play which is a two-fold one. Are you sending your young people to the Christian college or is your son an exception who ought to gain the prestige that a large tax-supported institution can give him? Then there is a great deal of consecrated money in the hands of Christian people. Much of this money will eventually go to some phase of God's Kingdom. Where would it pay greater dividends than to be invested in a Christian college where it will serve all future generations of Christian youth? The Christian public has a powerful voice in answering the question as to whether the Christian college is coming or going. Reprinted from College and Church.

Girls' Homes in Canada

THERE are four such homes as follows: "Ebenezer" Winnipeg, Manitoba; "Mary-Martha," Vancouver, B. C.; Saskatoon Home; and Calgary Home.

Many girls from Mennonite homes turn to the larger cities in order to earn money. During the fall, winter and spring the largest number of girls make use of the four girls' homes, when the work on the farms is slack.

Through many years of service, we are pleased to say that Mennonite girls have earned and received the compliment of being trustworthy and diligent workers. Most of the girls start with housework. Later on they attend night school and there prepare themselves for other lines of work. The demand has always been greater than supply.

Sixty girls used "Ebenezer Home" Winnipeg as their headquarters last winter at one time. Ninety-seven came to the "Mary-Martha Home" Vancouver. Seventy-eight in the Vancouver group came from the recent immigrant homes. Most of these girls help their parents to pay off the travel debt.

The other two homes are not quite as large but in each case a valuable service is rendered to those who desire to work and those who want workers.

The girls cannot all find rooms in the girls' homes but they spend much of their "free" time in the homes on Thursday and Sunday afternoon and evening. Arrangements are made for a special Bible study hour by one of the ministers on Thursday evening. On Sunday evenings the girls attend worship services and many sing in the choirs.

Often the girls do fancy work in their leisure hours. Usually they have a Mission Sale once a year and the proceeds are used for Relief Missions, or the fixing up of the Home.

We praise the Lord for the many testimonies that have come to the Board that these Christian Homes have been a blessing to scores of girls.—A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary, Board of Home Missions

Retirement on the Field

by Mrs. Rodolphe Petter

NOW relieved from many chores, a big house with furnace and stoker created for a woman, also relieved from the care of a mission station, which means far more than just teaching and preaching, I have felt much freer than ever for things I like to do most. I enjoy my adult Cheyenne Bible class. I enjoy daily contacts with the Indians as they come and go, either just to visit or to serve me.

I had not been in the home long, when one evening there was a gentle rap on the door. I hestitated to open, but did. There stood a prominent man of the tribe, meekly asking to come in. "I was here before, but you were not at home, so I came again. I want to talk to you."

A Cheyenne Nicodemus

I sensed at once that here was a real Cheyenne Nicodemus. Here was an honored leader of his people, gentle, courteous, serious-minded, inquiring about the true worship of the Saviour. Naturally I at once turned to the third chapter of John and read and explained in Cheyenne (he speaks no English) what Jesus said was urgent, namely a new birth, to inherit the Kingdom.

In the summer a Wac, whom I knew from childhood, and whose parents I knew, came home for a visit after an absence of nine years. She came often to see me, and finally said she would like to join our church and be baptized. It was a great joy for me to guide and encourage her and then to offer at times the use of my car to bring her to the station for the instruction. It was hot and the Enemy was placing hindrances in her way.

One evening as I was taking her home after Brother Habegger had instructed her, she just bubbled over, "Oh, I feel so good inside and out. I am so relieved. A great burden has rolled off. Oh, we Cheyennes have such a wonderful language."

Conversion of a Wac

Although she had been away from the reservation so long, she preferred that the baptismal service be in Cheyenne. It meant more to her than in English. We truly sat as in heavenly places when Irene stood erect, tall, stately, well-groomed and intent, as she made her responses and then knelt for the rite of baptism. Scarcely was the benediction pronounced, when the entire congregation arose as one to press forward eager to grasp Irene's hand and bid her welcome into the church.

A veteran we have known from babyhood, who saw action in the Aleutian islands and helped level Haha on Okinawa, but alas who learned evil ways in army, was found guilty of grievous conduct and sentenced by a judge in Billings to serve for a time in the Federal prison on McNeil Island, where he is now. His father comes regularly for me to read his son's letter to him, and then dictates his answer in Cheyenne, while I type it in English on my typewriter. Through the years I have often served as private secretary for our Indians. They come for notes to the Indian offices, notes to the stores, letters of minor and graver importance, letters to Congressmen and other officials. For a time, the secretary at the Tribal offices, came regularly to have me correct the English of his reports together with punctuation and proper wording. These were always occasions to also sow the good seed.

Having inherited an intense love for music; my mother and my older sisters never hindered me from spending more hours daily at the piano than in the kitchen. I have been happy to use this talent all these years on the mission field. I still serve at the piano or organ at all church services.

My Chevrolet car which I purchased in 1947 has served not only myself but the Indians for longer and shorter distances. It was a joy to take a fine Indian

Fellowship in the Gospel. India: 1900-1950

This is the book you are waiting for— the golden jubilee book written by the missionaries in India in commemoration of fifty years of mission work there. Fellowship in the Gospel. India: 1900-1950, now at the press, will be historical, educational, informational, pictorial, and inspirational.

Here you will read the stories of how the gospel transforms lives, how the Bible School trains Indian leaders, and how our other mission schools have helped children grow "in wisdom, in stature, in favor with God and man." You will smile at some of the experiences of a missionary doctor, and as you read other stories, you will wonder at the mysterious ways in which God works. You will be led to pray with greater devotion as you read other accounts which are related. Have you ever wondered what goes on inside a leper home? Fellowship in the Gospel tells the story.

Have the fifty years of striving been worthwhile? The chapter on "Fellowship in the Building of the Church" will give you a greater understanding of and appreciation for your brothers and sisters in Christ in India. Through this book also you will have an opportunity to get acquainted with your India missionaries.

In addition to over one hundred pages of interesting reading of what takes place on the mission field, in Fellowship in the Gospel there will be over two hundred pictures showing you Indian customs, mission and church activities, and Indian church leaders.

Fellowship in the Gospel. India: 1900-1950 will be ready for sale in September. Whether you are young or old or in-between, you will want this book. Watch for further information.—Mrs. Harold Ratzlaff.

MIDDLE DISTRICT

—First Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: New adult members being baptized and joining our church June 11 were John Jacobs and Aaron and Mosco Baird. Communion services were held June 25 as our pastor and wife planned to be gone from June 28 to July 22, combining a Home Mission journey with a trip to Pasadena, California, where Pastor A. J. Neuenschwander will officiate at the wedding of his son Robert and Kathleen Bixby on July 7.—Geo. McBride, Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Culminating a two weeks' venture in faith and works, the boys and girls of Bible school gave a program at our church Friday evening, June 9, under the direction of our minister, Irvin Richert, and a staff of seven teachers and two assistants. Total enrollment was sixty-nine with an average daily attendance of sixty-one. This was the first Bible school of its own our church has sponsored in many years, and we pray that one will take shape annually henceforth. Harry Yoder spoke at our church Sunday evening, June 11, and solicited a few days following in the interests of Bluffton College.—Mrs. Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

DELEGATES CERTIFICATES COMING IN

The first twelve churches to return delegate certificates to the Conference Secretary, 722 Main, Newton, Kansas, are the following:

First, Hillsboro, Kansas; Whitewater, Manitoba; St. John, Pandora, Ohio; Bethel Mission, Winnipeg, Canada; Greenfield, Carnegie, Oklahoma; Grace, Enid, Oklahoma; First, Glendive, Montana; First of Christian, Moundridge, Kansas; Bethany, Flatland, and East Swamp, Quakertown, Pennsylvania; and Emmaus, Swift Current, Sask., Canada.

These twelve congregations hold 86 votes, and have designated 40 delegates. Twenty-five of these are lay individuals (18 men and seven women); fifteen are ministers. It seems that we can expect somewhat larger number of delegates than at Berne in 1947.

The average General Conference congregation has 200 members, and 100 children.

Pastors or church secretaries are encouraged to arrange for the election of delegates as soon as possible. It at all possible, please designate one or more alternates. If no delegate can be sent, please designate a proxy from another congregation.

Walter H. Dyck, Conference Secretary

—Salem Church, Dalton Ohio: United in marriage by our pastor on Sunday, June 18, in a home ceremony were Miss Mildred Steiner and Mrs. Ernest Fahrni. Mr. and Mrs. Harley Himes are the happy parents of a little girl, Vivian Alice, born June 21. Seven of our young people and our pastor, Irvin Richert, report a pleasant and profitable stay at Camp Mack the past week. Ending June 25 Ohio's sixty-fifth annual Christian Endeavor convention held in Wooster this year has now become history with several from our church having given much assistance. Serving as registration chairman was Vernon Gerber who with the aid of Wife Paula has been giving much time and effort to state work. Ward Hofstetter, who has a colmun in the bi-monthly Buckeye Endeavor, directed the recreation program. Ivan Badertscher served as alumni chairman; Miss Elizabeth Lehman was acting chairman of one session of the Junior convention, and Kenneth Badertscher gave a musical number.—Corr.

—Summerfield, Illinois, Church: Our new solid oak pews were installed on June 22. The Bethel College A Cappella Choir, "The Mennonite Singers," were with us on Friday evening, June 23, and gave a splendid program of a very high type of sacred song. It was a hot evening, yet the church house was full, plus. The audience was delighted and inspired with the singing. Our church took part in the union vacation Bible school from June 12 to 23. Three of our young ladies and the pastor helped in conducting the school. The three rooms of our public school building were used, a very convenient arrangement. The teachers arranged a good program which was given Sunday afternoon, June 25. This showed that the effort was indeed much worthwhile. The teaching was definitely Christ, centered. Fifty-seven pupils were enrolled.—A. S. Bechtel, Corr.

—Chicago: The General Conference Voluntary Service Unit has arrived for a period of service here in Chicago churches. Members of the Unit are Wanda Bartel, Hillsboro, Kansas, Leader; Cornelia Franz, Inman, Kansas; Betty Quiring, Frazer, Montana; Edna Voth, Mountain Lake, Minnesota; and Helen Neufeld, Chicago, Illinois.

—Seminary: Lucile Graber of Wayland, Iowa, and Shyrl Dunham of Lockport, New York, both Bluffton College students here for the summer, led a campaign to clean up a vacant lot immediately back of the Seminary to provide better recreational facilities for children in this neighborhood. The plight of the city child with no place to play is something which causes deep concern on the part of those of us who have grown up in small towns of rural areas.

EASTERN DISTRICT

—C.P.S. Reunion: A reunion of ex-Norristown State Hospital C.P.S. men and their families will be held August 20 on the Norristown State Hospital grounds.

—Deep Run Church, Bedminister, Pennsylvania: The Deep Run Valley School baccalaureate was held at our church this year with our pastor bringing the message. Nine young people were baptized and received into the church on May 28. During the two Sundays of Pastor Fretz's absence while speaking at the Mountain Lake Youth Retreat, Minnesota, Warren Oberholtzer of Quakertown, Pennsylvania, and Walter Fry of Denver, Pennsylvania, preached for us. The parents and families of Marvin Wasser and Jean Wismer attended the commencement of their graduation exercises at Bluffton College, Ohio. The Bluffton College Vesper Choir presented a splendid musical program for us June 10. The daily vacation Bible school of two weeks began June 19.—Corr.

—Wesley Ewert, who served as pastor of the First Church, Philadelphia, is at the present continuing his graduate study at the Hartford Seminary Foundation, and is temporarily serving the Morris Congregational Church, Morris, Connecticut, while he is doing his graduate work. Ewert, with Alvin Beachy, who goes to First Church, Bluffton, to succeeed J. N. Smucker, were co-recipients of the Hartford Fellowship established by J. E. Hartzler at Hartford Seminary Foundation this past year; Ewert has also been announced the recipient of the Fellowship next year.

—Bethel Church, Lancaster, Pennsylvania: On Pentecost eight young people were baptized and were received into the church. Our present membership is sixty-three. Four families participated in the children's dedication service on Mother's Day. On June 8 the Bluffton College Vesper Choir was with us. Our church building plans are being completed by a local architect. Building bids or estimates will be received in the very near future.—Corr.

WESTERN DISTRICT

—Bergtal Church, Pawnee Rock, Kansas. On May 28 baptismal services were held for eleven young people. A program was given by the Young Men's Quartet on May 28 in the evening. From May 28 to June 9 vacation Bible school was held in the church basement with 55 pupils as average attendance. They gave a program on Thursday evening, June 8. A group from here attended the District Fellowship Meeting June 4 at Ransom. The Ladies Mission Society sponsored a mother-daughter tea the afternoon of June 11 with Mrs. Herbert Schmidt as guest speaker. She told us of the plight of mothers and daughters in India. Communion was observed on June 11 with J. B. Schmidt officiating. Recent guest speakers during our morning worship services were August Schmidt of Meno, Oklahoma, and Harold Gross of Freeman, South Dakota. —Mrs. John K. Friesen.

—New Hopedale Church, Meno, Oklahoma: On Pentecost seven were added to the church by baptism and seven taken in by letter. Arthur Schmidt, one of our members, was ordained as a minister of the gospel on Easter Sunday, April 9. He was married to Hilda Regier of Mountain Lake, Minnesota, June 16. They have been accepted as missionaries by the Missionary Gospel Union and look forward to going to the mission field soon. Two other young people of our church were married on June 4, Gene Unruh and Pearl Jantzen. In our building program we are at a standstill now during the busy season, but we want to start again as soon as possible.—August Schmidt, Corr.

—First Church, Fredonia, Kansas: The last C.E. program was held June 11, the program being rendered by the Fall River Men's Chorus and followed with a social hour and refreshments in the basement. The annual Sunday school school picnic was held June 18 at Big Cabin in Independence, Kansas, Park. Services were held before lunch and the afternoon was spent in outdoor recreation.—Mrs. Sam Harms, Corr.

NORTHERN DISTRICT

—Bethel Church, Marion, South Dakota: On June 18 in the absence of our pastor, Calvin Schrag brought the morning message. Mr. Schrag is a graduate of Bethel College. Daily Vacation Bible School was held at the church from June 5 to 15.—Corr.

—Bethesda Church, Henderson, Nebraska: On Pentecost Sunday thirty-three young people were baptized and received as members of the church. Thirteen were added by letter. Ernst and Mrs. Crous of Berlin, Germany, were guest speakers in our church on June 6. Miss Erna Friesen left for Colombia, South America, where she will take part in a Voluntary Service Project. The Henderson Community Hospital will be dedicated on July 2. Wendell Hamlin, who recently finished his internship, is serving as doctor for the community.—Corr.

—Friedensberg Church, Avon, South Dakota: On June 18 our church had a "mountain-top" experience for on the that day the ordination of two of our boys took place, namely Frank Ewert and William Dahlenburg. Both young men had their training at Grace Bible Institute, and both will serve churches in Montana, the Ewerts at Wolf Point and the Dahlenburgs at Frazer. The vacation Bible school came with a very interesting program the evening of June 16. There were 41 children enrolled and the teachers were Mr. and Mrs. Quenzer and Opal Boese.—Corr.

Scholarship Available

MENNONITE students who are interested in pursuing post-graduate study in a theological seminary will be happy to learn of the establishment of a scholarship by J. E. Hartzler for this purpose. Hartzler, from 1936 to 1947 Lecturer in the Department of Systematic Theology at the Hartford Theological Seminary, (and retired from the lectureship in 1947), has made possible a fellowship yielding approximately $1,000.00 annually. This scholarship is to be awarded to Mennonite students who are graduates from this or any other seminary of recognized standing, and who have the necessary scholastic qualifications. Admission to the Fellowship is granted by action of the Hartford Theological Seminary faculty. Mennonite students who are interested should correspond with Tertius van Dyke, Dean of the Hartford Theological Seminary, 55 Elizabeth Street, Hartford 5, Connecticut.

A Personal Explanation

The Fellowship at Hartford Seminary is made available to any Mennonite student—man or woman, who holds the A.B. and B.D. degree from any College or Seminary of recognized standing. It may be used by qualified students interested in research or advanced study in Christian theology, church history, Old and New Testament, religious education, philosophy or missions. It may be used in the School of Theology, the School of Religious Education, or the School of Missions. Part of the work may be done in institutions other than Hartford under the direction of the Hartford faculty.

It frequently happens that our good Mennonite men come out of graduate school with a heavy debt, and it is only natural that they should say that because of low salaries and heavy debt they cannot afford to serve in a Mennonite school or a Mennonite pulpit. It is our purpose in this fellowship to relieve this condition somewhat and to make it financially possible for men to get their graduate work and their higher degrees, and still remain within the area of the work of our own denomination. Two things the Mennonite Church must do namely, produce more scholars, and then hold them for service in our own schools and pulpits. This is the purpose of the Fellowship at Hartford.—J. E. Hartzler couple I love, to the Miles City doctors for a minor operation. James told me repeatedly that a small mole at the back of his neck was often irritated by his collar. The doctors advised it be removed. This took but a few minutes. James being an expert driver always enjoys having his hands on the wheel. The trip served a double purpose for me to attend to some errands, and for him to have the troublesome mole removed. I have now gone over 14,000 miles with this new car, and under conditions quite different from 1916 when I drove that Model "T" Ford all the way from Oklahoma to Montana.

Soon after I had moved over to my new home, I opened my twelve-foot dining table and arranged all the Indian trophies my husband had collected throughout the years, on it. The collection consists of war bonnets, Indian clubs, medicine bags, medicine rattles, pipes, pipe bags, beaded Indian cradle that we sent to the Sesquicentennial Exposition in Philadelphia, Indian bags, Indian charms, ceremonial necklace. Indian writing on skin, valuable bows and arrows (one set now 150 years old), petrified baby moccasin, wooden spoons, etc.

The head of one of the units of the University of Montana, which functions in Billings, drove out one Sunday afternoon with his wife, especially to see this collection. A representative of the University at Ann Arbor, Michigan spent some time here this summer in research work preparatory to writing a thesis for his doctor's degree. He called a number of times, and took pictures of various articles in the exhibit. He also wrote a very fine estimate of the collection, placing it very high. Thus, not only the dictionary, the translations and the historical material in this cottage have attracted considerable attention, but also this fine collection of Indian relics. All through the summer many came to see it. Thus I have had a truly busy time though in retirement.

Y. P. U. Workshop

August 18-23

At a retreat, the Christ's knocking on the door is the great and dominant note. The Workshop has as its high aim, the answering of such knocking on the door.

THIS WORKSHOP, just before General Conference, is an opportunity for youth presidents and leaders of local organizations to come together for retreat, study, inspiration and sharing.

Here is what the Workshop will do:

1. There will be worship of Almighty God, possible in new meaning and depth at such a gathering and place.

2. There will be discussion—what the task of youth work in the home church is, how to carry out the task, the tools at hand to accomplish that task. With leaders from over the land, this should be of great significance and very fruitful.

3. There will be programs, play, crafts, worship—the actual doing of the things that we discuss for the local groups. That is why this is a workshop—it actually tries to do the things it talks about. It does these things thinking of the way it will work at home.

4. The members of the Workshop will help write a pamphlet. The pamphlet is already in its first draft. It is being re-edited the first time. The Workshop will go over this first re-editing and give the final criticism to a Y.P.U. Youth Manual designed to give basic information concerning local youth organization.

5. The Workshop will have fellowship of the finest and best, where Christian people learn to know one another and appreciate one another.

FOR INFORMATION WRITE: Rev. Verney Unruh, Pulaski, Iowa.

The First Youth Workshop

AT THE General Conference held in Freeman, South Dakota in 1923, there was begun considerable thinking and planning in respect to young people's work in the Conference. There had been in the previous ten or fifteen years quite a number of young men and women who had attended retreats and conferences sponsored by the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A. While attending college, these young people would attend camps at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin. For a number of these young college people, "Decision Hill" at Lake Geneva was a place where great decisions were made in their lives. For many of them, the experiences they had at Lake Geneva made their devotion to Christ a burning reality.

A host of things have happened since that Freeman conference. In the worldwide experiences of mankind a depression and a war have ravaged human kind. We today stand five years away from a war just as the previous Freeman Conference stood five years away from a war. Young people's work, retreats, voluntary service, local youth activitiy in the churches has grown greatly in the quarter century. All of this makes it especially significant that the Young People's Union is sponsoring a Workshop at Camp Byron from August 18-23. (See next column)

We are in a busy age. If anything is typical of most everyone it is that we all are rushed for time. Our days are packed with hurry and scurry. The Workshop, seeking the rest and security of the eternal hills and the calmness and repose of the waters of life, will in God's presence draw us aside from fevered life and let us "Be still" and know Him who is ageless.

This Workshop is what it's name implies. It is a workshop whose purpose is to work through the problems of young peoples work in the local church. It has as its task the seeking of ways and means of serving the needs of youth, of organizing to do that job effectively, of providing materials to work on, and a basic approach to the task at hand.

Through the fellowship, prayer, inspiration of a camp experience, the Y.P.U. is certain that representative youth leaders from our far-flung churches will have a great experience by coming to Camp Byron.

It is a fitting thing that this first Y.P.U. Workshop should be held in the Freeman, South Dakota area. It was there that the early beginnings of youth work was initiated. It was there, 27 years ago, that men and women of vision seriously discussed and started the retreat movement which has by now spread throughout the Conference. By attending this Workshop, you will contribute toward the further development of youth work in our churches and you may help take the next step so that as even more thorough and effective program for youth may be realized. So, be sure and plan to attend Y.P.U. Workshop.

Purchase Camp Site in Michigan

MAY 18, 1950 will go down as a memorable day in the life of forty churches in the Central and Middle District Conferences. For on that day, the Camp Committee assembled at the cabin of Mr. Forrest Lemons on Shavehead Lake in southern Michigan. There, a contract was signed and a check was written and possession was taken of 40 acres of beautiful lake frontage. The Camp Committee had ended its long search for a camp site for the Central and Middle District Conferences!

The event that took place on May 18 has a long history behind it. Youth retreats have been held jointly by these churches for many years. First, there were retreats on the Bluffton College campus, then quarters were rented on the Brethren camp at Shipshewana, Indiana, for a year or two the Quaker Haven Camp in northern Indiana was used; and, for many years Camp Mack near Milford, Indiana has been the site for youth retreats. This camp, owned by the Church of the Brethren, is a very complete and adequate camp. The difficulty has been that the camp has been available only one week. This made the expansion of a retreat program impossible.

The two conferences acted in favor of purchasing and developing their own camp and for five years a Committee has been actively searching. Last Fall this property was found and on May 18 it became the property of the Central and Middle District Conferences.

Lay Corner Stone, July 4

With the development and construction of the camp, the Camp Committee planned for the laying of a corner stone in the first building to be constructed on the Camp site. This ceremony took place on July 4 at the camp site at Shavehead Lake, Michigan located 20 miles north of Goshen.

The ceremony was attended by Conference leaders and officers, Camp Committee members, and interested laymen. It was a service dedicating the new site "To the Glory of God" and expressed the noble purpose for which the camp will be used.

A Summer's Work Program

A busy program of work has been scheduled for the summer at the camp site. Olen Yoder of Middlebury, Indiana has taken the position of work-supervisor and will spend the summer at Shavehead Lake. A road is being built from the county road to the site. Some improvements are being made on the lake frontage, smoothing out the rough terrain. Cabins will be constructed this summer. The water and sewage systems will be installed as well as bath house facilities.

To carry out this heavy program of activity, the Camp Committee has asked for volunteers to spend a day, a week, or a month at the site and assist. Volunteer's names are coming in for such work. Housing is being arranged for in house trailers. Anyone interested can contact the Camp Committee, 605 South 7th Street, Goshen, Indiana.

Churches Take Cabins

Twelve very beautiful cabins are to be constructed on the camp site to house 96 people. This summer's program calls for the construction of ten of these cabins. Local churches have been asked to be responsible for building a cabin. The churches provide the funds for the cabin and go to the site for its construction under the supervision of the work supervisor. The Camp Committee provides the blue prints, specifies the building materials to be used, and has a concrete floor and foundation poured.

The cabins will be beautiful buildings designed for use by all ages. Each cabin will have a fire place and facilities for sleeping eight people. They will be fourteen by twenty feet in size. They will be constructed so that they can be used both in fall and early spring.

Private Lots Available

The men from whom the camp site was purchased also own over 200 lake lots which they have for sale. The owners desire to sell these lots to people from our churches and have offered 20% of each lot-sale to the camp of all lots sold to our church people. This will aid in the development of the camp. The reason for this action is that the owners are very anxious to see their property put to a good use—for this reason they are especially interested in the camp. Inquiries can be made to the Camp Committee, 605 South 7th, Goshen, Indiana.

Twenty-Five Years of Retreats

WHERE WAS the first retreat held in the General Conference? This is the 25th anniversary of retreats for the Central and Middle District Conferences. Pictured below is the first retreat which was held on the Bluffton College campus in 1925. It is either the first or one of the first retreats held by our Conference. It would be interesting to know of other first retreats held by other district conferences. Anyone knowing about their first retreats are invited to write the editor informing him of them. Also, identification of the persons pictured above would be very much appreciated.

The faculty of the retreat pictured and held August 8-16, 1925 consisted of the following: First row, left to right—I. R. Detweiler, then pastor of the Eighth Street Mennonite Church, a former President of Goshen College, now deceased; Mr. Collins, a Quaker and member of the Fellowship of Reconciliation; William B. Weaver, pastor of the North Danvers Mennonite Church, Danvers, Illinois, he is pastor of that church at present; Mrs. S. K. Mosiman of Bluffton; Ed. G. Kaufman, at the time a missionary to China, at present president of Bethel College; J. H. Langenwalter, former president of Bethel College, pastor of Hebron church, Buhler, Kansas, at present retired at North Newton, Kansas. On the second row are pictured Lester Hostetler, at the time pastor of the Sugarcreek Mennonite Church at present pastor of the Bethel College Mennonite Church and director of relief in Berlin, Germany; Austin Keiser, pastor of the Salem Church Dalton, Ohio, at present a Methodist minister in Greenwich, Ohio; Jesse Smucker, pastor of the Oak Grove Mennonite Church, Smithville, O.; at present President of the General Conference and editor of THE MENNONITE; Noah Andrew Burcky, of Bluffton College; A. J. Neuenschwander, then pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, today pastor of the First Church, Wadsworth, Ohio.

It would be interesting to get the names of the others on this picture. Anyone knowing them, please inform the editor.

From this early beginning with retreats, there has grown a Conference-wide retreat movement with local churches, districts, and other groups annually holding retreats. By now four districts of the Conference own their own retreat grounds. The work of development and growth is continuing.

This is an especially significant year for the Central and Middle District Conferences because of this 25th year of retreats, the work of developing a Conference camp ground has begun. It is hoped that this new development will have added stimulus and a greater effect in the spiritual life of all the people in the Conference.

$100,000 OFFERING

ELGIN, ILLINOIS. — Resolutions pledging the Church of the Brethren to the equal treatment of all races and to a continuation of overseas relief activities were among the most important actions taken by delegates to the 164 Annual Conference of the church, in a six-day session just concluded at Grand Rapids, Mich.

The conference closed with the lifting of a $100,000 offering and the adoption of a million-dollar annual budget for the denomination's national and international program of missions, social service, and Christian eduation.

Delegates also voted to affiliate with the new National Council of Churches of Christ in the United States of America when it is constituted in November.

Choice of moderator for the 1951 conference was Desmond W. Bittinger, president-elect of McPherson college, McPherson, Kansas, and editor for the past six years of The Gospel Messenger, the church's denominational weekly.

Conference attendance reached 5,000, with voting privileges available to 836 official delegates, representing local congregations and church districts.

The statement on the church's position on race problems called for removal of all racial barriers to church membership, free inter-racial fellowship in pews and at meals, more home mission work to people of other races, and cooperation with other bodies, religious and secular, to combat race prejudice.

In the field of Christian service, the conference called upon its members and the U. S. government to share food surpluses with those in dire need throughout the world. It was also voted to redouble the efforts of the Church of the Brethren to provide homes for displaced persons, and to continue support of such relief movements as the Heifer project, through which 5800 heifers and 5500 goats have already been sent to worthy families and institutions in approximately 20 countries.

nonite. Relief work in Austria was sponsored through the Peace Group. Several conferences were also held, dealing with the subject of Peace and Nonresistance. A regular Letter is published as an organ of the Group. The M.C.C. is continuing in liaison with this group, as well as with the various other interests and activities of the Dutch Mennonite churches.

Value in Children's Colony seen

Recently the M.C.C. Unit in Italy brought its children's colony project to a close, partially in order to concentrate on some material-aid distribution. During the weeks when the children from the slums of Naples were being cared for, it was the hope of the workers that in some way the Christian witness might have an influence on these young lives. Along with the food and clothing given them, Bible stories were told and Sunday School songs taught. Waldensian young people gave invaluable help in this work.

When the last day of the colony arrived, the workers were convinced that some impressions had been made. The parting was a touching experience for both children and workers. In the children, some of whom had presented problems of behavior in the colony, one could sense an earnestness and strong desire on the part of each to be what was expected of them. Effort is being made to keep in touch with them through occasional contacts during the summer.

Voluntary Service Notes

Additional volunteers can be used at Topeka State Hospital, Kansas, to fill vacancies as present workers complete their terms in August. This unit is unique in various features, including the training course which is provided for volunteers, and the living arrangement enabling members to fellowship and work together. For further information, write to Voluntary Service, MCC, Akron, Pa.

Book Notes . . . . A GUIDE TO VISUAL AIDS

CATALOGUE OF FILMS, The Religious Film Association, Inc., 45 Astor Place, New York 3, N. Y. 1950-1951. Price 50 cents.

PASTORS AND CHURCHWORKERS who have been searching for a catalog of films and visual aids for use in the church will be delighted with this new catalog of films. Actually a visual aids handbook, this valuable manual presents a listing of resource materials for leaders as well as some helpful hints on methods of film presentation.

The film descriptions consist, for the most part, of critical evaluations which were prepared by reviewing committees of the International Council of Religious Education and by Rev. William S. Hockman, editor of the Church Department of the Educational Screen magazine. Among the more than 300 titles listed are found motion pictures, slides, film strips, and slide sets with accompanying manuals. An interesting feature of this catalog is a system of cross references of slides and film strips along with motion pictures arranged in subject matter sections.

Users will find listed the best materials produced by Cathedral Films, J. Arthur Rank, the Protestant Film Commissions, Church-Craft, and others. Complete instructions are included for the rental of motion pictures and slides as well as for the sale of film strips. Both color, and black and white films are included in the listing.

Church workers will find this catalog a very valuable source of visual aids for missionary education and programs designed to promote the cause of missions. Films are listed on the Near East, the foreign missions theme for 1950-51. Visual aids are also included for Sunday school teachers and for those who are concerned with the enrichment of programs for children and young people. Among the postwar problems included in the listings are those of race relations, alcohol education, the family and problems of youth. Every church library should have a copy of this visual aids hand-book.

OFFICIAL REQUEST

In order to avoid unnecessary conflicts, all organizations or groups desiring to arrange for special reunions or luncheons during the days of the Conference session at Freeman, South Dakota, (August 23-30) are asked to clear any such plans as soon as possible with Rev. Walter Gering, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, Secretary of the Business Committee.

Walter H. Dyck
Conference Secretary

The country pastor drives about 11,000 miles a year, while his territory averages about 123 square miles, it is deducted from a survey made by the Board of American Missions of the United Lutheran Church. The rural Lutheran pastor, it was found, has a salary ranging from $1,600 to $3,200 a year, while more than one-half of such pastors have rural backgrounds. "Despite a popular notion that rural congregations are declining, 73 per cent of the rural congregations covered are on the increase," the survey indicated.—Gospel Herald

Editorials

THE ARTICLE by Dorothy Kaufman in the youth section entitled "What is our world responsibility?" calls our attention to something of the Anabaptist heritage which has been all but lost. The first Anabaptists or Mennonites made it a point to take part in widely publicized debates with the best thinkers of their time in order to boldly present and clarify their positions to others. One wonders whether the time is not here for a similar undertaking in which the perverted thinking of the world as well as parts of the church should not be openly challenged. Hatred and love don't mix. Salvation and destruction don't mix. Healing and killing don't mix. The good news of the gospel and the perverted news of propaganda don't mix. The orders from heaven and the orders from the Pentagon don't mix. Since we know where God stands, we have nothing or no one to fear except cowardice. We need repeatedly to reread the Gospels to see how Jesus persistently walked deliberately into the very heat of conflict to present the good news of the Gospel retreating only long enough to gather his resources for new attacks. We ought honestly to ask ourselves the question, Just what, if anything, have we as Conference or as members of a Conference done that demands sustained courage?

TAKE FOR EXAMPLE the fact that the average giving of Conference members for the last triennium was hardly $1 per week per member for all church causes—a figure which by no stretch of the imagination represents sacrifice and courage. We delegate the showing of courage and sacrifice to a few of our missionaries and relief workers while we join the cult of comfort and descend into the refined idolatry of worshipping a standard of living. Someone has estimated on the basis of figures released by the National Stewardship Council for the year 1948 that the average tithe or tenth of church members in the United States if given would have amounted to about $150. What was done with the other $100 that should have gone toward the Lord's work? What might the Church have done with that $100 to bring the saving, peace-giving gospel to the whole world?

HAVE ANY BOARDS OR COMMITTEES considered the possibility of getting a voice for the Conference on the radio and television? The possibilities for reaching out to the pagan public of America are almost limitless through this channel. Here is a tremendous opportunity for evangelism. We are not thinking of the common type of evangelistic appeal over the radio that asks only for a break with a few of the more obvious sins or that concentrates on trying to introduce people to heaven without showing them the hell of sin that still lurks within their lives. Nor are we thinking of the type of program that seeks to solve the problems of people without reckoning with the basic fact of sin and its soul-destroying potentiality. There is a startlingly empty place "on the air" when one thinks of a fervent evangelical presentation of the gospel that really dares to come to grips with sin in all phases of life, personal and social.

THE QUESTION WAS RAISED at last conference, is it often enough to meet in General Conference once every three years? As far as is known the question will not be raised again this year. Undoubtedly in the minds of not a few, this does not mean that the question it settled. To work together we must not only know one another but also share our experiences with one another. Three years give too long an opportunity for fellowship to cool off through lack of contact. The ministers' retreat (and churches should leave no stone unturned in making it possible for their ministers to attend), it is true, does help fill the gap as well as the annual council of boards meetings. But dependence upon these gatherings may well have the effect of pushing our Conference toward a clergy-dominated group—a tendency which is already all too prominent. Are we ready to leave it at once in three years or are there substantial values to be considered in a biennial or even an annual meeting of General Conference?

THE QUESTION OF THE DRAFT

WITH THE SUDDEN shift in international developments and in U. S. foreign policy resulting in a speeding up of draft action, our young men and leaders are asking about the status of the conscientious objector at the present and for the visible future. The present draft law that was not formulated for an emergency period demanding large numbers of draftees simply exempts conscientious objectors. Popular opinion probably would not let the matter stand there in case of possible heavy drafting and heavy casualties. There is nothing comparable to Civilian Public Service in the present draft law and it is entirely within the realm of possibility that alternative service will not take this pattern. Ministers and their young men and women may want to meet in these days to discuss what types of work they could conscientiously do if they are drafted to serve in industry or other work in their local communities, for it may be possible that there will not be a segregation of the conscientious objectors as under C.P.S. Perhaps local groups will do well to send the results of their thinking to Albert Gaeddert secretary of the Peace Section of the M.C.C. whose address is Inman, Kansas. Meanwhile, those who wish to establish their status as conscientious objectors should ask for the special Form 150.

QUOTE WITHOUT COMMENT

Do you tell the child that a Communist is a person to hate, and that the less said about it the better? But to do that you must explain about hating, and to explain about hating you must make a joke of her Sunday school class, and if you're going to do that you're acting like a Communist yourself.—Hutchinson News-Herald.

Building The House of God

by Cornelius Krahn

IN OUR day many congregations are building or planning to build or remodel their house of worship. Many questions arise in connection with this significant undertaking. We wish at this time to consider some that are of a general nature and that involve some basic principles.

Places of Worship

When Jacob experienced God where he did not expect him and yet needed him most he called that place in the desert "a house of God"—Bethel. When Solomon had completed a house of splendor for the Lord he realized that "the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain Thee; how much less this house that I have builded" (I Kings 8:27). In spite of the insight that God is everywhere and cannot be restricted to any place or circumstance the practice of worshipping him at certain places and at certain times under definite circumstances continues. The great works of art of our Western civilization are both means and results of Christian worship. The monumental classics of music, architecture, and literature are lasting testimonies to this truth.

And yet the basic questions of the human soul reaching out for God and His salvation in Jesus Christ are far more than expressions of art or the result of art. In the best sense works of art can serve as means toward the eternal end, but when their significance is overemphasized they can become hindrances and stumbling blocks for the hungry soul in its attempt to quench its thirst.

Worship in Spirit and Truth

Christ himself preferred the worship with the sinner at the well, in private homes, in the desert, in the fisher warf, etc. to that of the aesthetic boasters of the great shrine—the temple. For him the temple was one among many places to worship. When the Samaritan women approached him with the controversial question of that day as to where the proper place to worship God was, in the temple or in the mountains of Samaria, he gave the classic and basic answer of all prophetic and spiritual Christianity namely that "God is spirit: and they that worship Him must worship him in spirit and in truth" (John 4:24). This had always been the message of the Old Testament prophets in opposition to the priests and custodians of tradition, ceremony, and ritualism (Amos 5).

Form and Content

Thus Christ and the early Christians were revolutionary and dynamic in destroying the old traditional forms of Jewish and pagan religious worship and in creating and shaping something new. An era of worshipping God in spirit and in truth was ushered in. Out of principles and because of persecution they worshipped in deserts, burial places (catacombs), and in private homes. They preached and testified on markets, in harbors, and wherever they met people. Christianity can be dynamic, prophetic, and revolutionary, but—like all other forms of life—it tends to become traditional, conservative, ceremonial, and stagnant. The growth and development of the Catholic church during the middle ages illustrate this point. A prophetic Christianity with a living faith, worshipping God in spirit and in truth, became obscured and in its place we find an institutionalized Christianity with a strong emphasis of a ceremonial and a materialistic-magic concept of worship. The form had become more important than the content.

Where Do We Stand?

The Reformation was an attempt to restore a truly dynamic and prophetic Christianity and in this struggle the Mennonites (Anabaptists) were the most radical and biblical in the sense of Christ's admonition to worship God in spirit and in truth. They removed stumbling blocks and hindrances on the way to salvation in Christ and in the worship of God. Through diligent study of the Scriptures they had come to the conviction that emphasis on the form and ceremony of worship had obscured the content of the Gospel of redemption. For this reason they had little use for such means of salvation and worship as cathedrals, stained windows, crucifixes, altars, statues of saints, candles, the supposed actual presence of Christ in the "sacrament" (bread and wine), relics (garments, bones, etc. of saints), worship of or through saints, pilgrimages to shrines, and elaborate ceremonies in worship. All these practices were challenged and discontinued, not because our forefathers were ignorant folk who had no appreciation of works of art. The leaders of the movement had a university training or had obtained through other means an understanding of literature, art, theology and philosophy. Because of the above mentioned principle they rejected an over-emphasis of these means.

The Hidden Church

We wish to point out another factor which has made us what we are by tradition and mission. The principle of getting along with a minimum of exterior means in worship and in practicing Christianity was reinforced by the fact that Mennonites were persecuted in most of the countries from their very beginning over many generations. If they were not burned, drowned, imprisoned, or banished and were permitted to live in seclusion because of their industry and ability as farmers, they were not permitted to build places of public worship with bells and towers or steeples to invite the worshippers. They were compelled to meet in private homes or in hidden churches. When they finally

Reaching Beyond Our Grasp

Raymond M. Yoder

HE THAT believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do because I go unto my Father. And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the son. If ye shall ask any thing in my name, I will do it." John 14:12-14.

Belief in Christ makes a man work. He that believeth shall do—work.

Faith in Christ is not just a species of intellectual concepts or ideas. It is something functional. When a person has faith, he begins to operate, work, and do something. Grace is a catalyst that speeds up the action and enables faith to accomplish its ends, which are inexplicable and unintelligible apart from recognition of the supernatural.

Christ expected His followers to work, the same quality of work that He worked. But the verse is more striking when He says, "Greater works than these shall he do." He expects us to accomplish great tasks, the impossible and improbable—to such a degree that His works take the second place.

Too much church work is done entirely on the level of the natural laws of good administration and efficient methods and policies. There is nothing miraculous or supernatural about it. It is comparable to any industry, business enterprise, or purely secular organizations. The church is supernatural in its origin, structure, and scope of its work, as well as the manner in which it does its work. It should be continuously convincing the observing world that church work is over and above mere human endeavor. Our reach should always be beyond our grasp. "These signs shall follow them that believe: in my name shall they cast out. . . . speak. . . take up. . . drink. . . lay on hands." Mark 16:17

Such a prediction of this unusual quality of work was not uttered by our Lord without implicit instruction as to how such works were realized. Verses 13 and 14 tell us that prayer in Christ's name is the means which brings God's supernatural power to supplement our endeavors to such an extent that actually He is doing the work.

Large asking on our part honors God. Too often we pray as though God has grown feeble with age. We pray like children playing church; toying, trifling, and trusting that something tiny will happen—perhaps. If our endeavors are successful, we praise God for what we did. That is proper, for God gave no assistance. This honors us. When we launch and pursue a hopeless task with a painful consciousness of a helpless servant, but faith in God and His work that is hazardless, then God "will do it" that "the Father may be glorified."

Too few Christians actually believe "If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it." Dead earnestness is a requisite for God's recognition. Some tasks are accomplished as a result of much fasting and prayer. God is not a simpleton that rushes to every whim and fanciful desire we may utter. God sees all the implications of the quest. He evaluates all the effects resultant from his granting our petition. He discerns the motives as to whether we are praying in our name or in His Name and for his honor.

May our life be a confirmation of the validity of these verses. Let God do a perfect work through you. If our God does not manifest His supernatural through us—the pagan's prayer to his pagan god is comparable and adequately satisfying. What observer could discern any specific difference?

Will you strengthen your faith by reaching for that which is beyand our grasp, and trust God to co-labor in your pursuits that He may be glorified. May the potency of this promise be actual and powerful in you.

obtained full rights to worship as they pleased and in some instances this took place after 200 years of persecution and suppression, it took them sometime before they would find architectural patterns and forms of worship that would best express their principles and beliefs. In fact, this in the problem we are facing today.

Extremes in Worship

We would like to call attention to two extremes in worship and church buildings. The ultra-conservative among the Mennonites—the Amish, Hutterites, and others—have developed the principle that no building is to be used for worship purposes only. They meet in private homes or school buildings. What originally was prohibited because of persecution has become a basic tenet of their faith. Their form of worship is also very plain. The other extreme is that Mennonite congregations unaware of their original principles accept almost any architectural pattern and form of worship that they find in their respective communities. This has produced some very odd mixtures and contradictions. For example, we cited the fortress-like tower found on almost all churches of the prairie states which is a remnant of the fortresses of the middle ages. When and how did these towers become the adornment of Mennonite churches? And what connection is there between them and a church in which the Gospel of redemption and peace is proclaimed?

We have seen that traditionally the use of symbols in our churches was restricted. Whenever one is intro-

From the Mission Front

To the Great Little Land of Japan

by W. C. Voth

I. STOP-OVER IN OKINAWA

Now that I have been in Japan some days I wish to share some things with you friends at home. Leaving Hongkong on May 23, I arrived in Okinawa 5½ hours later, by Pan American Plane, and was met there by Mr. Robert Smith. He came out under the auspices of the M.C.C. and is working with Church World Service, or, more correctly, is heading up the LARA office with which Church World Service is also connected. While lodging in the Army barracks I had some interesting contacts with some of the Army men.

Four Missionary Families Among 500,000

I found that on the Island there was only one missionary connected with the Church of Christ in Okinawa. He expected his wife and another couple to arrive before long to enter mission work. On the north end of the Island is another missionary family—independent. These we visited and they told me they were getting ready to receive another family who were to join them in their work. That would make four missionary families for the whole island of Okinawa with some over 500,000 inhabitants.

The Okinawan people are very friendly, and I had the impression they would be delightful people to work with. They are quite different from the Japanese. They are a very interesting class of people. From what I heard and observed during the all too brief time that I was there, these sturdy little people have developed a high sense of peace and honor. I was told that the last record of a murder was 50 years ago. Probably this has something to do with their attitude that they warmly welcome Christian teaching.

Forty-two Christian Congregations

On Okinawa are 42 Christian congregations, self-supporting as far as I could find out. The pastors, however, welcome missionaries as they say now is the time that the people are open to the gospel, and they wish that all the people should hear it as soon as possible. I was invited to speak to one of the congregations one evening (I only had three days on the Island). They met in a small wooden structure erected next to what must have been a beautiful chapel before the war. That had been bombed and the walls were still standing there in their ruin, but the cross on the church was still there. It reminded me so much of the song. "In The Cross of Christ I Glory." As you will remember the writer wrote that song when he saw the ruined church at Macao also with the cross still remaining over the ruins.

As we gathered for this church service, I at once saw a marked difference between these worshippers and a similar group of worshippers and neighbors gathering in the interior of China. Every one that came here came in a hushed mood, and there was not the least noise or disturbance of any kind during the whole time of the meeting. It also was the first time that I had the delight to visit a church where the only furnishings consisted of clean well kept mats on the floor. The mats are braided of a soft straw of fine texture. The walls also had mats and a few dignified, appropriate paintings. There was one very low table. This served as "pulpit". But why such a low "pulpit"? You will see as I did.

The First and Last Opportunity

by Janet Soldner

ON ONE occasion a feeble-minded boy came to our house begging us for some aid. It was almost impossible to understand the words which he mumbled. He left us with the idea that we were to give injections to his sick mother. After consenting to go with him, he lead me to his dwelling place up in the mountains. After climbing up a stony mule-path we finally came to a miserable hovel which he called his home. For awhile I was unable to see anyone in that dark damp shack. After awhile I was able to focus my eyes and found an old woman wrapped up in miserable rags sitting on top of a bed which was her bed. Her pillow was a pile of dirty rags.

Upon inquiring about her condition I was informed that she had been to the charity two weeks ago but they refused to take her in. She begged me to give her something for relief. There she was in that unhealthy one room hut with no one to care for her or to prepare food for her. There was nothing I could do but to give her hope for her soul. She did express her faith in God and appreciated the words of comfort and the prayer which we had together. That was the first and last opportunity I had to make plain the way of salvation to her as that was the last time she was able to speak. After that she could not answer me when I spoke to her although she was able to receive the food which I brought.

Sometime later several neighbors finally got together to take her to the hospital on a stretcher. The hospital which had refused to help her while there was still hope now took her in. Two hours after arriving they called for those who had brought her to come and bury her but they had already gone on their way. Therefore the street cleaners were called upon to bury her. What if she would have been your mother?

I used to ask God if He would come and help me. Then I asked if I might come and help Him. Then I ended up by asking God to do His own work through me.

Delegate Business Session

FIRST WOMEN'S RETREAT

—The first Mennonite Women's Spiritual Retreat will be held on the Bluffton College Campus, Bluffton, Ohio, July 31 to August 3. Women of the Eastern, Middle, and Central Districts are invited to attend. The total cost will be $8.00 for the entire period or 50c plus meals per single day. Every retreater will bring her own sheets, pillow case, blanket, and towels. There will be missionary and hobby displays. Advance registration and inquiries should be sent to Mr. Edison Diller, Pandora, Ohio, by July 25. Each church is expected to send at least one delegate. A nursery will be provided if requested.—The Committee.

Canadian District

ROSTHERN, SASKATCHEWAN, July 1-5 Inspired by a huge mission festival drawing well over a thousand people, 210 delegates representing 64 churches and the 15,500 adult members of the Canadian District voted to establish a central treasury, to liquidate the debt on the Canadian Bible College building in the coming year, to pay the expenses for the training of at least one missionary candidate, and to accept an invitation to meet in Leamington, Ontario, next year.

Central Treasury Established

In order to promote a more business like handling of the funds of the Conference it was decided to create a central treasury into which all moneys designated for any purpose in the Conference could be sent. This would also simplify matters for the churches where people are sometimes confused because of uncertainty as to which treasury they are to send their various contributions.

The conference officials elected for next year were J. J. Thiessen, Jacob Gerbrandt, and H. T. Klassen.

Over 6,000 Immigrants in Three Years

The report given on the work of the Canadian Mennonite Board of Colonization showed that during the last 3 years 6,179 immigrants had been brought to Canada from Europe by this Board. At present permission had been secured to bring over Mennonites from Danzig, Germany. These people will, however, have to pay their full travelling expenses and will, therefore, be in need of special assistance from here if their hopes of coming to this country are to be realized.

Conference Evangelists Active

The report of the work done in home missions during the past year was read by Jacob D. Nickel of Rosemary, Alberta. The report showed that meetings for spiritual awakening had been held in various churches by A. G. Neufeld, Conference evangelist from Margaret, Manitoba. Other ministers assisting in this work in the various provinces had been J. M. Pauls of Morden, Man., Nicolai Friesen of Black Creek, Vancouver Island, H. H. Penner of Herschel, Sask., and Franz Sawatzky of Gnadental, Man. The Conference made the recommendation that these men continue their work in the coming year.

City-mission work had also been promoted. This work had been carried on by the following ministers: F. P. Dyck in Toronto, Ont., I. I. Friesen and Jacob Toews in Winnipeg, Man., and Henry Funk in Carmen, Man. In Saskatchewan J. J. Thiessen had been in charge of the work in Saskatoon and Hans Dyck in Swift Current. J. J. Sawatzky had conducted the work in Calgary Alberta, and J. B. Wiens in Vancouver, British Columbia. Much of this work had been done with support from the Home Mission Board of the General Conference for which the Canadian Conference expressed its hearty appreciation. The large number of Mennonite people finding their way to the cities made this work increasingly important.

Radio programs in the German language had been carried over stations in Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

Some $7,539 had been contributed last year by the Canadian churches towards the work of the Home Mission Committee of the Canadian Conference. This was about $1,000 more than had been sent in the previous year. It was agreed that 3 collections a year preferably in February, May, and August be sent in by the churches for the support of this work.

Foreign Mission Committee Gives First Report

David Schulz of Altona, Man., gave a report on the work of the Foreign Missions Committee which had been elected for the first time last year. Schulz stated that the aim of this committee is: (1) to promote interest in foreign mission among the Canadian churches. This was to be done in cooperation with the Foreign Mission Board of the General Conference. It was suggested that interest in foreign missions might be promoted by giving a visiting missionary 3 services a day during his visit to a church instead of only one. In this way full advantage might be taken of the missionary's time when he was available, in order to present the work in greater detail and thus make a more lasting impression. Mission conferences of 2 or 3 days each at which time missionaries could be invited were also suggested. 2) Another aim of this committee is to encourage young people to prepare themselves for the work of foreign missions. This would involve financial assistance where needed. The Conferences decided to pay for the expenses involved in the training of at least one mission candidate. If more funds became available the number given support would be increased. 3) A third aim of the committee is to promote work among the Indians of Canada. At present work had been begun among the Indian halfbreeds of Matheson Island in Lake Winnipeg. Two young families had already been sent out as missionaries and have been working on this field during the past year. The government has also been willing to cooperate in this work by appointing Mennonite school teachers who regard their work as a work in missions as well as in education. The conference decided to encourage churches to send in one collection a year for the support of this work.

Five Bible Schools Active

The work of religious education was considered on the second day of the Conference. A report on the work of the Bible Schools was read by H. T. Klassen, Bible School teacher at Rosthern, Sask. This report indicated that at present there were 5 Bible Schools in operation in Canada in the following places: Abbotsford, B. C., with 47 pupils; Didsbury, Alberta, with 56 pupils; Swift Current, Sask., with 39 pupils, Rosthern, Sask., with 43 pupils; and Altona, Man., with 102 pupils —a total of 287 pupils. The average length of instruction in these schools is 100 days or 5 months. The percentage of time given to instruction in the German language is as follows: Abbotsford 50 per cent, Didsbury 60 per cent, Swift Current (German not used in instruction), Rosthern 45 percent, and Altona 65 percent.

Three Mennonite High Schools

-Day Conference

ton, Ont. These schools offer the regular high school course from grades 9 to 12. Besides this, instruction in German, religion, and Mennonite history is also stressed. The 368 pupils attending these schools were divided as follows: Rosthern, 148 students; Gretna, 138; and Leamington, 80 students. It was pointed out that Gretna, our oldest school had celebrated its 60th anniversary during this year. This school now occupies a new building. A building fund in memory of David Toews, founder of the school, has now been begun.

Bible College Gives First Diplomas

J. J. Thiessen reported on the work of the Bible College in Winnipeg. This college has now completed 3 years of instruction and had its first graduation exercises this year, at which time 12 candidates received their diplomas from the school. Reference was made to the fact that the new building purchased last year for the college is now half paid for. A misfortune caused by the flooding of the Red River forced the student body and teachers to evacuate the school for one month, during which time sessions were held in the Altona Bible School. It was agreed that the fourth Sunday in June be designated as Bible College Sunday at which time special collections could be sent in the support of the work of the college. The budget for meeting next year's expenses which was accepted by the Conference amounted to $24,000. However, $6,000 of this amount will be covered by income derived from the students themselves.

Ronald von Riesen gave a report in German on the work of the Board of Education of the General Conference. Andrew Shelly of Kitchener, Ontario, presented the work being done by the Seminary in Chicago.

Communion for 700

An innovation in the procedure of the Conference last year and continued again this year was the observance of the Lord's Supper on the evening of the first day of the Conference. G. G. Neufeld of Whitewater, Man., held the communion sermon and J. J. Thiessen officiated at this service. The 700 people participating in this Communion were served by the 18 elders present at the Conference. Those attending appreciated the spiritual privilege of associating together around the Lord's table.

A memorial service led by D. D. Klassen of Homewood, Manitoba, brought to the attention of the Conference the names of those workers who had passed to their heavenly reward during the past year. Amongst those mentioned were J. N. Hoeppner of Altona, Man., Jacob H. Janzen of Waterloo, Ontario, P. A. Penner, missionary to India, and P. H. Richert, member of the Foreign Mission Board of the General Conference.

Missions Festival on Sunday

The Missions Festival was held on Sunday July 2 in a large tent with a capacity of over 1,000 people. This meeting place was, however, not large enough to hold those who came to hear the speakers on home and foreign missions during the day as well as the program given by the young people from the surrounding churches in the evening. The ministers presenting the cause of Home Missions were J. H. Enns of Winnipeg, Man., and N. N. Driediger of Leamington, Ontario. Enns pointed out that home missions must begin at home or in one's own heart first of all. After having had a genuine Christian experience ourselves, we would naturally be interested in the advance of Christ's cause in our families and in the many fields of Christian Endeavor being promoted by our Conference. Driediger stated that the main motive back of our efforts as a Conference in the field of missions was the desire to glorify Christ and to build His kingdom. The work of foreign missions was presented by Miss Marie Regier, returned missionary to China, and John Thiessen, returned missionary from India. Both Miss Regier and Mr. Thiessen stressed the necessity of sending new workers into our mission fields.

Thiessen Gives Keynote Address

J. J. Thiessen, chairman of the Conference, gave the Conference sermon based on the text I Cor. 15:58, "Therefore my beloved brethern, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." It is not only necessary to keep present positions but there is also need to advance and to occupy new positions for our Lord.

Visitors from U. S. and Brazil

Peter Klassen, a minister of Brazil, was a special visiter at the Conference. He also gave a brief report indicating the spiritual and material needs of our brethern in South America. Klassen who is an able speaker will be giving further reports of the conditions in South America as he visits Canadian churches during the coming months. Other special visitors attending the Conference from outside of Canada were J. N. Smucker, president of the General Conference of Mennonites in North America, Marie Regier and John Thiessen, Ronald von Riesen, executive secretary of the Board of Education of the General Conference, Andrew Shelly, representing the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, P. K. Regier, executive-secretary of the General Conference, and Bruno Enns of Danzig, Germany.

Minister's Conference

The Minister's Conference met on Saturday, July 1, and was attended by 150 ministers from the five Canadian provinces of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia. The discussion of this Conference centered around the dangers threatening the faith and practices of the church in our day. It was agreed that a deepening of the spiritual life of the church was the best defense against all such evils.

Conference Statistics

According to latest statistics submitted by Benjamin Ewert, Conference statistician, 15,500 adult baptized members now belong to this Conference. Some 764 were added by baptism in 1949. These members are organized into 64 churches, are served by 268 ministers, and were represented by 210 delegates at this year's Conference.

The Conference meetings were held on the campus of Rosthern Junior College and in the Rosthern Church.

Jottings

EASTERN DISTRICT

—Hereford Church, Bally, Pennsylvania—Summer Bible school conducted for two weeks in our church came to a close on Friday evening, June 30. There was a total number of 65 pupils enrolled with an average attendance of 57. A special offering was taken to purchase testaments and Bibles for refugee children, amounting to $15.84. Other daily offerings amounted to $58.54. The total number of teachers was 16. Pastor Wilmer S. Shelly and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Paul J. Clemmer, and Mae Latshaw were the delegates appointed to attend the General Confernce sessions in Freeman, South Dakota.—Mae Latshaw. Corr.

—Fairfield Church, Fairfield Pennsylvania: B. F. Waas of Humboldt, Arizona, was elected to become our pastor. He has accepted the call and will take up his duties about September 1. According to present plans Lawrence Burkholder of Goshen, Indiana, will serve our congregation during the month of August.—Henry Burkhard, Corr.

WESTERN DISTRICT

—Brudertal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: We had infant consecration for six babies on May 14. Five young people were baptized and three joined the church by letter of transfer on May 28. Holy Communion was observed June 4. Marjorie Plenert, of this church, and Willard Haury Jr., Canton, were married June 2. The Johannestal, Hillsboro Mennonite, Hillsboro Evangelical U. B., and Brudertal churches this summer again will have union services on the spacious lawn of our church.—Mrs. Waldo R. Nickel, Corr.

WEDEL CONCLUDES 46-YEAR SERVICE TO ONE CONGREGATION

—First Church of Christian, Moundridge, Kansas: On June 25, P. P. Wedel preached his farewell sermon after serving our church for over 46 years. His resignation took effect on July 1. Rev. and Mrs. Wedel were honored guests at a social hour given for them by the church on his last Sunday as our minister. The West Zion Christian Endeavor organizations presented a program in our church on Sunday evening, June 25. On Sunday, July 9, we held our last service in our old church building. Holy communion was observed at this time. The next Sunday, July 16, services were held in the basement of the new building where we shall continue to have services until the church is ready for dedication.—Mrs. Willis Voran, Corr.

—Hoffnungsau Church, Inman, Kansas: We had a child consecration service on Mother's Day. The Junior Sunday School classes presented a program on May 30. On Pentecost morning five young people were baptized and communion services were held the following Sunday. At a recent C. E. program Miss Alfrieda Regier related experiences and also showed pictures on her work in Mexico as a voluntary service worker. Miss Cornelia Franz spent several weeks at the Mission station in Oklahoma teaching Bible school and is at present in Chicago, a member of a Voluntary Service Unit.—Mrs. Ben M. Ediger, Corr.

—Johannestal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: On June 20 a large group gathered on the church lawns for a reception for the Ernst Harders who recently returned from South America. On June 25 he brought the morning message. The church again is taking part in the union meetings, which are conducted on the lawns of the Bruderthal Church.—Mrs. Edwin Plenert, Corr.

NORTHERN DISTRICT

—Bethesda Church, Marion, South Dakota: The Hammond electric organ was dedicated June 25 in the evening. Mrs. Jack H. Tschetter, organist from Bethel Church in Mountain Lake, Minnesota, was the guest organist. Our church services are being recorded every Sunday morning by Elmer Tiahrt with his wire recorder. These are available to anyone who is interested. Missionary John Thiessen spoke and showed pictures the evening of June 19. John Schrag, Marion, gave us the morning message on July 2 during the absence of our paster, T. A. van der Smissen, who was called to Kansas because of his father's death. In the evening Bill Gering showed slides of their student summer tour in Europe last summer. Four babies were consecrated on Mother's Day.—Amelia Becker, Corr.

—Salem Church, Freeman, South Dakota: Eight persons were admitted to our church membeship May 28. Children's Day was observed on June 18. An afternoon program following a fellowship meal at the church was given by the 87 children who attended Bible School. Missionary John Thiessen spoke in our church on June 20. While our pastor was on vacation, Orlando Goering and Harris Waltner filled the pulpit. —Alice Kaufman, Corr.

MIDDLE DISTRICT

—First Church, Chicago, Illinois: Since the installation of our pastor, Aaron J. Epp, on March 12, the church under his direction is promoting a neighborhood visitation program. New members who joined our congregation are Mr. and Mrs. Walter Sims and Mr. Bob Witty. A candlelight Good Friday service was sponsored by the Vesper Circle. Choir was organized and directed by Paul Boschman, student at the Chicago Seminary. The young people are conducting a cleaning and painting campaign. They have also purchased a sound movie projector. Their baseball team currently has four victories. The Mennonite Singers from Bethel College were our guests June 10 and 11 and sang to a capacity audience.—Edward Prohaska, Corr.

PACIFIC DISTRICT

—Newport Church Newport, Washington: Two weeks of vacation Bible school were held in the church with 42 pupils enrolled. The closing program on Friday evening was enjoyed by a goodly number of parents and friends. R. Schmidt and H. D. Hiebert attended the conference at Dallas, Oregon. The Men's Brotherhood entertained their families at a wiener roast at their regular meeting. Miss Helga Kemnitzer was here for a day in the interest of Bethel College. She spoke to the Young People's Organization.—Mrs. Henry Hiebert, Corr.

Into the Beyond

Mennonite Youth

"A United Mennonite Youth in Christ"

Sponsored by the Young People's Union of the General Conference. Editor. Esko Loewen. Topeka. Indiana

What is Our World Responsibility?

by Dorothy Kaufman
New Haven Connecticut

THE mid-century mark poses a number of issues for the youth of the world—issues which we Mennonite youth in our semi-isolated existence must face. A paramount concern is one's responsibility toward one's neighbor. This should be of special interest particularly to Mennonite youth, for our heritage and background is colored with an intense desire and concern to be associated with neighbors who are in need of our possible help. Of course we are engaged in relief projects that are being carried on by the various branches of the Mennonite Church. These, it goes without saying, are indeed commendable and should certainly appear on the credit side of our books. Efforts in rehabilitation of certain slum areas in large cities, work in mental hospitals, et cetera, all fall in line with a concern for one's neighbors. But it would seem that these efforts, noteworthy as they are, are inadequate. Our history points up the fact that the founding fathers of the Faith had a deep concern that those who were directing the economic, social and political life of the people also have a vision of the gospel. They made frequent requests that public debates be held so that people would be made aware of problems that were of deep concern to the church as well as the state. They became righteously indignant over tyranny and misguidance in "ruling places." With this in mind, can we pose the question, "Are we doing everything in our power to keep those who have control of our national destiny aware of the relevance of the basic assertions of the gospel to national and international policy?" If our answer is in the negative, what are we doing but perhaps ineffectually folding our hands, wondering at the mistrust and fear that is growing rampant in the country as the result of party politics in our capitol city, and continuing with our daily tasks with a sanctimonious feeling of disguest for those who do not share our feeling of brotherly love?

Have we done any thinking in regard to the current cold war which is taking a tenacious hold on the peoples of the world? Or is this a problem that we leave up to our statesman to do as they see fit? Should we have a regard for a nation which is avowedly anti-religious—particularly since this nation represents to many of us a place of persecution? Is it possible for us to think in terms of the relevance of the gospel for our relationship to the Russian people?

These same problems have disturbed another group which is somewhat similar in its understanding of the Christian principles to the Mennonite Church—the Quakers. In an attempt to understand the problem more fully they have delegated some of their finest minds to work out a comprehensive study of American-Soviet relations. They admit that they have not solved the dilemma that is disturbing the world. But their report has received widespread publicity even in such wary places as Washington, D. C. They have compiled the report with the belief that "moral insights are relevant to even the most difficult political issues of our times." The following summary is only superficial. It is not an attempt to convince the reader that he must accept wholesale the considerations and recommendations. It is merely a review of what a concerned group has done to inform our politicians what course they think would be the Christian course to pursue in regard to our relations with Russia and as such it should be thoughtfully considered by Mennonites.

"In a world darkened with clouds of trouble, what can we say our responsibility as Christian youth is?"

In making their report the committee tried to be as realistic in their approach as possible. So often the criticism leveled at peace groups is that their approach is always too unrealistic and fails to understand the real issues of politics—that while it sounds very well as far as words are concerned, it is hardly a practical program which might be put into action. However, it is fair to say that this report has managed to pass the judgment of a number of hardened realists and has been given some thought and recognition.

The first basic consideration upon which the report stands is the overwhelming desire on the part of the peoples of the world for peace. People are weary of war and its destruction—the old cliches used by propagandists to paint glamourous pictures of war no longer have the ring that stirs men to take up arms and march.

Then, too, there has been much talk of a revolt within the Soviet government, of a weakening of the leadership, of a possibility of Stalin's death, of a much-hoped-for breakdown and collapse of communism from within. However, the Quakers feel there is much more evidence to support the possibility that communism will be with us for a long time to come. And because of the apparent stability of the Western democracies, it is unlikely that either system will suddenly perish—unless via the bomb method. As a result it would be wiser and saner to direct our energies toward making it possible that both systems can exist at the same time. However, because of ignorance and misunderstanding the popular opinion is that no similarities between the two systems exist. Therefore we have no common group on which to build understanding, cooperation, et cetera. There is no doubt that there are many basic differences in the aim and economic and political methods of the two systems. But let us consider a few of the similarities. Both the United States and Russia are comparatively young and ambitious civilizations interested in the materialistic rather than the spiritual, both have developed—to some extent—a scorn of class distinctions. We are impressed with the Russian material accomplishment (development of natural resources, for example) and they in turn are interested in American efficiency, mass production, et cetera. Fundamentally, both systems desire to promote the general welfare—they differ in defining it.

Y.P.U. Workshop

HOW WOULD you like to help write a book? It is a thrill to see the printed results of your labors go out to the hands of others who desire to learn from your experience and your information.

The Y. P. U. Workshop will help write a pamphlet. The pamphlet is now in manuscript form. It has been written by Elmer Ediger. It deals with youth and the local church. It faces the problems everyone faces who has a local church youth program. It is not a completed product, the original draft needing revision. The Y. P. U. Workshop will do that revising. It will be an exciting and interesting task.

Officers and leaders of local youth organizations—plan to attend Y. P. U. Workshop and the General Conference. The Workshop is from August 18-23 at Camp Byron, South Dakota. Costs are $1.50 per day for camp.

We must not lose sight of the fact that the present conflict is not the first in history in which two great powers have been in opposition to each other. For example, Protestants and Catholics were in constant strife during the Reformation period. Their bitter opposition against each other continued long after the initial break, but both have managed to survive and a certain amount of toleration and cooperation is practiced now. This is only one incident which could be cited. It would seem that in our case also enough similarity exists between the two differing factions to permit at least a degree of understanding and cooperation without resorting to the senseless modern method of reconciling a problem—by blowing it off the face of the earth.

One of the basic psychological effects of the cold war is that both nations fear each other and this fear has spread to the entire world. And because it is seemingly impossible for nations to function as understanding and trusting agents while they fear each other, it would seem apparent that the combating of this fear is another primary consideration in any talk for peace and world understanding. Can fear, insecurity, and distrust be dispelled by a mad race at armaments and by constant talk and speculation as to who possesses the biggest and most destructive bomb? Can even the most democratic nation continue to remain free and democratic if reliance on military power and constant fear be hammering at the very foundations of that democracy? The annoying habit that history has in repeating itself might give us the answer. Armaments and the competition for military supremacy is likely to be a strong contributing factor towards war.

The last consideration is perhaps the most debatable—that present evidence does not indicate that either the United States or the Soviet Union intends to promote its foreign policy by military aggression. Up to the present there has been very little indication that the American people would support an aggressive war. Further, there is little evidence that the morale of the Soviets is such that it would be equal to the strain of aggressive warfare now. The Communists are concern-

by Owen Gingerich

ON calm nights many of us like to go out under the clear sky for a mental journey through the heavens. For a longer trip, there is nothing better than a telescope to probe beyond the naked-eye limits. Only with a telescope can we see the rings of Saturn, or the stars of the Great Globular Cluster in Hercules.

Few of us have the resources merely to go out and buy a telescope. However, hundreds of amateurs have, instead, built their own excellent instruments. Anyone with time and patience can make an astronomical telescope.

To begin, we need a piece of glass for a mirror, and another for a tool. "But wait a minute," I hear someone saying. "I've never heard of a mirror in a telescope. Don't you mean a lens?" It is true that most small telescopes are made with lenses, and we look straight through the tube. But a glass lens acts as a prism and makes the image of a star colored. In order to avoid this, good telescope lenses are made of two pieces of different glass, making four surfaces which must be accurately polished.

Therefore most amateurs make a curved mirror which has only one finished surface. Like a lens, the mirror focuses the light to a point, which is then viewed with an eyepiece. Only, with a mirror, we must put a small prism in the converging beam of light to bring it to the side of the tube, so our heads won't be in the way.

The size of the mirror, and not the power of magnification tells us the most about a telescope. Thus to build a six-inch telescope, we must first purchase a specially made piece of pyrex glass six inches in diameter (about $3.50). For a tool we will use a piece of plate glass equally large.

Our first task is to put a concave dip on the mirror blank. This is done by placing a little No. 80 carborundum and water on the tool, and then grinding the pyrex back and forth across the tool. When the pyrex is at the end of a stroke, the weight of the glass hanging over the edge of the tool will cause the carborundum to grind faster, hollowing out the center of the disk. At the same time, the lower piece becomes convex. Both surfaces become spherical, because those are the only surfaces that will keep contact in all positions.

After an hour or so we can already see that the surface is becoming curved. We can test it in a dark room with a flashlight, by finding the place where the reflected beam appears to fill the whole mirror. This position is the center of curvature of the mirror, from which all testing is done. The actual length of the telescope, however, will be only one-half as long. The maker has the freedom of selecting the telescope length. However, a long telescope will be difficult to mount, while a short one does not give as much magnification. Forty-eight inches has been selected as the compromise length for a six-inch telescope, although instruments are actually made in many sizes.

When the mirror reaches the right curvature (usually after several hours), we are ready to go on to the next step. This is the fine grinding, which removes the pits and scratches left by the No. 80 carborundum. After an hour and a half on the next grade, an inspection should show that only No. 150 pits are left. We then take the next grade in the series, No. 240, and in a similar manner work through this and the other four to seven grades of carborundum and emery used.

But still, though the surface is smooth and free from scratches (we hope), it is far from finished. We are ready now to pour a "lap," for polishing. This lap is merely a layer of pitch placed on the glass tool. The pitch is a mixture of about 90% rosin and 10% pine tar. The tool is warmed to about 100 degrees in a pan of water, removed, dried, and the warm pitch is poured on the tool, spiraling in from the edge. Meanwhile, the mirror is painted with a solution of precision optical rouge and water. When the pitch has cooled a little, the mirror is pressed on the pitch, carefully so that not to many bubbles form between the surfaces.

When the lap is cool, the mirror is slid off and small channels are cut across the lap, about 1½ inch apart, forming square facets. The mirror is again replaced, using more rouge solution to prevent sticking, and left on the lap so that each facet will maintain perfect contact with the mirror.

Using the rouge as abrasive, we can again proceed to stroke the mirror across the lap. At the same time, the mirror is slowly turned, and the worker changes position continually so that several successive strokes are not made in the same direction across the lap.

After about two hours, when the surface has brightened, the mirror is knife-edge tested. For this test, we place a pinhole source at the center of curvature of the mirror, about eight feet from the glass. The light source could be just a lamp under a coffee can with a small hole punched in it. And for a knife edge, a block with a razor blade taped to one side will work.

Now if the mirror surface is part of a perfect sphere, all the rays of light from a pinhole at the center will be reflected back to a point at the center. (We can move the light slightly to one side to get at the returning beam of light.) If we place our eye just behind the reflected point of light, the mirror will appear filled with light. If we cut through the returning beam at the point, all the light will be cut off at once, and the entire surface will appear dark. If there were a little bump on the mirror, some of the reflected light would fall beside the image of the pinhole, and that part of the mirror would still appear bright if the razor blade had blocked off only the pinhole reflection. In this manner we can measure errors as small as one one-millionth of an inch.

However, a paraboloid instead of a sphere is the geometrical surface which would reflect the parallel beams of starlight to a perfect focus. Those interested in seeing how a paraboloid appears under the knife-edge test should obtain a copy of Making Your Own Telescope, by Thompson, which may be obtained from the Sky Publishing Company, Cambridge 38, Mass. The best astronomical mirrors are made with a paraboloidal surface, although good results may be obtained with a spherical mirror.

If the mirror has a good figure at the end of ten to fourteen hours of polishing, we may call it done. A very thin coat of aluminum needs to be placed on the surface to make it a mirror, a process usually done professionally.

After the mirror has been made, a simple mounting may be easily built. For several years I used a mirror mounted in a cardboard rug tube. My present telescope is open, and has only a structural iron frame. Some amateurs prefer to use a tube of galvanized iron. The prism and the eyepiece needed can be secured from war surplus.

No matter what type of construction is used, the maker will be much happier if it is sturdily built, free from quivers and shakes. Then the owner will be set to explore the skies via the first-class passage of his own rocket ship.

ed primarily with a series of economic revolutions, and a war would involve costly setbacks in first rehabilitating the invaded and conquered countries.

Keeping the above in mind the committee further proposed some recommendations to better our relationships with Russia. Any encouragement of trade between the East and the West would be advantageous economically to both sides as well as other countries in Europe and Asia. A united Germany being made a member of the world community would be beneficial in trade development as well as for social, cultural, and purely humanitarian reasons. And in order to resolve much of the tension between the two factions it is recommended that the United Nations be strengthened as an instrument for settling disputes and that it be developed into a more effective instrument of world government.

These in brief are the findings of one concerned peace group. Their voice has at least been heard in "high places." Is there anything that we, who are also a concerned peace group, can do to indicate that we too are aware of our responsibility to our own nation and to our world neighbors?—even Russia? Or are we to continue in our habitual mode of living—giving relief to suffering areas after the wars have subsided and having supreme confidence that the $10,500 budgeted to the General Conference Peace Committee will take care of any and all work preventive of future wars and suffering we may wish to do? This is our problem!

Follow Me

JESUS stopped by the bank of the river
Where the fishermen mended
Their nets; Without any pleading
Or coaxing, apologies or regrets,
He asked them to stop in the toil
Of the day and listen to what He had to say. While they looked At each other with glances free.
They heard him demand—follow Me.

They were men of minds as the men
Of today; they were men of toil
Who learned how to pray. There was
Thomas who doubted and peacemaker
Paul, men who could serve or Men who could fall. There were
Those who were quiet, whose words
Were brief, There were those like Peter
Whose tongue was his grief.

He chooses them now as He Chose them then, stopping to speak
To the hearts of men, disregarding
Their place in life, refusing Excuses of time and strife.
We dare not bury ourselves
In sin, until the voice of the Lord
Is dim. Heed to His voice when
The call shall be, live to serve
And follow Me. —Marjorie Myers, Lansdale, Penna.

duced it should be fully in harmony with our principles and beliefs. If we are not creative and resourceful enough to adopt symbols that will express our principles and beliefs we should at least develop a sense of propriety as to what constitutes a violation of the same.

With many of the Reformers our forefathers of the 16th century favored the removal of crucifixes, altars, candles, etc. from the houses of worship which they considered barriers between themselves and the Lord. To us it may seem that they went to extremes. However we must remember what great significance was attached to these media of worship in Catholic and other liturical churches. That is the case even today. The altar with the ever-present God in the bread and wine of the "sacrament" is central. For the non-liturgical churches, and among them the Mennonites, the open Bible is the most prominent source and center of worship. Therefore, when we in our day, move from the simple non-liturgical worship in the direction of the more elaborate ceremony let us be aware of our heritage. Our houses and forms of worship should be in harmony with our principles and our mission as a Mennonite church.

What About Mennonite Church Architecture?

The question may be asked, what constitutes Mennonite church architecture? The Mennonites have likely not developed more of a specific church architecture than have the Methodists, Baptists, and some of the other denominations. And yet there have been certain characteristics peculiar to them. The Mennonites, of Holland, Prussia, Russia, and the eastern United States have at times developed certain characteristics which seemed to express simplicity, honesty, and integration of their basic principles. In saying this we must be aware of the fact that there are changes of taste, of need, and of functional purposes even in a building like a church. A building that was beautiful, functional, and in harmony with Mennonite principles a century ago in Russia or Prussia will hardly stand this test without modification in our day in America. In the prairie states and provinces we observe a change that takes place. Thus far almost every generation built a new church—mostly a wooden structure. Now there

TORONTO,ONTARIO—Toronto, this summer, will be a center of world-wide Christian cooperation.

Protestant and orthodox church leaders from over 60 countries on five continents will be gathered at Toronto and environs for a series of twelve conferences and assemblies to plan action and establish policy affecting over 160,000,000 Christian believers throughout the world.

Lasting from July 3rd to August 21st, the conference series will include the massive World Convention on Christian Education, with an estimated 5,000 delegates and visitors in attendance, to be held at the University of Toronto, August 10-16.

The Central Committee of the World Council of Churches, the 90-member policy-making body for cooperative action among 156 Protestant and Orthodox churches in 44 countries, will be holding its annual meeting July 8-15 at Emmanuel College, Toronto. Expected for the Central Committee meeting are such world-famed church leaders as G. Bromley Oxnam of the Methodist Church, New York Area, Martin Niemoeller of the Evangelical Church, Germany, and Michio Kozaki, President of the United Church of Japan.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.—Delegates and officers of two smaller Mennonite bodies met on the campus of Grace Bible Institute, Omaha, May 31—June 1, comparing and studying their faith and practice and seeking ways of uniting their bodies for future work and practice.

They are the Evangelical Mennonite church, made up of congregations located in Ohio ,Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, and Kansas, and the Evangelical Mennonite Brethren, having churches in the western states and Canada. —Menn. Weekly Review.

PASADENA, CAL.—A mammoth evangelistic rally, expected to be the largest of its kind has been scheduled for the Rose Bowl, Sept. 14, with Billy Graham as principal speaker.

NEW YORK.—The charter of The National Bible Institute has been amended, changing the name to SHELTON COLLEGE, and, in addition to the diplomas and degrees now offered, authorizing the school to confer the degree of Bachelor of Arts. The change was enacted May 18-19, 1950, by the New York State Regents.

CHICAGO—The American Bowling Congress narrowly escaped a court order revoking its charter and was fined $2,500 for limiting its membership to white males.

June 30 was the "half-way mark" of the year 1950—in terms of time. In terms of meeting the budget needs we cannot say it was the "half-way mark." Only one of the major boards has met this mark; several boards and committees have not or have barely reached this mark half-way; the average for all boards and committees falls 11 per cent short of meeting the half-way mark.

This month considerable gains were made by the W.M.A. and the Y.P.U.

In behalf of the boards and committees we again say a hearty "thank you" to each one who has shared in the work of your Conference.

Very sincerely,
Edna Ruth Mueller, Office Secretary

seems to be a tendency toward building more permanent structures by giving preference to stone and brick. This makes it more urgent that our planning of these churches be carefully done.

These few observations indicate that there is no ready-made Mennonite church pattern in existance that could be used everywhere. However the absence thereof, inconsistencies that have occurred, and the increasing awareness that we have a mission also in this area should arouse us to united action to study this matter carefully and to develop, if possible, a church architecture that will be in harmony with our heritage and express our principles and beliefs. Our forefathers may have made a mistake by abolishing too many of the Christian symbols. Let us not make another mistake by blindly accepting symbols which have no meaning for us or which are in contradiction to our principles. A genuine Christian faith and a real appreciation of art will creat and adopt symbols that are in harmony with each other. Here lies our task.

LAY PEOPLE, 70 PER CENT

Fifty General Conference delegate certificates had been received from churches on July 20. These 50 congregations hold almost one-fourth of the votes to be cast at the Conference. Thus far, almost 30% of the delegates are ministers of the gospel; 50% are laymen; 20% are laywomen.

Pastors are encouraged to send the remaining delegate certificates to the General Conference Headquarters, 722 Main, Newton, Kansas, as soon as possible.

Upon arrival at Freeman, South Dakota, delegates may begin registering for rooms, delegate badges, a copy of the Conference Report, a pad of official ballots, also checking with the Conference Secretary certifying arrival at Freeman.

Registration will probably begin Wednesday, August 23, 2 p.m. All delegates from churches to the Women's, Men's, and Young People's meetings are entitled to a copy of the complete Conference Reports—a book of 224 pages.

We ask your prayers that the hearts of all may be prepared for the periods of inspiration and for the momentous questions facing us. God has the answers for us if we will but listen for His will. Hope to see you at Freeman!

ATTENTION OUGHT to be called to two types of ministry by the church which represent a rather undramatic though no-less strategic and far-reaching service. The first of these ministries is that to Mennonite girls who go to work in larger cities as described in a Home Missions article (page 464 of the July 11 issue of THE MENNONITE). As far as we know this ministry is restricted to Canada. One has two questions about this ministry. First, why is it restricted to girls and has such a ministry been attempted to serve the young men who feel their calling is not on the farm? Second, why has this ministry been restricted to Canada? All the girls raised on the farm in the States do not stay on the farm. Let it be said that our concern is not basically that of keeping them for the Mennonite denomination, though this cannot be ignored. Our concern should be to keep them in the church itself, and no group is better prepared to do that than the group in which they have been raised provided that group has the willingness to adjust its ministry to the city environment. Sometimes one tires a bit of hearing over and over again that Mennonites are a rural people with a rural mission. If Mennonites are truly Christian, they must be interested in people in need wherever they are. By all means, let us cultivate our rural heritage, for the roots of the future are in the land. But this should not permit us to become indifferent to those who need Christ the minute we cross the city limit. The cities desperately need the men and women of clear vision, sensitive consciences, and willing hands who came from rural areas. Are we in the States passing up a real opportunity to serve our youth who feel the vocational call coming from an urban direction? Such centers if effectively placed and carefully administered could well be important "beachheads" in conquering our urban centers for Christ. Such centers holding forth the whole gospel for the whole of life for the whole world in terms of a twenty-four-hours-a-day ministry to young men and women who go into the network of a city's business can be a missionary task of the highest order.

THE OTHER MINISTRY we would like to refer to is the university and large-city fellowships that are occasionally reported in the pages of this publication. The girls' homes mentioned above are an opportunity for the church to make its gospel real on the vocational and economic levels where the rank and file of our people are. The university fellowships offer an unusual opportunity to penetrate the intellectual levels of our time with the gospel. This is most strategic from the long-range point of view. For it is the philosophies of life as they are formulated in our institutions of higher learning today that filter down to the level of the common man tomorrow determining the way of life of the future. Ministering to our graduate students in the larger universities and those of our students on the undergraduate level who for various reasons have seen fit to go to state schools offers a real opportunity to the church. If the church consists of any "two or three gathered in the name of Christ," then who knows but what some of these unlisted congregations may be serving real needs.

The trouble with too many of us is that we want to be Christian enough to be respectable, but worldly enough to be acceptable.—Charles R. Bell.

GETTING AWAY FROM THINGS

Some of us probably have a false notion of the possibility of getting away from our daily and nightly concerns. We take vacations and try to forget everything we've left behind. We go on trips, thinking that a range of mountains or the wide ocean can be a barrier to "the cares that infest the day." We go to "retreats," thinking possibly that we actually can retreat from our past and our present. Some people try to get away from other things by drinking liquors or by a continuous round of pleasures. "Forget it" is their slogan.

There is such a thing as a period of rest. And all

AS HIS ACTIVITIES lessened, his prayer ministry increased." These are the words that a friend of Carl Heinrich van der Smissen used to describe one who carried a perpetually youthful, vigorous, and active faith with him almost to the century mark. Van der Smissen has stood as a kind of General Conference landmark with his parents having been called from Germany to serve the Wadsworth Seminary, the first General Conference school, in the 1870's. Thirty-seven years of his own life were given to the ministry in General Conference churches—a life contribution in itself. Much of the life-span of many of our people has been served through his editorial ministry, beginning with the Kinderbote for the youthful readers and continuing with the Christlicher Bundesbote and the German Quarterlies all of which he served as editor in a ministry covering 30 years—another life contribution. His services to the Conference also included terms as member of the Conference Board of Publication and Board of Foreign Missions. His life of perpetual youthfulness as manifested by his intense interest and concern not for himself but for the cause of Christ even into the last moments of the sunset of life spell out an unforgetably living message for us who are left behind: One man completely devoted to Christ can multiply himself and his witness by the intenseness of his love and concern for Christ and others. "Greater works than these shall ye do."

So You Want to be a Missionary!

by Norma Blomquist

MANY FOLKS THINK that when a man or woman leaves the shores of this land to give themselves to mission work, all their problems are solved for them, and everything is perfect, forgetting they are the same human beings they were before they left this country, and have to meet and conquer many of the same temptations and unpleasantnesses as when here. Miss Norma Blomquist says:

"I have just returned from furlough. Everywhere I find young people who 'want to be missionaries' and churches that want to support missionaries. But among them all I find an appalling ignorance of what is really involved in being a missionary.

"Many think in terms of poverty. To others the physical handicap of being without the conveniences of civilization is the real sacrifice of a missionary.

"Much of the time these factors are not present at all, but there are other difficulties. And the person who thinks he wants to go to the mission field had better think carefully and untangle his motives before going further. So if you want to be a missionary, ask yourself, 'Why'?

"Is it so you can be patted on the head and be called 'wonderful' for making such a big sacrifice? (that will happen). Or because you have heard an inspiring message from a successful missionary and you want to be like him? Or because you pity the poor heathen sitting in darkness—quite unlike our own heathen brethren in the U.S.A. of course? Or because it takes less training than any profession in the homeland—or so you think?

"Let's be honest about the whole thing. It is a hard life considered from most angles, except that you will not have to do menial tasks as we call them. You will have a boy or a girl to wash your dishes and do your laundry and many other things. But it is still hard. (During the Famine and the war boys and girls left us so we were in for the menial tasks, added to the other work).

"It is a lonely life. You may be the only white person at your station, with the next station several days journey away. So you will need much inner resources to keep yourself from growing stale and narrow spiritually and intellectually.

"On the other hand you may be placed with several other missionaries, those who are your senior in the work, and perhaps one or two who came out with you. Unfortunately, however, missionaries are not the saints they are sometimes believed to be. You do not become a saint by crossing the ocean, nor do you become a missionary by leaving home.

"You are the same on the foreign field as you were at home, only more so. You will work with very human men and women, all of whom were leaders at home in their field of work, all with very different ideas. There will be clashes of opinion, sometimes clashes of personality, but you cannot run away. You are stuck there. You eat, play, work, pray with the same handful, day in and day out.

"You face the temptation of thinking you are rather good. The natives come to you for advice in all matters. Your word is law, and utmost deference is paid to you. There is no competition such as there is at home to keep you humble.

"Perhaps you will be unusually successful in winning the confidence of the people. If you are, do not be too surprised if one of your fellow missionaries who is having a hard time getting adjusted becomes jealous

Further Comments on the Proposed Revision of the Constitution of the General Conference

by H. A. Fast

ONCE more we urge members of our General Conference to study carefully, open-mindedly, and prayerfully the proposed revision of our constitution as printed in the May 9 issue of The Mennonite. (Please note in the same number the article on page 324 explaining the major changes recommended).

This revision of the constitution deserves the mature thinking of every member of the Conference. Mature judgments are possible only where they have had time and opportunity to grow and ripen. Much valuable time can be saved at the Conference if delegates have previously thoroughly familiarized themselves with the provisions of the constitution and have evaluated the proposed changes in an unhurried and open-minded manner. When the constitution comes up for discussion they will be prepared to share their best judgment and express it in a clear and forthright manner.

The question is sometimes raised whether under the new set-up the large boards with various sub-committees will not be overloaded with work. That depends on how the work is organized.

Take the Board of Missions as an illustration. This Board would probably first of all take an over-all view of its total responsibility. Then it would determine how this work could best be divided into appropriate units of responsibility. This would involve defining areas of responsibility of the various units, establishing policies of work and cooperation, and allocating to each unit an appropriate share in the budget. Next it would seek to organize its members for effective functioning into the sections and committees indicated keeping in mind the primary importance of its two sections on Foreign Missions and Home Missions. It should be noted that the constitution authorizes the board to appoint as members of its committees such additional qualified persons from the Conference at large as may be needed for efficint administration. This board needs without question a full-time secretary and in this new cooperative arrangement such a secretary is completely warranted and can be adequately supported.

Under this new arrangement the sections and committees of the Board would do the hard work and the Board as such would carry administrative responsibility for the policies, the proper functioning, and the coordination of its various units. The Board probably would not meet oftener than once a year. Its executive committee would clear quickly most matters that might be referred to it by its committees or sections. This arrangement would eliminate some duplicating of efforts now existing between the Home and Foreign Mission Boards and unify their efforts for a more effective impact on the whole missionary effort of our Conference.

The above observations with regard to the functioning of one board could with variations be made with equal validity in regard to the other three boards. It is self-evident that boards and committees will have adjustments to make to fit into the new arrangements and relations. However the adjustment should not be too difficult and if board and committee members enter into the new arrangement with faith and the will to succeed, the transition experience should be brief and not unpleasant.

of you. Or it may be an older missionary who has never quite won the people. Or you may be smitten with the same disease.

"There will come times of discouragement when you have labored faithfully for months and can see no fruits. The Christian you were so sure had come into a vital faith slips back into grossest sin. The burden of these sinful children almost breaks your heart, and you wonder if the time will ever come when they will really walk in the Light. You face the bitterness of seeing souls hungry bcause you are just one and no one else comes to help.

"There comes discouragement, too, when you realize with deep regret that you are not adequately prepared. You had always been a live wire Christian at home, acquainted with the work to such an extent that you knew what verses to use in personal evangelism. You went to high school and perhaps to a Christian College or a Bible school, and felt that was sufficient training to win souls—which was all you expected to do on the field.

"But on the mission field your lack of Bible training, your ignorance of the culture and psychology of the people, your poor language background rise up to remind you are ill-prepared for such an honor.

"It is amazing how varied and many are the temptations which come to a missionary. At home you were even-tempered most of the time, but somehow on the field you find the hot climate, the responsibility of always being a missionary, the frequent attacks of fever seem too wear your nerves thin. The slowness of your boys irritate you. A broken dish calls forth sharp words. The carelessness of a student nurse brings out with clarity the tension and temper of the mission doctor or nurse.

You enjoyed gossip at home, you indulge in it on the field with painful results. You slipped in your private devotions once in a busy while at home; you find yourself too busy out here, even though the need is greater if possible.

"Do you still want to be a missionary?

"There must be only one reason why you do and that is not because of the ease of the task, nor the glory of it, nor the adventure connected with it, nor even the pity for the heathen. There must be only one rea-

Information Concerning the Draft

AKRON, PA.—The recent order of the President that Selective Service classification be brought up to date, and the more recent actual drafting of men for the armed forces, may affect the cases of young men holding conscientious objection to war.

The extension of Selective Service has not changed the provision of deferment for registrants who are conscientious objectors to both combatant and noncombatant military service.

Neither has it changed the classification procedure which specifies that registrants are to be placed into the lowest class for which they are eligible, according to the following list:

Class I-A available for military service
Class I-A-O conscientious objector available for noncombatant military service
Class II-A deferred for non-agricultural occupation
Class II-C deferred for agricultural occupation
Class III-A deferred because of dependents
Class IV-D exempted as a minister or ministerial student
Class IV-E deferred as a conscientious objector opposed to both combatant and noncombatant service
Class IV-F physically or mentally unfit
Class V-A over the age of liability for military service.

Registrants holding conscientious objection to both combatant and noncombatant military service should accept no classification above IV-E. To do so is construed to mean that the registrant waives claim to IV-E. If the Local Board gives class I-A, I-A-O, or one of the deferments above IV-E, the registrant should write to the Board within ten days, stating that he wishes to appeal for Class IV-E. Likewise, any men who have been placed in one of these other classes and have not appealed heretofore, should do so without further delay. The regulations provide that while an appeal should be requested within ten days after the Notice of Classification is received, the Local Board may nevertheless accept an appeal if the failure to appeal at the proper time was due to misunderstanding. Likewise the Local Board can reopen a case at any time if new information affecting the classification of the registrants is presented.

Men should be sure that they have submitted to the Local Board a carefully completed copy of the Special Form for Conscientious Objectors, SS Form No. 150, as it is this information upon which the determination of a IV-E classification is based. There is no time deadline after which this Special Form cannot be secured, but it will be much more difficult to make convincing claim of conscientious objection if this Form was not completed at the proper time promptly after having completed the classification questionnaire.

The Peace Section of the Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pa. stands ready to furnish specific information and assistance to anyone having a problem in relation to the draft.

Concerning Packing of Christmas Bundles

A number of people have inquired regarding the service offered by a Department Store of New Holland, Pa., in supplying complete and ready packed Christmas Bundles for specified prices.

This firm is known to be reliable and the service offered is appreciated and useful in cases where the proper materials cannot be readily obtained and packing by the contributor is not practical.

One of the purposes, however, in the Christmas Bundle program has been the personal nature of the contribution which children and young people can make in actually packing the gift for a needy child overseas. The more personal the gift, the greater its value can be in this respect. It is therefore recommended that in most cases in the average Mennonite congregations, children be encouraged to personally prepare the Bundles which they wish to contribute.

Camp Landon Serves

The Service Unit at Camp Landon, Gulfport, Miss., recently assisted an elderly couple of the community during a period of illness. After a few days the husband was again able to care for his invalid wife, and assume other household duties.

Unit members installed blackboards in the North Gulfport Colored School, after an interested friend in Kansas had contributed funds for the material. The teacher and pupils expressed appreciation for this facility which was so much needed.

Groups Contribute for Hospital Furnishings

Sewing Circles and other women's groups of the Pacific Coast churches are making significant contributions toward furnishing for Kings View Homes, the Mennonite mental hospital at Reedley, California. To furnish the hospital adequately will require a considerable sum, and the gifts of church groups who undertake to provide certain smaller or larger items, will help materially in making the institution a home in which proper care can be given to the mentally ill. Groups in the Pacific area or elsewhere may secure more information by contacting the Kings View Homes staff.

Service Board Changes Location

The National Service Board for Religious Objectors, which served during the C.P.S. program in a capacity of liaison between the church groups and Selective Service, and has continued since the war in the interests of freedom of conscience, is moving from its present office location at 941 Massachusetts Avenue, N. W., to smaller quarters at 1000 Eleventh Street, N. W., Washington 1, D.C. The N.S.B.R.O. service and concept of work continues as in the past, with the reduction in office facilities making possible greater economy. Inquiries regarding matters related to Selective Service, may be directed to the new address of N.S.B.R.O. or to the Peace Section, M.C.C., Akron, Pa.

Intercessory Prayer a Stewardship

by John E. Fretz

CHRISTIANS, especially laymen, are often content to limit their stewardship to the material things of life.

There is something joyous in sharing the contents of one's pay envelope, the returns of the harvest on the farm, and the value of the property one may hold, through our gifts to the church in it's world wide ministry.

But, this is a small part. Far above and beyond these expeirences lies the all important privilege of INTERCESSORY PRAYER as a very definite part of our Christian stewardship. "To wrestle in prayer was as much a part of faithful stewardship as to proclaim the message or to spend money for the welfare of a growing congregation," wrote Bishop Cushman, of the early church.

Now I cannot put my thoughts or words into the proper theological terms, but I have a growing conviction that Christian laymen everywhere, must consider intercessory prayer as of prime importance in our daily schedule as we go about our work and play. We should participate not in the formal and public prayers alone or the " 'gimme' this or that" petition of so many who ought to know better, but in real wrestling, unceasing until one lays hold upon the very power of God; in the secret place or even upon the busy thoroughfares of the city this can be done.

This kind of praying for others does something for you and to you. Selfishness begins to disappear, when you share another's burden; your burdens are lighter too when stacked alongside the crushing grief and heavy load of the one for whom you are praying. There is infinitely more compassion and understanding of the needs of others.

Another factor must also be acknowledged. The most humble person will experience a new vision of his worth and place in God's great cause. His horizon stretches as he becomes less small and of Christlike character; and so very often this radiant personality is seen by his fellow-men. This is indeed strange in our world of tension and anxiety.

Does your pastor make prayer requests from the pulpit? This is our opportunity for a real service as laymen and must not be received lightly. Sunday school teachers would do well to assign or perhaps suggest definite matters for intercessory prayer during the week, on the part of the members of the class; Reports and thanks for answered prayer both stimulate and strengthen our testimony.

Few would dispute the statement that our mission and relief work could be greatly enlarged instead of embarassing our Boards by deficits and, what is even more serious, limiting and curtailing the preaching and teaching of the gospel in our fields. If we laymen really meant business and took this serious matter to the Lord in prayer, the work would go forward. And why shouldn't we?

Today's screaming newspaper headlines make our hearts heavy. What reaction comes to you as a Christian citizen and steward now?

It may be a paradox, but today's world condition brought about to a large extent by a smug and indifferent professing Church, brings with it a wonderful opportunity for real Christ-centered witnessing. Intercessory and unceasing prayer may be made not only for our friends' needs, our fellow workers in the mission and relief fields but for our national leaders alongside of our so called enemies. Somehow, suffering and prayer have always gone together and much of the church's history has been written on black background (and this chapter will be no different), but we know that "Prayer is the mightest force in the world" and this force is only in the hands of Christianity. It is high time we make more use of it!

It is refreshing to reflect that this "force" is within reach of all. Everyone can pray. Before God, the lisp of a child, the profound utterance of the philosopher, the aged saint, or the busy executive's prayer stand equal. Fortunately, there are many millions of devout believers already forming a faithful nucleus throughout the world. Would that our fellow-members everywhere joined these ranks through the medium of intercessory prayer, in our homes throughout the Conference.

No bank ever closes its business day until its balance is found to be absolutely correct; and no Christian should close a single day until his accounts with God have been perfectly adjusted alone with him.—R. A. Torrey.

Jottings

WESTERN DISTRICT

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Oklahoma: W. F. Unruh was our guest speaker June 25. He based his thoughts on "Tasks of the Church." Whether we are called to work or teach, let us not do just one and neglect the other, but let us be faithful in both and, thus, further the cause of Christ. Tuesday afternoon, around eighteen young people attended a Youth Rally at the City Park in Carnegie.—Wilfred Ewy, Corr.

—Eden Church, Inola, Oklahoma: Sunday, July 2, Missionary P. W. Penner and Mrs. Penner brought the morning message and came back Thursday evening to show slides of their work in India. Brother Penner seems to be gaining strength right along. Friday they made a few calls at homes as Mrs. Penner has some relatives and they have many old friends here.Saturday they returned home with Sol. Mouttet. We wish them God's blessing in their labors and hope to see them back here sometime.—Jacob Froese, Corr.

—Meadow Church, Colby, Kansas: June 4 our church was well represented at the Mennonite Fellowship at Ransom. All enjoyed this fellowship with the other four Mennonite churches of this area. Our summer Bible school this year had a record enrollment of 66. The program by the school was recorded by Marvin Schmidt which was of interest to all. Six young people have returned for the summer and are active in the Young People's work of the church. They have several projects; among them are giving programs, painting signs, and rolling tracts, and distributing them. There are about 40 young people in the organization.—Mrs. W. H. Regier, Corr —First Church, Halstead, Kansas: Ten children were consecrated on Sunday, June 18. They were Judith Ann, Larry Dean, and Deloris Mae, children of Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Janzen; Stanley Kent, son of Mr. and Mrs. Milton Jantz; Karen Sue, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Keller; Pamela Ann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Errol Johnson; Elaine Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Mueller; Dianne Sue and Duane Edwin, children of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Regier; and Suzanne, daughter of Mr. anl Mrs. Robert Schroeder. The morning message by the pastor was "Prayer— the Parents' Resource."—Betty Franz, Corr.

—First Church, Halstead, Kansas: On June 25 five were received as members of the church—Henry Rupp by letter and Dale Dick, Forrest Dean Ewy, Larry Lee Flickinger, and Dorothy Janzen by baptism. After the morning services, eleven members of the congregation were elected as delegates to the General Conference at Freeman, South Dakota. Pastor Loris Habegger chose "Prayer—the Sinner's Plea" as the topic for his morning services.—Betty Franz, Corr.

—First Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: We are again enjoying our summer union services which are held at the Brudertal Church. Mrs. Ezra Bert and her daughter Vera Mae were baptized last Sunday and they with Cornelius Bartels from Wolf Point joined our membership roll, while Mr. and Mrs William Harms left us and joined the McPherson Church. We are again working with Christmas bundles. Frank Goertz and Anna Adrian were maried in our church July 9.—Corr.

MIDDLE DISTRICT

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Miss Mary Jean Smucker and Donald Moser were united in marriage June 17. Robert Romey and Miss Joanne Doyle were married June 30. Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Moser have returned from a 10,000 mile trip west which included a visit to the Oraibi Indian Mission Station in Arizona where they delivered in person some quilt patches from our Missionary Society to the Leonard Wiebes. The July program of the Missionary Society centered around the theme of home missions which included the story of John Mason Peck who was a hard-working, self-sacrificing missionary in the United States during pioneer days. Demonstrating the theme in a practical way, a linen shower was held for Mrs. Karl Fahrni who with her family has recently immigrated here from Switzerland.—Mrs. Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

PACIFIC DISTRICT

—First Church, Reedley, California: Our summer Bible school was held the last two weeks of June with the enrollment over one hundred. Besides their Bible study for which the new Mennonite materials were used, each class worked on mission projects including making and filling school bags for overseas distribution, making seventy stuffed animal toys, patching and knotting a quilt, and assembling the contents for a Christmas bundle. Following the closing program, work books and projects were displayed.—Mrs. R. Harder, Corr.

—Glendale Church, Lynden, Washington: We are thankful for the interest that was again shown in the vacation Bible school. Our enrollment was 248 with 30 teachers and helpers. Our church sent eight delegates to the Pacific District Conference at Dallas, Ore. In the absent of Dan Toavs, the morning message on June 18 was brought by F. D. Koehn. The evening service on June 25 consisted of reports by the delegates which were much enjoyed and appreciated. On July 4 our Sunday School had the annual picnic and program. J. R. Barkman and a group from the Grace Children's Home spent the day with us. July 6 the Ladies Mission Circle held their regular meeting at the church. Our delegate, Mrs. Dan Toavs, brought us an interesting report on the conference. On Sunday morning, July 9, Miss Helga Kemnitzer, a Bethel College student from Germany, spoke to the young people. For the evening service Mr. and Mrs Aaron Suckau presented their tract-placing work and showed the film "The Dying Thief."—Mrs. Clarence C. Schmidt, Corr.

EASTERN DISTRICT

—Deep Run Church, Bedminster, Pennsylvania: About 135 attended the summer Bible school. J. Herbert Fretz is beginning a series of sermons on the book of Jonah: "A man who hated Ninevah," "A prayer in deep waters," "A second chance that worked," and "A gracious God and a pouting prophet." A joint Christian Endeavor "Sunset Service" out of doors was held Sunday evening at the Norman Gahman farm overlooking the beautiful Deep Run Valley. A loud speaking system with hearing aids and extension in the nursery and annex has been installed.—Corr.

—Zion Church, Souderton, Pennsylvania A displaced persons family sponsored by our congregation has arrived from Europe and in the next few days will make their home in Morwood. Arrangements have been made through M.C.C. by our committee consisting of Elvin R. Souder, Henry D. Detwiler, and Harold Clymer.

—Grace Church, Lansdale, Pennsylvania: Vacation Bible School with enrollment of 69 had its closing exercises recently after a two weeks daily classwork. A number of our young people, intermediates, and juniors are attending our retreat at Men-O-Lan. Miss Nancy Seasholtz is Booster. Our annual Sunday school picnic was held at Men-O-Lan. The C.E. held their final meeting before retreats and vacations at the home of Harvey Bean, in the form of a campfire service. We are again joining the local Schwenkfelder Church and Evangelical Church in the Sunday evening service for the summer months.—Corr.

Seminary Issue

What Seminary Training Is

THIS year for the second year in succession nine young people came to the platform on commencement day and received diplomas representing courses of study completed in Mennonite Biblical Seminary. It will be interesting to follow them as they go out into work. One who received the B.D. degree has already been serving the church at Summerfield, Illinois. His family has lived with the church while he spent Tuesday to Friday at school. Now they will be entering together into service for that congregation. Another will be married during the summer and with his bride enter a pastorate in Kansas. What can be more satisfying than for two young people to start life together in such service! Others go to the mission field or into Christian education.

The responsibilities of a minister are great—leading a congregation in worship, shepherding the flock in joy and sorrow, warning the wayward, encouraging the weak, marrying, burying . . . He is both priest and prophet and a respected leader at the same time of the summer camp, young people's society, women's sewing circle and the men's brotherhood. It takes the grace of God, a knowledge of His Word, and a life time of experience to be a good minister.

Fortunately some preparation for the task can be secured in advance and it is the purpose of the Seminary to provide this. The Seminary acts as the agency of the church in passing on some of the accumulated experience and knowledge of the past. Yet preparation for the ministry is much more than receiving; it is acquiring, and presupposes an active participation in the process. Preparation for the ministry is based on general education but goes beyond what is commonly regarded as education. It assumes not only a searching for the truth but a finding of the truth. Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." Ministerial preparation must be based on the new life and the truth in Christ Jesus.

Training in the Seminary involves a nurture of the devotional life. Personal habits of Bible study and prayer are essential. Besides this the whole group meets in daily chapel and in weekly evening prayer meeting. One or two heart searching retreats are held each year with the idea that every student will be faced with the opportunity to rethink and restate his intimate relation to Christ.

Seminary training also involves the discipline of study. The biblical field is of primary importance—the Bible itself, the tools of biblical research, and the background of biblical writings. The historical field is important—the church, its origin and development, its expansion in the missionary movement, and its appearance in our own denominational expression. The theological field is important where an attempt is made to systematize and understand the problems of man and salvation from the Christian viewpoint. Finally, there is a field of practical studies covering techniques in preaching and teaching, problems in religious work, and social and ethical questions in the light of the gospel.

A third area of training is found in discussion and study of Conference interests. This refers to the incidental, spontaneous, and extra-curricular activities as contrasted with formal study. Student discussion groups have been organized for discussion of such questions as ministerial recruitment, assets and liabilities of the General Conference, the constitution for the new Conference organization, and even the work of the Seminary. Visiting Conference leaders are invited to represent their work, and the meetings of the many church committees and organizations at the Seminary give opportunity to observe from the side.

Then the Seminary offers the experience of group worship and church life. Chapel services and prayer meetings have been mentioned and are related to this but what is meant more specifically is the periods of formal worship as experienced in the Sunday school and the Vesper services. Through these, something akin to church life has come, and it seems even a church organization may develop.

The world needs the gospel of salvation in Jesus Christ and those who have believed in Him have responsibilities to meet. The Kingdom of God and the Mennonite church in its responsibility to the Kingdom needs consecrated men and women for full time service in the ministry, the mission field, and in Christian education and service. If you have accepted Christ as Savior and the obligations of that relationship, if you believe in prayer, if you feel the call to special service in God's Kingdom, and if you desire the fellowship of others in preparation, the seminary invites you to join our group.

A Day's Activity

FOUR days each week, from Tuesday through Friday, the activity of the students follows more or less an established pattern. Seven ten is announced by a single blast of the bus' horn. Five minutes later the bus leaves for classes at Bethany Biblical Seminary.

The usual route is to proceed east to Lakeshore Drive; enter the hurtling stream of north-bound traffic that takes us to Jackson Street, then turn west through the "Loop." This trip of approximately eleven miles consumes about thirty minutes in the morning and from forty-five minutes to an hour in the evening. Traffic is relatively light in the early morning hour but on the return trip after five o'clock the bumper-to-bumper traffic through the "Loop" is brought almost to a standstill.

These trips are not without interest, however. There is always conversation, and sometimes singing. Some students spend some of the time reading. In the fall we note the brilliant colors of trees and shrubs, the falling leaves, and the small boats gradually disappearing from Lake Michigan. On stormy winter days we see a frothy lake sending its spray high over the retaining walls. When spring slowly and uncertainly returns the dull, dismal, drabness of winter is soon forgotten as our attention is drawn to the greening lawns and the budding and blossoming trees.

Upon arriving at Bethany Biblical Seminary, the members of the group scatter to their classes. An hour later the students assemble in the chapel for a period of worship. After this period spent in His presence, classes are again resumed.

At noon the single students take their lunch at the Boarding Club, while the married students enjoy a period of fellowship together while having their lunch.

Since most classes are held in the morning, students spend the afternoons in the library. Five o'clock finds the group again boarding the bus for the return trip.

Twice a month on Monday evenings the Fellowship meets to discuss topics of particular interest to the group. On Wednesday evening choir practice and the mid-week prayer service are held, and often on Friday evening a member of the Fellowship shares pictures.

Practical Work by Students

THE central purpose of the work of the church is the development of a vital and creative religious life, both in its inner aspects of understanding attitude and motive, and in its reconstructive outreach toward society. To train men to discover God and the religious quality of life in his own experiences, and to use the religious resources of the ages in bringing light to bear creatively upon the perplexing problems of modern life through an integrated understanding of life and of the human persons and the social situations which mould them, requires a curriculum focused upon life in the present. Thus it is that Mennonite Biblical Seminary requires all of its students to do some type of practical work during their academic preparation—a definite effort to take education out of the classroom and library and give it application. In many instances it is in the practical work that classroom material becomes relevant and meaningful.

Though the range of practical work has not been too varied, there always has been more work than the students could do comfortably. Areas of service have included: Sunday-school teaching at the Seminary, as well as in the neighboring churches, week-day Bible school (one hour each week used for Bible study for public school children) in various churches, week-end pastorates, choir directing and singing, rendering programs in the city and in other Mennonite communities, etc. Plans are underway to have a better organized and farther-reaching practical work program in the future, for it should be included in the course of a seminary training. It is through practical work experiences that one discovers the value of time, becomes aware of one's own ignorance, grows in patience, experiences divine help, makes contacts with other pastors, increases one's sense of responsibility, and realizes the labor and joy in Christian service.

The Student Religious Life

CORPORATELY and individually the members of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary Fellowship pause to worship God and gain strength for our daily tasks. We seek to grow in the spirit of Christian love and brotherhood and permit the will of God to command our lives.

Sunday school begins at nine o'clock. Our average attendance is about fifty. Faculty members, students, student wives and children, and friends are invited to participate in the Sunday school service. S. F. Pannabecker and Elmer Ediger have assisted Don Smucker in instructing the adult class. After Sunday school the students are invited to attend the morning worship service in one of the several churches located in the immediate neighborhood. Twice monthly, on Sunday afternoons, the Mennonites of Chicago and friends of the Seminary worship with us in a vesper service. The Seminary choir, directed by Professor Dirks, is an essential part of the service. This service is worshipful and inspirational as well as enlightening in terms of the content of each message presented.

Every morning of our school week the students of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary and the Bethany Biblical Seminary gather in the Bethany Chapel for prayer, singing, and lectures given by faculty members and leaders of the Mennonite and Brethren churches. Wednesday evening is reserved for prayer meeting and choir rehearsal. The prayer meetings are led by faculty members and students.

Twice a year the Seminary group leaves the city, to retreat from the daily routine of work and study, for a day or two. We go to some wooded camp ground to meditate, participate in sports, and group discussions, to evaluate and re-evaluate our experiences and relationships, and to find God in the quietness of His beautiful creation. These times have been spiritually refreshing and have served to enlarge our lives.

son—because you are confident it is God's place in life for you. You will never, never succeed, as God looks at success, on the Mission Field without that assurance.

"What are you doing about your preparation? If there is anything which has been bothering you, such as appendix or tonsils, have it taken care of before you go. Of course you will have to take a physical examination before you are accepted by your board, but it is possible to fool the doctors if you are foolish enough to do so. You need a strong, well-regulated body to stand the rigors of missionary life.

"Are you well spiritually? Are you grounded in the Word so that every action can be checked by God's method of speaking to us? Are you humble enough so that God can entrust you with great responsibilities? Can you sincerely in honor prefer your brother and sister?

"Mentally are you well? Curious question to ask, you say. But so important. It is strange how little idiosyncracies which did not bother folks at home very much turn out to be really mental quirks on a mission field. How do you rate socially? Or are you just sort of a queer? Believe me the mission field has no place for queer folks. We need attractive men and women, well trained, successful at home, sane, wholesome, joyous, fervent, intelligent. Check up on yourself. We send our best representatives to be our ambassadors to foreign countries. Should Christ's ambassadors be less fit?

"You still want to be a missionary?

"Good. God has called you to one of the choicest professions in the world. He has considered you worthy to suffer for Him. Yours is the joy of fellowship with some of the world's greatest persons. To you is given the inestimable privilege of telling the wondrous story of Jesus to ears which have never before heard. You will taste the sweetness of victory as you struggle to keep life in a little one, and then watch that one grow, in grace and knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. Thank God you still want to be a missionary. We welcome you."—The Missionary Signal of us must have something of the kind. But we must realize that getting away isn't as easy as we might think. One may go to Palestine without finding the balm of Gilead for an uneasy conscience. One can't retreat from his own memory and the thoughts of self-condemnation which hound him. One can't get away from a bad reputation or a record of disgrace and failure. One can't run away from debts, nor cut his connection with things he ought to have done. The psalmist knew that though he made his bed in hell he could not get away from God. The voice of conscience and the speaking of the Holy Spirit is always with us, no matter where we are. One may transport his body to a different scene. But the personality that goes with that body is the same as it was where he came from. Rather than running away from God, one had better face Him, and by true repentance get into a position where the presence of God is a comfort. Instead of fleeing from oneself, one had better, by the grace of God, make that self fit company. Instead of running away from failure and a spoiled reputation, one had better, by thorough conversion of life, make good on the very scene of the failure.

Yes, it is a fallacy that one can get away from things. One can survive them or conquer them, or rise above them, or transcend them, or use them. But one cannot just run off. All our wrong ideas and wrongdoings have a way of meeting us at unexpected crossroads. It is pleasant to have no fears that wherever one goes one might meet some unpleasant ghost of yesterday.—Gospel Herald

BERNE, Ind. A resolution of the Adams County Ministerial Association placed a share of the blame for divorce on the shoulders of ministers.

The resolution condemned preachers "who merely read the marriage ceremony for a fee."

Every minister ought to feel a responsibility for the success of each marriage he performs, A. C. Gillander told the group.

He urged the association "to do all in your power to indicate to each couple the stake that God and the church have in each marriage and to explain to young people the meaning of love, the understanding of which is vital to happy and successful marriage."

A committee was appointed to draw up a set of pre-marital counseling standards for adoption at its next meeting.—Protestant Voice

THE PROTESTANT RADIO Commission has announced plans for its fifth annual summer Workshop in Religious Radio to be held this year at Temple University in Philadelphia, August 6 to 31.

As in past years, Workshop attenders will improve their effectiveness as religious broadcasters by actually creating programs and working out goals and policies applicable to the local situation under the direction of outstanding experts in both commercial and public service broadcasting.

Attendance at the Workshop is open to both lay and professional religious leaders. Tuition for the four-week session is $60. Many denominations are making scholarships available to qualified applicants. Further information may be obtained from the Protestant Radio Commission, 297 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

NEW YORK.—Robert W. Searle, of New York City, has been appointed editor of the Protestant World, the projected interdenominational news weekly scheduled to appear before the end of the year. A nation-wide campaign to raise $2,000,000 for the paper is under way, with regional fund-raising organizations being formed throughout the country.—Watchman-Examiner

LANCASTER, PA.—A total of $95,000 has been subscribed toward the goal of $180,000 for a proposed mental hospital, it was announced at the second annual meeting of the Lancaster Mennonite Hospitals organization held at Rohrerstown during Mental Health Week.—Menn. Weekly Review

The Every-Home Subscription Plan

For Conference Decision at Freeman

AMONG the responsibilities of the Board of Publication of our Conference is that of promoting the work of all of the conference boards and committees through our Conference papers, THE MENNONITE and DER BOTE. This responsibility does not only mean that we must publish such materials and information as we may deem essential and helpful, but it also includes the further responsibility that our publications find a place on the reading table in all of our Conference homes.

In order that we might gain a larger circulation for our Conference papers, the Board of Publication in 1941, at the Souderton conference, proposed, and the Conference adopted, what has been known as the "One Hundred Per Cent" subscription plan. This plan placed a large responsibility for the subscriptions to our conference papers upon the individual churches and has been very effective in raising the subscriptions substantially.

More Readers, More Prayerful Support

However, while the "One Hundred Per Cent" subscription plan has proved itself effective and helpful, We have long felt that it does not go far enough to bring our conference papers into every Conference home. We believe that, when all of the people of our churches read our Conference papers, there will be in those churches a better understanding and an increased prayerful support for the causes and work which God has given us to do.

Since it has become increasingly clear that, for maximum usefulness, our Conference papers should be received in every Conference home, your Board of Publication presented to the meeting of the Council of Boards held at Mountain Lake, Minnesota, in November 1949, a proposal which is an extension of the "One Hundred Per Cent" subscription plan, and which would make it possible for our Conference papers to be received in every Conference home. We like to refer to this proposal as the "Universal Subscription Plan," or "The Every Home Subscription Plan."

The secretary of our board has explained to you in detail how this plan will function and has also answered some of the questions which have been raised in the articles which appeared in this paper in the April 4 and May 9 issues.

On a Voluntary Basis

The "Every Home Subscription Plan" is a simple plan, simple to understand and easy to use. Under this plan, our Conference papers will carry a nominal subscription rate which will be paid on a voluntary basis through the churches. The balance of the cost will be borne by the Conference as such through its boards and committees.

Members of all Conference boards have approved the "Every Home Subscription Plan," and the proposal as such will come to the Conference floor at Freeman for your consideration as a recommendation of both the Board of Publication and the Executive Committee of the Conference. —H. J. Andres, Chairman, Conference Board of Publications.

TOLEDO, OHIO. Missionaries in two hemispheres are finding the Jeep indispensable in bringing the Word of God to the natives. The bishop of the missionary district of the Episcopal Church in southern Brazil wants to take a Jeep to a Brazilian rector who frequently tires five saddle horses in a day, riding to conduct church services, according to The Southern Churchman.

TENEMENTS

Hot tenements—dry and bleak
Summer's merciless, sunbaked heat
On hard pavements
In the street.

Lonely tenements—colorless, bare,
Looking down upon rough concrete,
No cool green
For little feet.

Noisy tenements—voices harsh,
Cities' restless, maddening surge.
No deep silence
To lift and purge.

Numberless tenements—over the world,
Could from these wrecks some young soul hold
Keys for tomorrow—
Some answer unfold?

AFTER 27 YEARS

The request has come that I write briefly on the above topic. Of course, I am looking toward Freeman. That has been my home for five years. I was connected with Freeman College that whole time and also served as pastor of the Bethany Church for 3½ years. That shall be the fifteenth session of the General Conference that I attend in a row. Great changes have taken place in our church work during these years. It was in Freeman, 27 years ago, that I was elected into the Board of Home Missions, and it will be in Freeman where I will discontinue my services in that Board. During the early years of my connection with this Board, I often wished that the two Mission Boards would be united, as the whole world is really one big mission field. Gradually I became convinced, that even though it is all one field, we need the two Boards; and now at Freeman the two Boards shall become united. Many new adjustments will have to be made, but we pray that God's Kingdom will thereby be built more rapidly. Many of the responsibilities will at Freeman be placed into younger hands. It should be thus. Some of us will decrease, others must increase. God will guide that conference if we let Him.

READER, YOUR HELP, PLEASE

ASSUMING the responsibility of editing a church paper is no light matter. In fact it is too heavy a responsibility to be borne by the Editor alone. Your help, friend reader, is greatly needed.

Your help is needed in keeping the Editor informed of important church and kingdom news, and events of general interest. It takes but a few minutes to drop a line about that important event.

Your help is needed in submitting articles for publication; good articles wrought out through hard work, prayer, and the guidance of the Holy Spirit. When the Editor requests an article from you on a given theme, do your best to comply and on the date specified.

Your help is needed by way of comments, suggestions and helpful criticisms. You may have some very definite ideas on what a church paper should be and what it should contain. Send them in, they will be carefully considered.

Your help is needed in carefully reading your church paper, after it reaches your home. Much work goes into the planning, writing, and publishing of the same. Please do not toss it lightly aside; it is meant to be your paper. Read it thoughtfully and prayerfully and let it speak to your mind and heart.

Finally and most important of all your prayers are needed, for without your prayerful support the Editor cannot succeed in this task assigned him. There must be divine wisdom and guidance if this work is to be blessed. If you, kind reader, will support the Editor by your prayers, then God can use THE MENNONITE as a medium of spiritual blessings. When throughout the churches everywhere, sincere prayers are offered for the success of this venture, then the Editor may be a tool in the hands of God. So when you turn to this weekly visitor as it quietly enters your home, pause to breathe a prayer for the editor, the contributors and the readers that this medium may be used of God to build up souls in Christ. "Brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified."—J.N.S.

GOING TO FREEMAN?

HOW many times this question is being asked as the time for the General Conference approaches. There are some common misconceptions of a Conference, such as: it is mostly for ministers and those on boards; the reports are dry and dull; only the main speeches are worth listening to; there is nothing of interest for laymen; all one gets out of it is the meeting of friends and making new acquaintances.

But be assured that Conference can be a rich blessing for us all. It is not only for a select few and the reports of the progress and plans of Christian work are not dull. While it may be important to hear what one man has to say, it is also important to learn what report a Board has after many men have worked long and hard in outlining their plans. True, Conference is a fine place to meet friends and the Christian fellowship one may enjoy should enrich our spiritual lives, but these are experienced in addition to our deep concern and interest in the general work of the church.

So come to Freeman with the proper spiritual preparation. Become familiar with the leading issues. Learn the names of your representatives on the various boards and committees. Pray for the presence and guidance of God at all sessions. Pray for those servants who are trying to fulfill their duty which Conference has placed upon them. If you cannot be present, send your prayers. So, whether present or absent, help make it a better Conference.

"MEN AT WORK"

WHAT a common sign as we travel the highways. Formerly the sign read "Slow Men at Work," but the men did not appreciate the interpretation often put on this reading, so the first word was dropped.

It might be a good sign for a church, as it now reads. A church can grow and prosper where there are "men at work." Too often the work has been left to the minister and the women's organizations. But if the men have been a bit "slow" in getting started, it is heartening to see them arousing themselves to greater effort. The number of brotherhoods and laymen's organizations being organized in the churches is a healthy indication of a renewed interest. In this connection, study carefully the proposed Laymen's Constitution as found in this issue. (page 514) It is intended to be a guide for men's work in the church.

When the man-power of a church is really put to proper work we may expect new life and activity. Boys will follow their fathers. So build a wall of men around your church and the boys will not slip away so easily.

PREACHERS NEED NOT READ THIS

But if you are a layman who would like to do a fine thing for your minister and his wife, here is how you can do it. Make it possible for them to attend the Minister's Retreat held at St. Peters, Minnesota, just preceding the conference at Freeman. Many ministers may feel that they cannot attend because of the expense involved. If your church will act at once there is still time to arrange to send your pastor and wife. The cost is $15 per person while there. Here you have a fine project for your church, brotherhood, or mission society. You will be doing a fine thing for your pastor and wife but incidently you will be helping yourselves as you benefit from the renewed ideas and spiritual strength your leader may receive at the retreat. To him that giveth it shall be given.

Most of us see better when sorrow's tears have washed our eyes.

It requires a strong constitution to withstand repeated attacks of prosperity.

Conference Information

FREEMAN, SOUTH DAKOTA.—At a combined meeting of the committees making plans for the conference, information of interest to guests planning to attend the conference from a distance, was formulated. Advance information which will answer some of the questions that arise in the minds of people planning to attend, is given in the following paragraphs.

Meals. These will be served in the dining room in the basement of pioneer hall. For those not having breakfast at the homes where they sleep, breakfast will be served. More guests, naturally, are expected for the noon and evening meal. For the convenience of those not wishing a full meal, a lunch room will be maintained in the main college building. Here light lunches will be sold. The lunchroom will be open continuously from 10:30 A.M. to 10:30 P.M., unless otherwise announced. Nominal charges for meals will be made.

Lodging. A limited number of hotel rooms will be available at the Marion hotel. Anyone wishing hotel accommodations in this town should make advance reservations. Plans are being made to care for the guests in homes in the community as well as in the college dormitories.

Transportation. For guests coming to Marion, transportation to Freeman will be provided. Plans have been made to meet the several trains coming to this point. Should any guests arrive at this, or another point, and lack transportation to Freeman, calls should be made to Pioneer Hall, at Freeman, requesting transportation.

Entertainment of Children. Children of conference guests will be entertained during the morning and afternoon sessions, except Saturday and Sunday. Ages 4-12 will be accommodated. It is requested that the children of conference guests either remain with their parents or be brought to the entertainment center, there will be a great deal of traffic on the grounds and this request is a safety measure.

Tours. Plans are being made for bus tours on Saturday afternoon. Points of interest to be visited will probably include the churches of the vicinity and one of the Hutterite colonies. Definite information to be given at the conference.

Information. An information booth will be maintained. Messenger service, telephone and telegraph service will be available. Probable location—the lobby of Pioneer Hall. An information folder for guests will be available at the time of registration.

Museum. The college museum will be open to visitors at stated intervals to be announced.—Submitted by the Publicity Committee, Freeman. Elma Waltner, Hurley, South Dakota, Chairman.

A Trip Through African Outstations

by Henry Toews

GREETINGS in the precious Name of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. We have just finished visiting all of the outstations. It took us almost eight weeks to do this. Paul and I went first to a section of the Bampende tribe where our assistant pastor Kijika Paul is in charge. We always take the assistant pastor along who is in charge of the territory in which we travel. This time we traveled in the direction of Tshikapa and were gone about two and a half weeks. In this section there were seventy-two that came forward to accept Christ as their Saviour. Among these was one chief. The whole territory is divided into certain sections. When we go into a certain section we first visit all the villages in that section, examining the schools and holding a service in each village. Then we set a day when all of these villages come together for a regional meeting. At this regional meeting we first gather all of the people together for an evangelistic service. Then we gather the Christians for a time of testimony and confession. And finally we gather the church members for the Lord's Supper.

Expensive, but Worthless Medicine

At one of these regional meetings a man came forward and said he had some time ago professed to be a Christian but had backslidden. It seems some of his children died and a man of the Baluba Tribe came and told him he could make medicine that would kill the person who was guilty of killing his children. He believed this Muluba and paid him seven goats, twenty chickens, some cloth and some money to make this medicine. Some of it they buried in the yard and some of it they kept in the house. Each month he had to kill a chicken and offer it to the idols. He said it didn't help him the least bit as his children kept right on dying, and he had no rest in his house nor in his heart. So he asked us to come and take away all this medicine and help him clean house. So we went over and gathered everything together. He went into his house and brought out all of the things that had to do with this medicine. We put it all in a pile and while the teachers and Christians were singing songs of praise to God, the medicine went up in smoke. Recently I heard one of our assistant pastors say that he had talked with this man and he told him that now he was happy and rest and peace was in his home and in his heart, and he could sleep peacefully again.

The second trip was also made by Paul and myself. This was the territory where our assistant pastor Ngongo David is in charge. We traveled for another two and a half weeks. This trip took us partly thru Bampende territory, but also partly through the Batshoke tribe. In this section we saw some of the worst roads I've ever seen. It was so bad that at places we could hardly get through. At one place we got stuck in a mud hole so bad that it took fourteen men pushing for all they were worth to finally get the car out.

"I Want to Take Christ as My Saviour"

But all of this trouble was not without reward. For we saw eighty-six precious souls come forward to accept Christ as their Saviour. Who would not go to some trouble to see eighty-six souls come forward to accept Christ. Six of these were chiefs. One of these was the big chief of the Batshoke territory. He collects all of the taxes for the state and is also the head of the native court. He gets quite a bit more pay per month than most people here get per year, yet he was not ashamed to stand up among a large crowd of people all alone and say, "I want to take Christ as my Saviour."

A Junior Choir at the Mutena Mission, Belgian Congo, Africa

On the last trip which also took about two and a half weeks Mrs. Toews accompanied me. This took us partly through Bampende territory but also partly through the Bashilele tribe. This is the territory where our assistant pastor Mazemba Pierre is in charge. This proved to be a very interesting trip in spite of the fact that we got stuck in the sand a number of times and one section of the road was very bad. On the other hand we had some very good roads as Congo roads go. It was on this trip that we saw most people come forward to accept Christ. There were over 350 that came forward. Two of these were chiefs. Some of them fathers and mothers, grandfathers and grandmothers, but most of them were school children. One night we were in bed already when there was a knock at the door. There stood one woman and four men. The woman wanted to accept Christ and the men wanted to reconsecrate their lives.

On all three trips together we had the privilege of pointing a total of over 500 souls to the Lamb of God and praying with them. But the biggest job is still before us; that of shepherding these lambs. Please pray for them, they need your prayers.

Yours for the lost in Africa,
Henry A. Toews and family.

Dear reader: We praise God for this report of the many who have found Christ as Saviour and Lord. Will you not give as unto the Lord that this work

The Unity of Believers

by W. F. Unruh

THE unity of believers is not a matter of choice. It is a basic doctrine of the Christian faith. Jesus taught it, and He felt so deeply about it that He prayed fervently for it. This is an instance of where Jesus specifically prayed for what He taught.

In the light of this must we not say that it is a sin for believers to be disunited? Admitting this we are still confronted with a problem that baffles us. We are willing and desirous to recognize other believers as Christians, and yet we cannot see how we can consistently consider ourselves united with them when they interpret the sacred Scriptures in ways that seem unreal and untrue to us. Under such conditions shall we draw back and say that we cannot fellowship together? Or is there another alternative? Surely we should not forget that unity of the Spirit among believers is the prayer of Jesus and a prerequisite for an effective witness to the world which the church has been commissioned to make.

Is it not true that when people accept Christ as their Lord and Saviour, when their lives give evidence that they love and trust Him, and when they are committed to their best understanding of the will of Christ, that they are united at the center? Is such a life not of the Holy Spirit? Is that not the unity of the Spirit which we are admonished to keep?

Then it becomes the duty and obligation of every believer to share with fellow-believers his best understanding of the will of Christ, and basing his convictions on the Scriptures to leave it with the Holy Spirit to convince them of the truth. If other believers do not share fully our understanding of the Holy Scriptures we should not hastily refuse to fellowship with them. When the Christians met at the Jerusalem conference they differed very widely on some fundamental issues. It was after Peter, Barnabas and Paul had shared with the conference what they had seen God do among the Gentiles and how that harmonized with the Holy Scriptures that they came to agree to the point that they could write a resolution embodying these words, "For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us. . . "

The Apostles insist, however, in their epistles that believers must take a definite stand against anti-Christian teachings. Examples of this are found in II John 9-11 and Romans 16:17-18. The Church is called the pillar of truth. She must teach the truth and witness to it. This is best accomplished by simply teaching what the Bible says and leaving it to the Holy Spirit to convince people of the truth. Martin Luther said, "Scripture without any comment is the sun whence all teachers receive their light."

Great Jubilee and Mission Rally at Freeman

The Board of Foreign Missions is grateful to the Program Committee of the General Conference for arranging a Mission Day, the last day of the General Conference session. In the morning the reports of the Secretary and Treasurer will be heard after the opening remarks by the president of the Board, A. E. Kreider. This will be followed by the election of officers.

In the afternoon there will be a Jubilee Service to commemorate fifty years of mission work in India. In the evening there will be a Mission Rally Program. The tentative program as arranged by the Board for the afternoon and evening follow.

It is the sincere wish of the Board that all the delegates remain for this important service. We covet your prayers for this day's service that the Conference may catch a new glimpse of the great Mission work God has entrusted to our Conference.—Howard G. Nyce, Exec. Sec'y.

Pentecost in Brazil

by Heinrich Martins

HARVEST Thanksgiving, May 14, was a beautiful sunshiny day. Wagons began to come in from the settlement at 8:00 o'clock, and several truckloads of visitors from elsewhere came to our church yard. There were over 1000 guests in attendance, including children. The church was hardly large enough to hold all. The Evangelical choir from Neu-Bremen and Neu-Breslau as well as the trombone choir from Neu-Breslau were on the program. Guest organist, P. Mueller, accompanied the congregational singing on the fine organ which is our gift from the Kaufman family. After breakfast was served to our guests from a distance, the morning service of the choirs began at 9:00. At 10:30 the worship service began with a welcome to guest, announcements, several songs from the Mennonite Gesangbuch and introductory remarks by David Nickel. Pastor Duebbers of Hammonia who had come to get acquainted with the Mennonites, delivered a warm, plain, deeply evangelical sermon on Job, Chapter I. He pointed out Job's threefold possessions. First, material wealth is a gift from God and must be received with gratitude. Second, children are a precious possession, a gift from the hands of God. Third, the most important thing is possession of a devout, god-fearing heart the only thing that makes one really happy.

The official speech was given by Elder Johannes Janzen, on the text James 1:17. The noon meal was then served at four long tables, covered in white, in the beautifully decorated basement of our church.

In the afternoon there was again music by the choruses and the trombone choir. Two missionary addresses were given, by Rev. J. Boldt and Rev. Duebbers. It was a richly blessed day. Evidence of this is the mission collection.

Many Evangelicals as well as a number of Catholics were guests. They all admired the fine building and its practical arrangement, as well as the well-organized arrangement of program. It seems as if we are only just now beginning to seek the way to the hearts of the surrounding population, and we are finding it. It is gratifying to find that the doors are open. May God grant us much wisdom and willingness for a service offered to us although we have not wished for nor sought it. The ways of the Lord are inscrutable. It is hard to comprehend how he rules.

When we are at the end of our rope and in the last few months even thought the colony would have to be broken up, He sets new tasks before us and turns our hearts toward things that in his eyes have eternal value.

On this day we thought back a year ago to the first harvest festival in our fine new church, when the brethren Neuenschwander and Kaufman were present and took an active part. Next to the Lord, our gratitude goes out again and again to the dear brethren in North America for their generous gifts which made it possible to build our fine church.

On the second Pentecost holiday, which was the finest day of all, we had a little welcome service for Dr. Peter Dyck. The gathering was small in the forenoon because many had to be about their work. The noon meal was again served in the basement. From 1:15 until 4:00 P.M. Dr. Dyck gave a report of his trip. Both congregations were well represented. We were all glad to have our beloved physician back again after his absence of several months in America and Canada. With great interest we listened to his account of his travel impressions, of his visits with leading personalities of both conferences. And thus our richly blessed holidays came to an end.

The Peoria Mission Building

The Women's Missionary Society has a busy day.

"Give ye them to eat"

THERE has ever been and ever shall be a challenge to the people of God. We of the Peoria Mission feel more the cause of faithfulness to this command, knowing that God's people do expect us to be faithful in giving to as many as will of the "Living Bread" of Heaven, which, said Jesus, "that a man may eat thereof, and not die."

Few there are who can realize the tremendous forces of evil which often arise against a "life-giving," "life-saving" station such as a city mission.

We do praise Him and thank Him for the many answers to prayer in behalf of the work here. We thank Him also for each of you, your prayers and other means of support. We are indeed grateful for each of our workers here, who so faithfully support the work with their presence and spirit which means so much. This was also the mind of Paul who wrote, "I thank my God through Jesus Christ for you all" . . . "We are laborers together with God."

We are always mindful in the city that as in the rural sections too, there is the hurrying to and from our daily task, the duties of this life, the "many things" that would often mislead us until we would forget that we are "the called according to His purpose." When we see a little child, one of the many hundreds on the street, we know God's will—that He would direct every cause toward the salvation of that one soul until it be saved for Him.

The Activity Program

Many children of our Sunday School come from homes that are divided which makes it hard for the teachers to work toward a perfect attendance. However we do work toward that end and have some good records in that respect. We thank God for our Sunday School leaders who are putting forth every effort to present a varied and interesting program for each one that comes in. Lessons are presented with the use of flannelgraph, filmstrips and objects.

Our Sunday evening service opens with a pre-prayer service at 6:15 P.M. with one of our high school girls in charge. At 6:30 there are four groups of children and young people, also an adult Bible-study group. The gospel service follows at 7:30. Our regular prayer service is held on Wednesday evening with two groups meeting for prayer. At present the junior choir is meeting for rehearsal on Thursday night and the adult choir on Friday night.

The Women's Missionary Society meet the first Thursday of each month for an all day sewing, and rolling bandages for the African mission work. This group also meets the fourth Thursday of each month for the business session which is followed by a spiritual program. This organization, as at other places, is doing

The following poem speaks forth the choice of all the workers at the Mission:

"MY CHOICE AND HIS"

I said: "Let me walk in the field";
  God said: "Nay, walk in the town";
I said: "There are no flowers there";
  He said: "No flowers, but a crown."

I said: "But the sky is black,
  There is nothing but noise and din";
But He wept as He sent me back,
  "There is more," He said, "there is sin."

I cast one look at the field,
  Then set my face to the town;
He said: "My child, do you yield?
  Will you leave the flowers for the crown?"

Then into His hand went mine,
  And into my heart came He;
And I walk in a light Divine,
  The path I had feared to see.

a great work and continues to serve the church in bringing help to many, thus glorifying God through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Recently the men of the Mission met and formed an organization with the purpose of giving substantial support toward such worthy causes which may arise. Since then they have decided to promote a Christian Boys Club for boys 12 yrs. and over. They have appointed a leader with three assistants who will be responsible for meetings once each week. In addition to the spiritual instruction, the boys will be helped in clean, wholesome recreation. We are planning to do something along this line for the teen-age girls.

During the Christmas holidays we played Christmas recordings through our public address system. The speaker was placed in the attic vent, thereby reaching a radius of two blocks. Many folks from the community commented to us favorably on the effect of this music and requested that we make this a permanent practice. This has been done and now, preceding each service, and following the Sunday morning service, well known hymns featuring the organ and chimes, are played out into the community reaching many who never enter our Mission. The Holy Spirit can speak to many who are calloused and hard through the music of a well known gospel hymn.

A Personal Ministry

We wish it were possible to impart unto you the joy which we experience as we see the gospel of our Lord Jesus and its power. Yesterday while at the State Hospital, there among the hundreds that are mentally ill, we visited two members of our Conference that are patients there. It is wonderful to sense the peace that comes to them as we read together from God's Word and turn to Him in prayer. What a satisfaction there is in the Word! "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

This afternoon two new-born babes in Christ are being visited—both are confined in their homes and may never be able to leave their homes. One was saved about two weeks ago, the other about a month. What a privilege to minister to such as they—near the setting sun of this life, ready to go into that great realm beyond the sunset and to be present with the Lord. One dear soul, whom the Lord led through the valley of the shadow of death, spoke these last words to us which we pass to you, "Tell the folks for me that the Lord is precious." As we minister to such, we seek to take them, prayerfully, step by step, into God's saving grace, meeting with them at least once each week, sometimes more often. As the hour of death draws near we often meet with them each evening, at the bedside for inspiration from God's Word and prayer together.

Over the front entrance of the Mission the neon sign, for which the boys of the intermediate class at the Calvary Church are responsible, bears this truth which all the world should know and experience today that JESUS SAVES. You and I may be convinced of the truth of these words, but we are not saved from the need of telling others. May ours ever be the joy to tell others what great things the Lord has done for us.

Proposed Laymen's Constitution

THIS proposed constitution for the Laymen's Organization of the General Conference is being submitted for further corrections to all laymen and others interested in this movement. Prior to this it had been sent to a number of individuals who responded with very helpful suggestions.

The Laymen's Interim Committee consisting of Walter Temple, Chairman, John E. Fretz, Secy.-Treas., and J. S. Schultz, is anxious to bring to the Conference at Freeman as workable a constitution as possible for final criticism and adoption. Please send suggestions for changes to J. S. Schultz, Bluffton, O., before August 15, or bring them to the Conference.

ARTICLE I—NAME

The name of this association shall be "Mennonite Laymen," an auxiliary organization of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of N.A.

ARTICLE II—MEMBERSHIP

SECTION 1. All brotherhoods or laymen's organizations of Mennonite churches are invited to join "Mennonite Laymen." At the business meeting, every local church organization shall be represented by one vote for every 30 members or fraction thereof. Officers elected by District Laymen's Organizations or Brotherhoods shall have delegate privileges. No delegate shall cast more than ten proxy votes.

SECTION 2. In the local church organizations, it is recommended that all male members of the congregations be eligible to membership. All elected officers, locally as well as of district and general conference organizations, shall be held by laymen.

ARTICLE III — PURPOSE

The purpose of this brotherhood shall be to draw its members into a more intimate fellowship so as to develop spiritual strength for Christian service in harmony with Mennonite teachings, both in the local church and community as well as through any or all of the channels which our General Conference offers.

ARTICLE IV — OFFICERS

SECTION 1. The officers of this organization shall be a President, a Vice President, and a Secretary-Treasurer which officers constitute the Executive Committee and thus are authorized to do the business of "Mennonite Laymen" between sessions of the brotherhood.

SECTION 2. Each officer shall perform such duties as usually pertain to similar office.

SECTION 3. The term of office shall be nine years; one officer being elected at each conference session.

SECTION 4. The Executive Committee shall a) appoint a nominating committee before the first official meeting of the conference which committee shall present at least two candidates for each office to be filled; b) appoint any other committees needed for effective work of laymen in the conference; promote any activities in keeping with the purpose of the organization and offer help to existing brotherhoods as well as laymen in churches not yet organized. Regional meetings are advised.

SECTION 5. a) There shall be a Laymen's Council made up of the Executive Committee and one representative from each District Laymen's Organization. This representative may be the District President or one chosen by his executive committee or at the District meeting.

b.) The duty of the Council shall be to interrelate laymen's work of the local church, the District, and the General Conference. This shall include a budget for operating as well as financial assistance to Conference enterprises.

ARTICLE V — MEETINGS

SECTION 1. The regular meetings of the organization shall be held during the session of the General Conference. Special meetings may be called by the Executive Committee. The Executive Committee shall prepare the program including a report of Laymen's activities for the tri-ennium; District representatives shall report each for his District.

SECTION 2. The Executive Committee shall hold meetings annually at the time and place of the Council of Boards. At least once in three years the entire Laymen's Council shall meet.

SECTION 3. Each District Laymen's Organization shall meet at the time of its annual conference session.

SECTION 4. It is recommended that each local organization hold nine to twelve regular meetings a year. These meetings will inspire, inform, motivate service and will include discussions, addresses, manual service, fellowship, and social activities.

ARTICLE VI — AMENDMENTS

This Constitution may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at the regular meeting of the organization.

Under Orders

THE Lord willing, the Ordination of Henry Funk, as pastor of the Mennonite church, Carman, Manitoba, is to take place Sunday afternoon, August 13, 1950. Benjamin Ewert, Winnipeg, has served as elder of this group, since it was started. The Board of Home Missions and the local membership solicit your prayerful interest in this ordination and this group. Neighboring ministers are invited to assist in the service and the congregations are invited to attend.

Early in 1947 Brother Funk, then a student in Canadian Bible College, Winnipeg, came out to this place and gathered the scattered Mennonites together for worship services. He has served this group ever since. During these years, an unused school house was bought, renovated and enlarged.

With the gathering of more families, a Sunday School and Young People's Society were organized and a choir is doing good work to enrich the worship services. A few months ago they had evangelistic services and a number of individuals accepted Christ and were received into the fellowship.

On June 19, the Congregation voted to have Henry Funk ordained and at the same time they took steps to affect a full organization which is to take place in about two months. Brother Funk was graduated from Bible College this year and will be giving full time to the work at Carman. (Contributed by A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary of the Board of Home Missions.)

MIDDLE DISTRICT

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Bible quizzes featured the May and June Willing Workers socials. Christian Endeavor held a wiener roast. In the Orrville Courier-Crescent biweekly newspaper column of "Men at work" recently, Amos Diller, active seventy-nine year-old member of our church was chosen for his success in the tile-making industry. A picture of him at work and his life story were included, telling how perseverance, foresight, and diligence helped him find success although he started from scratch. His most enjoyed hobby has been creative interest in music.—Mrs. Ivan Badertsher, Corr.

CANADIAN DISTRICT

—North Star Church, Drake Saskatchewan: From July the eleventh to the fourteenth we had Professor W. H. Hohmann in our midst, instructing the North Star and Bethany church choirs. On July 12 the octet from the Canadian Bible College gave a program. Their topic was "Witnessing for Christ." On July 16 an ordination service was held for Mr. and Mrs. Milton Jantz, who are going out as missionaries to Northern India under the Ceylon and India General Mission. Mr. Jantz is a graduate of Grace Bible Institute.—Mrs. Milton Ewert, Corr.

PACIFIC DISTRICT

—Calvary Church, Barlow, Oregon: Miss Arlene Sitler, Reedley, California, spoke at our church Tuesday evening, July 18, in behalf of the Kings View Homes, now under construction near Reedley. The young people's retreat during the week of July 23 was held this year near Mt. Hood, Oregon. The junior retreat was held this year for the first time; they met at Jennings Lodge, Oregon, during the first part of July.—Mrs. Ivan Learfield, Corr.

—Grace Church, Dallas, Oregon: On June 25 sixteen young souls were baptized and received into the church, A new project has been taken up, namely that of having Sunday school at Buell. A vacant church was cleaned and painted. The attendance is small, but we hope and pray that there may be fruit.—Mrs. F. J. Schmidt, Corr.

NORTHERN DISTRICT

—Bethel Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: On June 4 our church observed a farewell service for A. W. (and Mrs.) Friesen who has been our assistant pastor and reception for our new pastor Walter Gering and family. Our annual Mission Festival and Children's Day program were held in the forenoon on June 18. Andrew Shelly of Kitchener, Ontario, gave a message in the morning and also in the evening. A fellowship meal was served at noon. Albert Penner of New York brought the morning message on June 9. Our church is again preparing to send CARE packages and Christmas bundles this year.—Mrs. Geo. Eitzen, Corr.

—First Church, Madrid, Nebraska: Pastor and Mrs. J. P. Glanzer returned July 7 from a month's vacation at Dinuba, California with their children and friends. J. H. Epp of Henderson conducted the services for two Sundays during their absence. Our union daily vacation Bible school closed in May. We had over seventy in attendance The other churches taking part were the Methodist and Pilgrim Holiness. All the material used was from the Mennonites, as all believed it to be some of the best. People are harvesting; the crops are good; weather is not so good. Miss Marian Regier is attending summer school at Springfield, South Dakota. She expects to teach school this coming year.—J. P. Glanzer, Corr.

WESTERN DISTRICT

—Bergtal Church, Pawnee Rock, Kansas. On Sunday evening, June 25, our church held a musical program and picnic lunch at the Rudiger picnic grounds. The churches of this community are having union open air meetings on the high school lawn during July. New doors have been put on our church which improves the church as to service and beauty. The Gerald Stucky family, Colombia, South America, were with us Sunday, July 30, for an outdoor program arranged by the Ladies Mission Society. Pastor Kaufman invited the young men of draft age and those about to register to a meeting at the parsonage on Friday evening, July 21. We appreciate our pastor's interest in these boys and counseling with them.—Mrs. John K. Friesen, Corr.

—First Church, Burns, Kans.: On July 16 we had a C.E. program dealing with relief. Everyone who made a Christmas bundle brought it for presentation by the children. The H. J. Dycks of Elbing who spent a year in Germany spoke that evening. A collection of $32.00 was given for Testaments for the bundles. A joint C. E. program was held June 18 with the Gnadenberg and Zion Churches. July 13 our church held an importan business meeting.—Mrs. Dave Stucky, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Ransom, Kansas: The district fellowship meeting was held at our church on Sunday, June 4, with members from the Hanston, Pawnee Rock, Colby and Vona, Colorado, churches present. The noon meal and evening lunch were served in the grade school building. Our daily vacation Bible school was well attended. We had three classes. A program was given by the students at the close of the school. Dennis Smith served the Vona, Colorado church on June 11.—Mrs. John G. Mishler, Corr.

—Eden Church, Moundridge, Kansas: Our congregation has enjoyed the presence of many visitors of late. Cornelius Dyck told us of the conditions in Paraguay where some sad but also some pleasant events can be recorded. On May 19, Ernest Crous visited us and reported on the spiritual and various other conditions as they exist in Germany after the war. An important date was May 21, when the congregation partook of the Lord's supper and baptismal services took place on that day. May these young people remain true to their vows. On May 28 a farewell festival was arranged for the Walter Gering family. Important events that happened during the time of his ministry were reviewed and the church wished him God's blessing in his new field of work. On June 4 the Junior Choir School of the Bethel College Church gave a program, which reminded us of the Scripture passage, "Out of the mouth of babes hast thou perfected praise." Since we do not have a resident minister at present, various other ministers have served us. But we hope to have our own minister again before long who will head the leadership in our church.—J. J. Strausz, Corr.

—Zoar Church, Goltry, Oklahoma: We are planning to have a revival campaign from August 6 to 18. Welter Gomez, evangelist to Old Mexico, is to be the speaker. The Sam Becker's from Gothenburg, Nebraska are to have charge of the music and the children. May the Lord send us rich blessing from above.—Corr.

Workcamp - In the Name of Christ

Institution for the Blind
Illzach, Haut-Rhin, France
February 20, 1950

Mennonite Central Committee
U.S.A.

Dear Brothers in Christ,

In the name of the trustees of our Institution, and in the name of our blind inmates and of all our friends, may I express to you our deep gratitude for the help you have brought us by the organization of the Reconstruction Camp which has just ended.

Without falling into the sin of exaggeration, I must affirm that your team has done a magnificent job. The demolition of the original building in itself, which the team took care of with the help of local Mennonites, has saved us an expense of about 300,000 francs ($860.00 by present exchange rates). Besides this task which the team took as its chief goal, your young volunteers did a big job of cleaning up, both on the grounds and inside our damaged buildings. The girls were also very helpful with painting and sewing.

Personally I can say that these three weeks with these young Christian workers have been to me an inestimable encouragement and a brilliant manifestation of God's love. Founded almost a century ago by a blind man who came to the faith through suffering, and now nearly destroyed by the effects of the war, our Institution feels that it has been saved by the solidarity shown in your beautiful gesture of Christian brotherly love.

We know that the workers have already found their reward in the satisfaction of work completed and in our fellowship together, but I especially want to thank warmly all those who by their gifts in money and in kind, and with their prayers have permitted the success of the visibly blessed Work Camp.

Mr. Heitzmann, Director
Institution Des Aveugles

DEMOLITION — IN THE NAME OF CHRIST

Translation of article on Illzach workcamp which appeared in Mulhouse Newspaper "L'Alsace," in French and German, Saturday, February 4, 1950.

ON THE GROUNDS of the Institution for the Blind at Illzach, a wire rope is being tied around a skyward-pointing splinter of the war-ravaged house's ragged wall, much as a hangman would fasten his noose to the neck of a condemned criminal. The cable is hitched to the tractor, the motor roars, the taut cable jerks, the house trembles and crooked cracks run across its face. Another jerk, collapse—and a cloud of dust settling on the debris. The motor hums the tranquil joy of its strength . . . .

"It was the oldest house in Illzach," says one, looking on with nostalgia. "There was an inn on the ground floor when Illzach still belonged to Switzerland. It was a smugglers' meeting place."

The dust has settled, partly on the onlookers, and already a team of young people is at work on the pile of stones and rubble. Shovels and prying bars are at work. The wagon that just pulled up before the pile is already full.

These young people are pulling down and clearing away, with little thought about the fact that the building they destroy was once the haunt of smugglers, or for the fact that the French-Swiss border once ran through here; for their destruction is for reconstruction, their task is above all nationalisms and boundaries.

They have a lot to tell us, these youngsters who have been helping to clean up the ruins of the Institutions for the Blind. We question a few of them. This one, in blue overalls, is named Classen, an American from the state of Kansas. His parents farm 170 acres of land. "How many horses does your father have?"

"One, for fun."

A blond girl with a bright red bandanna rests her shovel a moment. "I'm Gisela Fellmann, age 24. My father is a farmer in Monchzell, near Heidelberg."

The tall dark girl, whom the others call Mama because she does the cooking, Dora de Ruiter, comes from Zeist, near Utrecht, Holland. That big blond, handling her shovel like a professional ditch-digger, comes from Bourtzwiller, where her parents farm.

The little black-haired Margot Fuchs comes from the Saar where her father manages the big Ensheimer farm. And two boys from around Montbeliard, two more Americans, girls from the Sundgau, a nineteen-year-old German, and others from nearer Mulhouse.

"How did you happen to come here?" we ask Melvin Headrick, 22-year-old American from the State of Colorado.

"We all belong to the Mennonite Church, which has about 200,000 members in America. We refused to do military service during the war because we will not and cannot kill. However, we did serve in workcamps. And now to show the nation that we are no shirkers, we have chosen, voluntarily and without pay, to come to Europe to rebuild and bring relief. We work in different countries. When the Mennonite Central Committee heard of the great need of the Illzach Institution for the Blind, a relief team was organized. We'll work here for three weeks, to be followed by a Bible week.

"And everyone works like four," adds Mr. Heitzmann, the Director of the Institution, who goes on to tell us that these Mennonites receive their food supplies, wherever they are working, in the form of canned goods. It is not ordinary canned goods from a giant American cannery, but it has been canned by the Mennonite farmers "over there," who write on every can their name with the phrase, "In the name of Christ."

The Dutch girl who acts as housemother tells us her work is child's play. Just think! I have a potato peeler, running water, and a good cookstove. Such things aren't usually found in the camps where these volunteers work. "But still it's always a lot of fun," she adds.

Everything is democratic with these seventeen Mennonite volunteers. Evenings they meet to sing, pray, read, and discuss the coming day's work. Working hours, rest periods, and mealtimes are set by agreement. They need no boss, because each one imposes on himself the discipline in group life.

Can they understand each other? All the Americans speak either German or French, and the Alsatians translate when the little girl from the Saar runs out of English. But really they all speak together the language of their ideals and their hearts.

Here they are but seventeen. Elsewhere they are hundreds; in the world, hundreds of thousands. Evenings, one sits at the piano and they all sing the same song. And as they finish tearing down ruins, they build out of the rubble the great hope of human brotherhood. Over oceans, over borders, they reach a helping hand, because they are inspired by one and the same spirit.

Isn't it hard sometimes for us to get along with our fellow men, even those who have the same nationality and speech and belief? That's why these workers have a lot to tell us, these seventeen with but one heart and soul, working on the banks of the Doller in obedience to but one sentiment: to love their neighbor.—L. P. Lutten.

WESTERN DISTRICT C. E. FELLOWSHIP CONVENTION
McPHERSON, KANSAS, AUGUST 6, 1950
THEME: Christ Our Hope

THE Annual Convention of the Western District C.E. Fellowship will be held this year at the First Mennonite Church, McPherson, Kansas, August 6. The speaker for the evening meeting will be Ernst Harder. Harder is not new to many of us having come to this country from Paraguay to receive his higher Education in our Mennonite schools. Upon completion of his work he went back to his own people in South America and is now back again to continue his studies at our Seminary in Chicago.

The Story of a Workcamp in France

THE Workcamp in France told about in this issue of "Mennonite Youth" took place from January 30 to February 19, 1950. It was in Illzach, France, near the Swiss border in Alsace. The winter workcamp was planned for farm laborers who would have a little more free time in the winter. It was an all-Mennonite workcamp consisting of ten Alsatians, four Americans, two Germans, one from the Saar, one from Holland, and three from other parts of France. There was a very genuine spirit developing among these workers which always develops in a workcamp.

There are local Mennonites in this region of France. With them there developed a very close relationship. They provided the camp with considerable quantities of food. The local Mennonite churches had their annual week-end Bible study meetings on the three week-ends that the workcamp was there so they participated with the Alsatian Mennonites hearing from Guy Hershberger, Pierre Widmer and, on the last night, they went to Basel, Switzerland to hear Orie Miller's report on his trip to the Orient.

The workcamp enjoyed most cordial relations with the institution for the blind which is a Protestant institution of almost a century in age. Mr. Heitzmann was greatly impressed by the spirit of the young people in the workcamp and was also impressed to see love in action in this manner.

The workcamp lived in the institution's main building in which several rooms had already been restored. They used institutional cooking equipment which was equipped to serve eighty, but now is serving only twenty because of the destroyed buildings.

There was much publicity given to the workcamp. A long article in the main newspaper of the region, L'Alsace, plus numerous contacts and indirect relationships with the village all served to point up the purpose and motive of the camp.

There is something deeply thrilling about workcamps. For youth that want to see things done, it serves to give their zest for action an outlet. For youth that desire to see their faith taken out of the printed pages of the Bible and placed into living reality in the lives of men and women, the parables of Jesus begin to become real as the work of unselfish service progresses. Those who have had the workcamp experience testify to the rich fellowship they experience with one another, the genuine testimony their work reveals, the effect such an experience has both on those they help and on those who are the helpers. We need more, many more, of our young people who will give themselves in voluntary service in such experiences as work camps.

Western District Youth Sponsor Rallies

ONE aspect of the young people's work in our district this year is the rallies which have been held in several communities.

The plan has been to get the Mennonite young people in various communities to cooperate in arranging a program that would be mutually helpful. The district Fellowship program-committee has worked with the local groups in trying to accomplish this.

The usual procedure has been to get a committee representing the participating churches to meet with members of the Fellowship program committee. This larger committee then discussed the needs and problems of each local group as presented by its representative. This became the basis for planning the rally program for that community. The first of such programs was well received and seemed to set the pattern for subsequent rallies, although there is nothing binding for any group may use its creative abilities to set up a different type of program.

The local representatives have almost unanimously expressed the need for more information regarding both district and General Conference Y.P.U. work, so the district officers have tried to bring to each rally this desired information. Then, under competent leadership, local representatives have arranged a panel discussion on their particular needs and problems. This was usually followed by a general discussion with audience participation. The climax of the rally was an inspirational and challenging message by a special speaker.

We hope it will be possible to continue this type of program and reach all communities in the Western District.

Colombia Prayer-Request

by Janet Soldner

SHORTLY after returning from furlough I was asked to give injections in the home of one of our neighbors. The family had fled from the vicinity where they had lived before because of political pressure. Here again I found those who were sympathizers to our cause. During my first visit the conversation soon lead to talking about the Bible. It seemed that the husband could hardly wait to ask whether we had Bibles for sale. The following day I was happy to sell him one. The face of both husband and wife lit up as I told them about some of the precious truths contained therein. They promised to come to our services but thus far have not done so. This is so often the case, they promise to come but never do so. They are sympathizers, no more. They are afraid of neighbors, afraid of what their friends might say, afraid to lose their business. Pray for them that the Holy Spirit might speak to their hearts and that they might be willing to stand up for Jesus.

V. S. Workers Visit Rescue Mission

At Chicago in June Bertha Fast of Mountain Lake, Minnesota, who is director of Voluntary Service led the girls in a period of orientation. She was assisted in this work by Lois Kreider and John T. Neufeld. There were a number of lecturers on methods of Daily Vacation Bible School teaching, how to travel over the city of Chicago, and the objectives of the Voluntary Service Program. A rather unexpected experience came during the week when the unit went down to the loop in the evening and stopped in for the service of the famous Pacific Garden Mission in the very heart of the skidrow area of State Street. The girls took their seats well in the back of auditorium and hadn't been there very long when the pastor, Harry Saultier, asked where they were from and then said in a few minutes he would call upon them for a musical number. Even though they were taken aback by this sudden invitation to appear on the program, the unit members decided that they would be able to sing and a little later they stood up before the audience of skidrow characters and sang a Christian hymn.

Test of a Christian

Judge not one another; but every man look into his own bosom. How stands the matter in your own breast? Examine your conscience before God. Are you a happy partaker of this Scriptural, this truly primitive religion? Are you a witness of the religion of love? Are you a lover of God and all mankind? Does your heart glow with gratitude to the Giver of every good and perfect gift, the Father of the spirits of all flesh, who giveth you life, and breath, and all things; who hath given you his Son, his only Son, that you "might not perish, but have everlasting life?" Is your soul warm with benevolence to all mankind? Do you long to have all men virtuous and happy? And does the constant tenor of your life and conversation bear witness of this? Do you "love not in word (only), but in deed, and in truth?" Do you persevere in the "work of faith, and the labor of love?" Do you "walk in love, as Christ also loved us, and gave himself for us?" Do you, as you have time, "do good unto all men," and in as high a degree as you are able? Whosoever thus "doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother." Whosoever thou art whose heart is herein as my heart, give me thine hand! Come, and let us magnify the Lord together, and labor to promote his kingdom upon the earth! Let us join hearts and hands in this blessed work, in striving to bring glory to God in the highest, by establishing peace and good will among men. to the uttermost of our power! —John Wesley.

BRETHREN BRING GERMAN YOUTH

ELGIN, ILL.—The service commission of the Church of the Brethren will bring an additional 200 German high-school students to America for a year's stay in Christian homes here, it was anounced today by W. Harold Row, secretary of the commission. One hundred fifteen students arrived in New York on July 5 and 85 more arrived on July 10.

Nealy a year ago, the commission sponsored the coming of 90 students. These have been attending school here and have been living in Brethren homes. They will return in late September and early October.

The new group, of whom approximately 70 are girls and 130 are boys, will spend several days in an orientation course at the Brethren Service Center at New Windsor, Md., before going to their "foster" homes.

Approximately half the students will stay with Brethren families and half with families of other denominations, Row said. Although predominantly Protestant, the group includes Catholics.

The purpose of bringing these students to America for a year's stay is "to promote better international understanding through giving these students an insight into our church, school, and home life."

RELIEF PERSONNEL NOTES

Norman and Eunice Wingert of Upland, California, and Virgil, and Anne Grace Flickinger of Pretty Prairie, Kansas, left on July 14 for Europe. Ada and Ida Stoltzfus returned from India on July 7.

SERVICE FOLDER AVAILABLE

A leaflet describing the service unit at Topeka State Hospital in Kansas is available. The information includes a picture of the work, the challenge for service in such a place of need, and steps to follow for making application.

What Would You Do?

If you were a member of one of our Mission Boards faced with some of the following problems, what would you do?

1. When young people think it more significant to begin a new work than to faithfully carry on what has already been started?
2. When our churches give more consideration for interdenominational mission organizations than for our own work for which we are responsible?
3. When missionaries from large congregations get many Christmas gifts while those missionaries who come from very small congregations may not get any Christmas gifts?
4. When mission candidates dictate where and under what conditions they want to work rather than consider a call to a place where you have an opening and a great need for personnel?
5. When our churches pay our missionaries $5 or $10 for speaking but some independent missionary is given the whole offering?
6. When more publicity is given to undenominational missions than to Mennonite missions and when you have testimonies which show that our missionaries are doing a better piece of work on the foreign field than some of these which are more widely advertised?
7. When students interested in missions who have had all of their training outside of Mennonite circles expect the board to show them more consideration than those who have attended our schools?
8. When the opportunities are great but the finances do not keep pace?
9. When persons want to do Christian work but short cut their preparation for that service?
10. When one of your fields proved hard while another one of your fields yielded a bountiful harvest?
11. When people clamor to open up work in new countries when to do so would mean neglecting our commitments in those countries which we already occupy and where there are areas in our fields which have not been reached?

PHYSICAL AND SPIRITUAL BUILDING

Recently several Voluntary-Service workers took part in a new type of work project in Oberrad, a suburb of Berlin. The task was that of building an addition to a pastor's residence, to be used for youth meetings. Participants in the work were to be young people (ages 20 to 25) from this particular congregation, rather than selected individuals from various places. The objective was not only to construct the building, but to work in close contact with the young people to strengthen their interest in the work of the congregation.

The experience revealed a situation prevalent among many Protestant churches in Europe: youths 13 to 15 years old who are in confirmation class, respond to the work of the congregation, but those older, 19 to 25, generally have little direct contact or interest in the work of the church. It is hoped that the work, fellowship and worship in this project made lasting spiritual impressions upon those whose lives were touched.

California Retreat — August 12-19

Young People's Retreat of the California Churches will convene August 12-19. Speakers are Andrew Shelly, Bible Teacher, Kitchener, Ont.; A. H. Schultz, Campfire Speaker, Quakertown, Pa.; Vernon Neufeld, Boy Girl Relations and Music, Shafter, Calif. The various churches are making donations to help lower the cost of registration.

TO KNOW IS TO CARE . . . .

BUT WHO CARES?

All Mennonites care when they know what is going on in their Church. An informed Church is a responsive Church—responsive in support, concern, attendance, giving.

WHAT IS THERE TO KNOW?

The whole task of the Church is always known to the faithful members who attend regularly and share the responsibilities of the Church. There are others—still unaware of the Church's challenges and opportunities. If they were informed, they too would respond.

HOW CAN YOU KNOW?

Preaching alone cannot keep churches informed because not everybody attends regularly. Form letters from Boards and agencies either reach too few or are too expensive. But THE MENNONITE can bring all the messages and news of the Church into all their (or your) homes every week.

THE COST OF KNOWING:

Now there are two ways of subscribing to THE MENNONITE. Any individual can subscribe for $2.50 per year. The HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN, is the second way. This plan provides a subscription at the rate of $1.80 per family per year in any church which subscribes for all contributing resident families.

Yes, to know is to care—and to care is to know. Let THE MENNONITE work for you and your Church. .

Looking Toward Freeman

MAY GOD PREPARE

Wherefore . . . be ye steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord . . . your labor is not in vain." I Cor. 15:58.

Conference reports at Freeman will again reveal unmistakably that our labor in the Lord has not been in vain. For this we should be prepared to give God the deep gratitude and devotion of our heart.

If we are spiritually sensitive, eager, and alert, these reports will also reveal how tremendous is our task, how unparalleled are our opportunities, and how staggering is the need and, in comparison, how feeble, half-hearted, inefficient, and unco-ordinated have been our efforts. This should cause us to bow in deep penitence of soul and call forth fervent prayer for forgiveness and for more adequate enablement.

Gratitude, on the one hand, for the amazing doors of opportunity, for the marvelous manifestations of God's saving and enabling grace, and for the provision of needed resources of personnel and of money, and penitence, on the other hand, for our blundering, prayerless, and ineffective ways of work should rouse us to strive more earnestly and prayerfully to become more abounding and effective in the work of the Lord.

This surely is one of our big purposes as we gather at Freeman. This purpose should also motivate the Conference desire to re-examine and recondition its organizational machinery. How can our Conference become more efficient and effective in serving God's redemptive purpose among us and through us?

May God prepare us for the Conference and for greater service in His name.

SOME EDITORIAL POLICIES

A NEW EDITOR may be blissfully ignorant of all the problems and decisions that lie before him, but his general course and goals should be fairly clear. The reader should also be aware of these policies that he may understand and cooperate for the best results. We may well consider certain common policies.

THE MENNONITE is the official publication of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America. It is the servant of the Conference and not its dictator. This does not mean that it may not question or criticize certain phases of Church work if such should seem necessary. But as a servant of the Conference it will endeavor to keep before the church the work and program of the Conference and to carry out its general policies. It shall seek to maintain a balanced emphasis upon the various phases of church and Conference life and work.

THE MENNONITE stands by its motto, and firmly believes that Jesus Christ is the only foundation upon which to build a life, a church, or a paper. In deciding on matters for publication the test shall be whether Christ shall be glorified and man's spiritual life be strengthened. We stand squarely on the life and teachings of Jesus, being fully convinced that "other foundation can no man lay."

THE MENNONITE does not propose to engage in merely controversial issues. The great, clear-cut principles of the Gospel are too important and far-reaching to waste time and space on petty differences of opinion. We shall endeavor to abide by the great fundamental beliefs of the Christian faith without entangling ourselves in strange interpretations and fanciful ideas.

THE MENNONITE shall attempt to contribute to the whole of life: its faith and works, worship and life, the Christian ideals and practical applications. Consideration shall be given to old and young, the minister and the layman, men and women, to their problems, decisions, joys, and sorrows. But always with the hope that it may "comfort your hearts, and establish you in every good word and work."

THE MENNONITE stands for the simple life and the equality of all believers. Continuing the past policy, titles such as "Rev.", "Dr.", "Prof." ordinarily will be omitted. "The ground is level at the foot of the cross."

While the Editor may not agree with all the opinions expressed by contributors, he believes such opinions may be expressed where they are not at variance with the teachings of Jesus and His Gospel. The editorials, unless otherwise noted or initialed, are his own for which he must assume full responsibility. Letters of comment concerning articles published or matters of vital interest to the church are invited, and the right is requested to publish such letters when thought helpful.

The Editor requests the right to edit material that is received for publication, changing or deleting such parts as may not be of general value or interest. This may frequently be necessary in church correspondence, for obviously a class picnic in Pennsylvania may be of little interest to the people of Oklahoma or California. Let no one feel offended if such minor changes seem necessary.

Finally THE MENNONITE is to be your paper and you will have a large share in its success. Your contributions, comments, interest, and prayers are absolutely necessary to the success of this publication.

WHAT ABOUT KOREA?

NOW THAT there is actual fighting in Korea, the outcome of which we cannot forsee as yet, we need to do some real heart-searching. But the basic question for the Christian is not "What about Korea?", but rather "what about our foundations?" If we have built squarely on the solid foundation of the love of Christ, then no incident or storm anywhere in the world should sweep us off our feet.

In this connection we do well to consider again a portion of Our Statement of Position as adopted at a former Conference:

> "We believe that war is altogether contrary to the teaching and spirit of Christ and the Gospel; that therefore war is sin, as is all manner of carnal strife; that it is wrong in spirit and method as well as in purpose, and destructive in its results."

In connection with this statement there are also other basic facts which we should hold in the center of our thinking:

1. The power of God is mightier than the military might of man.
2. The ideal of love as taught and lived by Christ, is not a vague theory to be believed in peacetime, but cast aside when we need it most. It is the most endurable power in the world.
3. It is not our business either to succeed or fail as the world may see it. Our business is to "keep ourselves in the love of God," and leave all consequences with Him.
4. We may lose our life by holding true to the principles of love, but so did our Master.
5. The times call for deep penitence, a renewed dedication to God, and a humble walking with Him in the paths of peace,—cost what it may. It is a time for prayer!

MISSION DAY AT CONFERENCE

DID YOU notice the splendid program that is planned for the last day of the General Conference at Freeman? The Conference is not to dwindle in interest as we near the close but rather rise to a high climax as we celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of our mission work in India.

Everyone attending Conference should plan to stay to the close and thus gain the inspiration and blessing this mission program will afford. May this be a fitting benediction to our Conference.

The Modern Road to Emmaus

by I. I. Friesen

Luke 24:21 "We trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel."

THESE ARE the words of the two disciples who were walking dejectedly down the road to Emmaus a short time after the crucifixion of their Lord. They reveal an attitude of disappointment and of eclipsed hope which is a very fitting illustration of the attitude and thinking of our present age. These men had once had great hopes and convictions about Christ. They had put great confidence in Him and had believed that in Christ they would find the answer to man's greatest needs. Now Christ was dead for three days and so they were completely confused about the meaning of it all. The key stone of their arch of faith had dropped out. They had lost their fondest hopes and convictions and were drifting along without being aware of any definite purpose or meaning to life.

The world today is traveling this road to Emmaus. It too has lost its hopes and convictions. There was a time not long ago when man had hoped that through science and education this world would be redeemed. Now it has lost its supreme faith in these agencies, because it sees that science has brought this world to the verge of self-destruction and that education alone cannot overcome the innate selfishness that there is in man.

It is in this attitude of uncertainty that some have turned to the church for an answer. In a now well-known editorial in Fortune magazine, the statement was made, "The way out is the sound of a voice, not our voice but a voice coming from something not ourselves, in the existence of which we cannot disbelieve. It is the earthly task of the pastors to hear this voice, to cause us to hear it, and to tell us what it says." Here we have a humble appeal coming by way of a secular journal. When, however, the world looks to the church, it finds that often here too there is confusion and lack of conviction as to essential truth. Arnold Toynbee, the historian, says, "It is now obvious that for a number of generations we have been attempting to hold on to Christian character without possessing Christian beliefs. But Christian behaviour which is not supported by Christian faith is a wasting asset, as we have discerned to our great dismay." The church, therefore, needs to return to a more serious study of its beliefs. Too often these have been taken for granted. They have been accepted as a spiritual heritage from our forefathers but have not been given special consideration as to their meaning and implications. Consequently, we have no very clear convictions about them and when asked to give an answer for the faith that is in us we are not able to do so. The emphasis in the church has often been upon activity and conduct rather than on belief. Sometimes "doctrinal definiteness" has been discouraged in the interests of general good will. We must realize, however, that our ethics soon waste away if not supported by basic Christian convictions. Beliefs are especially necessary in times of chaos and uncertainty in order to give stability and security to wavering disciples. Many churches are beginning to recognize this necessity in a time when the beliefs or ideologies of the world are being constantly pressed upon us. Many recent books like What Can a Man Believe by James Stewart, A Firm Faith For Today by Harold Bosely, The Faith We Declare by Edwin Lewis, and This is Our Faith by John Dow, all stress the importance of deepening and strengthening our Christian convictions.

In view of all this, it is well to observe how Christ restored the convictions of these wavering disciples on the road to Emmaus.

First, we notice that He took them back to the Scriptures. "Beginning at Moses and all the prophets he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself." Hence, if we are to renew our convictions, we must return to the Scriptures. It is in the Bible that God has spoken to man. It is through this Book that He continues to speak. As man waits in faith before the Scriptures, God comes to him and speaks to him the message that he needs to hear. Like these disciples going to Emmaus, we are slow to believe the Scriptures and to find therein the Christ who is Himself the center of our beliefs and convictions.

Secondly, we notice that Christ did not reveal new truth to these disciples but that He gave new meaning to old truth with which they were already familiar. These disciples, no doubt, knew the Old Testament, but they had never seen the truth as it applied to their present needs in just the way Jesus pointed it out to them. There are many old truths in the Scriptures to which we must again return if we are to be brought out of confusion into certainty in our day.

Among these truths is the fact of the exceeding sinfulness of human nature. The fact that men could crucify the Lord of glory was evidence enough to these early disciples that the heart of man was "deceitful above all things and desperately wicked." This conviction is again gaining ground in our day. Two world wars and the prospect of a third war

With M. C. C. in Mexico

by John Enns

CUAUHTEMOC is a town of about 13,000 inhabitants, situated roughly 2,000 miles directly south of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, at the fringe of an inter-mountain valley lying 7,000 feet above sea level. This is where thousands of Mennonites living in the valley come to market their products and do their shopping. There are between 20 and 30 Mennonite families living in the town itself, some of which own businesses but the majority of which are day-laborers. Here, also, is the location of the M.C.C. Home which forms a link between the Mennonites of the North and the Mennonites of Mexico.

The "Home" was opened three years ago as a Voluntary Service Unit. During that time many young people from our churches have come and gone, each one leaving an impression in this community. Our various activities by which we seek to serve our fellowman are briefly described in the succeeding paragraphs.

Medical Service

By furnishing the local hospital with two Mennonite nurses, it is hoped not only to raise the nursing standard in this hospital but also to render Christian-motivated service to our brethren. M.C.C. has also contributed materially toward equipping this 30-bed hospital which enabled it to open a year ago. The Mennonite patients appreciate being able to talk Low German to the nurses, and the Mexican patients say that the "Menonitas" give better nursing care. Unfortunately, we find it difficult to continue this phase of our work. It seems that too few nurses apply for Voluntary Service.

Seventy-five miles to the north-west of Cuauhtemoc, at Santa Clara, we are operating a health clinic which serves both Mexican and Mennonite communities. The station is a converted old ranch house situated on a lonely patch of ground four miles from the nearest village. Accident and obstetric cases as well as public health duties are among the main services given by the two nurses stationed there. A vehicle and chauffeur are available when there are out-calls.

Educational and Social

School: The handy-man at the clinic was released half time to teach school in one of the villages. There were twelve children attending. By next fall it is hoped that we will be able to supply a full-time teacher. There is a great need here for better educational facility.

At the Unit Home: Five different classes in English are instructed two evenings a week. Both Mexicans and Mennonites are eager to learn this language. Students, numbering about 30, range from school children to doctors. A special Saturday afternoon class is being given which combines English with music and religious instruction.

Music: There are 19 students enrolled for piano lessons, most of whom prefer to take two lessons a week. We are fortunate in having Miss Ella Franz from Tabor College here to conduct this school of music. The students are enthusiastic workers and are making good progress. Most of them are children of school age, but several mothers with four and five children, also take time out for piano lessons.

Singing: Every Wednesday, night is open house for the Mennonite young people to come to the Home to sing. Religious and German folk songs are used. This group participated in the Christmas and Easter programs which were given in the Unit Home. Occasionally all the youth is invited to an evening of games and informal visiting.

Kindergarten: Kay Wiens, a unit member from Leamington, Ontario conducts a Kindergarten for Mexican youngsters five half-days a week. The children thus learn to play and work together under Christian supervision and leadership.

Library

We have the beginning of a German lending library containing about 200 volumes. These books are loaned free to anyone interested. People from 35 to 75 miles distant come to get reading material, in addition to the local reading fans. Good reading material is scarce in these communities and we are glad that we can offer this needed service. Our books have been donated by Mennonites in the United States. We are still collecting and adding to the library and would appreciate further donations, especially good fiction.

Agriculture

In a small way we are trying to help the farmers

From the Mission Front

In Japan

IF YOU have any impressions of the country, write them before you've been there three months," the big man said, eight months ago. I think he must have been right because now many have become matter-of-fact, everyday occurrences.

That August day in Yokohama, as the stevedores came to unload the boat in their queer, two-toed tennis shoes, I was sure that the entire hundred of them must have been identical twins. But they weren't. Today the woman with the two children who came to mend her husband's trousers chuckled as she teetered on her clogs with her bare toes around the straps. That's her way of putting the baby on her back to sleep, and very soon she was at the machine again with the baby's head bobbling precariously at her shoulder.

"Charley," boyish and open-faced in expression but cynical in his attitude toward fundamental faiths; comes regularly to class twice a week. How we wish we could clip his hair, and with it clip off some of the scars that war has left on his soul!

Japan is a poor country—destroyed one time after another by earthquake and flood, and now ravaged by war. They accept the natural losses philosophically and tell me calmly that I should expect at least another severe earthquake before I go home in '52 although there is no regularity about their occurrence.

Fire losses accompany earthquakes. Those, too, are to be expected as inevitable. The carpenter's mother told us cheerfully that "Konohana-ku has a flood and tidal wave every ten years. There is sure to be one here again within the next year or two." I suppose that constant consciousness has made their war losses a little less poignant than they would have been in Westmoreland or Wayne County. Rice paper and plywood are pretty, but inexpensive, and their loss is accepted as quite a matter-of-course occurence.

At first the poverty and grime struck me straight between the eyes, and stayed there, It was hard to see the famous "Japanese love for beauty." But it is there. Each tiny house has its little "beauty corner," an alcove in the living room for a pretty wall hanging, which is seasonal, and a vase of artistically arranged fresh flowers. Americans try to discourage the impudent little English sparrows who persist in nesting in our trees and houses, but Japanese paint and carve them for decorative purposes. Surprisingly, the little fellows are right attractive. Our objects or art come from Greece and Rome. But for the Japanese they grow in their gardens—eggplant, and persimmons, and iris. Under the care of a sympathetic gardener, what at home would be a neglected nook somewhere, develops here into a lovely rest-spot with boulders and blossoms, and usually a tiny fountain and pool.

We love "blossom time" at home—drifts of pink and white across the hillsides against the new green of budding trees. But "blossom time" at home means fruit to us. We wonder if the cold last night blackened the tiny flowers and examine them anxiously in the morning. But not so in Japan. Japanese people love "Sakura" simply because they are beautiful. Families stroll under the few blooming trees near the Castle until the bare sand is pounded hard by their feet.

Schoolgirls walk the long way around just for a glimpse of the puny cherry tree beside the police station. Sections of great companies plan picnics to outlying parks or wooded areas because it is blossom time. Japanese hosts and hostesses eagerly point out a few pink blooms on a skinny tree and exclaim delightfully, "Berry, berry beautiful!" Naturally, we agree. But I'll admit that sometimes it is rather a dazed agreement.

"Straw sandals" in the fifth-grade reader were worn by squalid urchins in the reeking cities of China, and we recognized them with interest when we saw them first in the shops. But here the children wear them in school all the time and park their street shoes in little racks at the door. Perhaps it is better so. It does, at least, save a lot of energy that is now wasted in sweeping and re-sweeping the floors at home. Of course, they have the inevitable struggle with dirt, too, but leaving the sand outside in the first place is a help in solving the problem. Perhaps their dipper and pail of water with which they slosh continually is an answer to the dust problem which we have not discovered.

"Why, Tsuda-san, are you here?" I asked as I stumbled into Rhoda's class one-evening. "I thought you came Tuesday and Friday evenings." The next evening after class he waited for me. He's a slick little fellow who fits eyeglass frames at one of the large department stores.

"I'm very sorry I came last evening, Teacher. I won't do it again. But there is nothing to do at home, and my house is very small; so I like English class." I was ashamed of myself. Since the class he had crashed was a small one, we let him come. Four nights a week—Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, Friday—such ambition I have not seen in America!

Kozawa-san, the little old man who is a salesman for a steel company (I think he will soon be thirty-seven), and I were walking to the tram-car after class at the Y.M.C.A. "What shall I believe? I was in the army. Until the end of the war, I believed we would win. Then suddenly, Japan surrendered. Everything went wrong. Now I no longer believe the Japanese leaders. I no longer believe what my father and mother believed when they went to the shrine and prayed."

Then the little "old" man spoke. "I know it is hard for you young people. I used to go to Tokyo when we sold steel products for the war. I knew a few of the leaders. I knew it would be impossible for us to win the war. I saw that. But for you it is hard."

Then Kozawa talked again. "I believe the Golden

Adequate Leadership - 400 years ago

by S. T. Moyer

THE STORY of the Waldenses at the time of the Reformation is one which should make every lover of the Church of Jesus Christ pause for prayer, then rise up and act. As told briefly by John Horsch in The Mennonites in Europe, Waldenses up to the time of the Reformation adhered to these six principles and practiced among others:

Not taking the oath

Not going to court between members to settle disputes

No worldly amusements, gambling, immodest clothes, immoral songs

Nonresistance

Baptism only for those who by mouth and heart desire it

Avoidance of taverns and drinking

Three hundred years earlier, in 1259, the Inquisitor, the Roman Catholic Chronicler, Reinerius, reported: "They are modest in their attire, live by the labor of their hands, live lives pure and temperate in eating and drinking. They do not visit drinking houses, do not indulge in joking, slander, or gossip."

This non-conformity to the world, and reliance upon the Bible rather than upon political or ecclesiastical organization brought them power. Within a century they had spread over large parts of France and Italy. In the whole dukedom of Austria their adherents were calculated at 80,000.

Then what happened? When the State-Reformation churches arose, adherents of which violated every one of the six practices noted above, practicing a faith and works contrary to the Waldenses, then these Waldenses blindly went over to the Zwinglian leaders, asked for counsel and instruction, and soon they swallowed, bait and hook, the Zwinglian position and deserted the position for which they had suffered intense persecution and privation for centuries.

How is this explained? Horsch gives the answer: they lacked an "adequate leadership."

In Italy, a minority dissented and Waldenses. In France these Reformed-Waldenses later become Hugenots.

We cannot help but raise the question today: how long can the younger churches on the mission field in the future continue to stay true to the principles and practices which gave them birth, and which gives them life today, without an adequate leadership?

A bigger question is, just what is "an adequate leadership?" What are its roots? its methods? What is its temper? the core of its loyalty?

Rule is good. If I practice that, and love my neighbors, isn't that enough?"

"No, Kozawa-san, it isn't enough. You need Jesus and His love in your heart."

"I know. But it is so hard to believe. So many things I have believed have failed."

O God, give us the wisdom to help him!

A Letter Edged in Black

by Anne Buller

The man referred to in the story is a Russian Mennonite whose wife remains in Siberia. He has worked for one of our M.C.C. units in Germany as a helper.

THE MAILMAN handed him a letter from his wife—the second one during six long years of separation. He fingered the envelope and carefully studied the writing on it. The return address was stamped somewhere in Siberia. What a surprise that it came through at all. With trembling hands he opened the seal and slowly drew out the contents. He found several pages of writing on sheets of paper edged in black.

Hurriedly his eager eyes skimmed the contents: "With great sorrow I must write you, dear husband, of the death of our little seven-year old son . . . how he suffered during the last years of his short life . . . I stayed at his bedside for eight days, never once going to bed myself . . . I wished so often that you were here . . . talked about you so often, and said that we should not write papa about his illness, and when I asked him why not he said, 'then papa will only worry about me too much.' " Papa's eyes filled with tears so that for several minutes he could not read on. But what about the rest of the letter? He dried his tears and continued, ". . . he passed away the day after his seventh birthday . . . we had the funeral in our room . . . would that you were here so we could share this sorrow . . . his older brother misses him already for they were so close to each other . . ."

Hundreds of thoughts crowd into his mind: Death . . . his own dear little son passed into eternity . . . Why? Insufficient food . . . no warm clothing . . . improper care because his dear wife must work as a slave—haul wood through the four-foot drifts of Siberia's forests, and come home to an ice-cold room where her clothes, wet from the day's work, freeze rather than dry . . . If only he could get her somehow he'd go immediately . . . in fact, he'd start out on foot tomorrow. He buried his head in his hands and cried like a little child.

But the rest of the letter . . . "And that is not all . . . your brother also has passed away . . . you can imagine what caused it . . . hunger, work, no hospital care . . . he was buried last week . . ." His brother also? And his little son?

His heart felt as though it would break. This sorrow seemed too much to bear. The thousands of miles separating Germany from Siberia prevent him from helping his dear family in any way. Not even by letter can he reach them—for none of them seem to go through. From various sources he hears of the thousands who die daily as a sacrifice to human selfishness and hate, and he wonders how long his loved ones will remain alive. But all he can do is wait—and pray that God may give him patience and hope, and ask Him to watch over those who are dear to his heart.

Are we who have suffered no ill grateful enough for that which we have? Do we feel responsible for the care of those who suffer under the cruel hands of the godless? Are we growing weary of giving and working? And do we find time to pray? God help us to search our hearts and be obedient to His voice.

"This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you" (John 15:12).

M. C. C. Mission Study Group in Europe

Fifteen Mennonite and Brethren in Christ representatives including church leaders and M.C.C. field personnel, plan to make a detailed study of the European relief and service program in a two-week period, July 29 to August 14. Through visits to the relief projects in various countries of Europe, conferences with European Mennonites, and other contacts, the group is to evaluate the work, particularly to outline what its continuing purposes and goals should be. Those in the study group are: H. S. Bender, Harold Buller, H. A. Fast, Noah G. Good, Lester Hostetler, C. N. Hostetler, Jr., A. E. Janzen, H. H. Janzen, C. F. Klassen, A. E. Kreider, O. O. Miller, John H. Moseman, Paul Peachy, Elmer Swartzendruber, and Cornelius Wall.

School Supplies Being Sent

Shipping space has been requested for sending to Germany, France, Belgium, Austria, the Philippines and Java, supplies of various school supplies recently contributed by children in the United States. Contributions of these items in Canada will be sent to Paraguay. These pencils, scissors, crayons, tablets and other items essential to the teaching of children, are to be used in children's homes, community centers, school classes, and in other types of distribution.

Canadian Leader to Visit South America

Leaving on July 23, J. J. Thiessen of Saskatoon, Sask., is representing his conference group in a visit to the Mennonite colonies in South America. Brother Thiessen has been intimately connected with the work of Mennonite refugee migration and resettlement, through his service as Chairman of the Canadian Mennonite Board of Colonization and member of the M.C.C. Executive Committee.

Service Unit in Peru Approved

Assignment of at least four young men under the agency S.C.I.P.A. (Inter-American Affairs Committee) in Peru has been arranged. The major project may be that of helping to clear a ranch in the Amazon jungle, as an experiment to see whether it would be possible to colonize the area.

The men would work as regular employees, but they are desired by the agency to serve particularly in a role somewhat between that of the technicians and laborers; their background of agriculture and their personal attitudes and character are also values which are sought to add a constructive influence to the staff. This work offers good opportunity to help people in physical need, and at the same time, to give a witness through life and service "In the Name of Christ."

Government Group Plans Mobilization

The National Security Resources Board is the governmental agency whose function it is to develop a plan for mobilization of industrial and manpower resources in the event of national emergency. Labor leaders and others are being consulted in drawing up the provisions of the plan. The M.C.C. Peace Section is endeavoring to keep in touch with any developments in this connection or in other governmental agencies, which may have implications affecting conscientious objectors to war or military preparations.

Counsellors Visit Service Units

Contact with the various summer service units have been made by several ministers, teachers and other counsellors, particularly to strengthen spiritual life in the units, help in solving any unit problems, and interpret more clearly the purposes and challenge of M.C.C. Voluntary Service. Those helping in this capacity are Roy Roth, Lois Gunden, Andrew Shelly, Edna Ramseyer, and Alta Schrock.

ought to be enough to convince us of the radical evil that there is in the heart of man. Men no longer believe in automatic progress. This means that unless men receive help from without, they are completely unable to cope with the powers of evil in their own hearts and in the world around them.

This, then, must lead to another conviction, namely the truth that we have a living Lord, and that spiritual power becomes available to us when we surrender ourselves completely to the control of this risen Lord. When Christ secures the full control of our lives, He is able to lead us on to victory no matter how great the power of the enemy may be or how small our own resources. When the patient is willing to put this case into the hands of this physician, there is hope of healing and of full restoration of health for him.

These, then, are some fundamental convictions or beliefs to which we must return. They must become so real to us that they will cause our hearts to burn within us and send us out as missionaries in a world that has lost its hopes and convictions and again needs to be instructed about the things that give meaning and purpose to man's life here on earth.

Church

There is a General Conference Church in Cuauhtemoc. The unit members attend services here and are ready to help in whatever ways they can to build Christian unity, love and understanding. During the summer months of July and August, M.C.C. will conduct a summer vacation Bible School for the Mennonite children.

That, in brief, is what we, the representatives of your church in Canada and the United States are doing in Mexico. Our motive and desire is to do all "in the name of Christ" and to spread abroad the love of God.

Jottings

EASTERN DISTRICT

—Bethany Church, Quakertown, Pennsylvania: John P. Suderman and family were with us recently. Suderman also brought us the message using as the text John 20:20, "Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord." His theme was "The Secret Of The Christian Joy." He teaches the Bible courses at the retreat at Men-o-Lan. Our pastor, Wilmer Denlinger, is being initiated into our retreat by being the musical director throughout the entire period.—Mrs. Ed. Stoneback, Corr.

PACIFIC DISTRICT

—Second Church, Paso Robles, California: J. R. Barkman, Charles Boehr and wife, the Misses Shirley Trew and Verda Barkman from Grace Children's Home, Henderson, Nebraska, brought us an inspiring program in word, music, and testimony on Sunday morning, July 23. Barkman gave a heartsearching message stressing especially "Being Spirit Filled." In the afternoon there was a "get-together" with A. H. and Mrs. Schultz. Mrs. Schultz is the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Claassen of Paso Robles. Many friends and relatives came to greet the Schultzes and their four children from Quakertown, Pennsylvania. Mrs. J. J. Duecks is slowly improving from the stroke she had earlier in the year. She was able to go to her daughter who lives in Sacramento to stay there for some time.—Mrs. Frank Hamm, Corr.

—First Church, Aberdeen, Idaho: Missionaries Alfred Habegger from the Montana mission field visited our church on July 5 and gave a very interesting report of their work. The three week Daily Vacation Bible School with eight teachers from our church and 115 children from the various churches of the community closed on June 15 with an appropriate program in the church. Six young people were baptized on June 11, and the consecration services for five infants took place June 25. Twenty members from our church attended the Pacific District Conference the week of June 17, at Dallas, Oregon. Twenty-nine from the junior department of the Sunday School attended the retreat on July 18 at Justice Park in the mountains above Pocatello under the direction of our pastor, H. N. Harder.—H. H. Lehman, Corr.

—First, Upland, California: Two weeks of Bible School were held in the church with 34 enrolled. The closing program was enjoyed by a goodly number of parents and friends. A. J. Neuenschwander, former pastor of this church, preached in the morning service recently, and showed pictures of South America in the evening service. Mrs. Neuenschwander accompanied him. Holy communion was observed July 9.—Mrs. Fred Yoder, corr.

NORTHERN DISTRICT

—Swiss Church, Alsen, North Dakota: Plans are being made to have the ordination of Dan G. Regier, pastor of this church, as elder, on August 6. H. Ortman, Munich, North Dakota, is to be in charge of the ordination. On July 3 funeral services were conducted for Mrs. John P. Spenst, who was bedridden the last two months of her life.—Mrs. Dan G. Regier, corr.

WESTERN DISTRICT

—Hebron Church, Buhler, Kansas: July 16 we had baptismal services. Seven young people were added to the church. Mrs. A. M. Lohrentz and others are at this time touring Europe. Our church is participating in the wheat for relief drive. Christmas bundles too are being prepared now for early delivery.—Mrs. Elizabeth Wall, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Oklahoma: Ernst Harder, who has labored in Paraguay for the past three years, and who returned the middle of June, showed pictures in our church of his people and their way of life. At present he is touring churches in Oklahoma soliciting students for Bethel College. Our congregation was a guest of the Greenfield Church at Carnegie at a Children's Day Program. Ernst Harder spoke in the morning; a basket dinner was served at noon.—Wilfred Ewy, Corr.

—First Church, Geary, Oklahoma: June 27 our church united with five other churches in a Youth Rally in the Carnegia, Oklahoma, park. The Ladies Aid met on July 3 at the home of Mrs. H. C. Zweiacher; Mrs. W. H. Coil is president. Patricia Biswell and Dwight Amstutz were united in marriage July 16. Ernst Harder spoke and showed pictures here about the work in Paraguay, July 19. The young people of the church presented a public address system to the church July 16.—Corr.

—Arlington Church, Arlington, Kansas: Our minister John F. Schmidt, and family recently returned from a two and one-half week vacation spent in Detroit, Niagara Falls and Pennsylvania. During his absence visiting ministers were Jacob J. Enz and Ronald von Riesen. Two new members were taken into the church Sunday, July 23, Mrs. Gladys Goudy and Mrs. Elva Griffee. Their memberships were transferred from the Methodist Church in Sterling and the Evangelical Church in Hutchinson respectively.—Mrs. Lester Ewy, Corr.

—First Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Leona Enns and Allen Kaufman were married Sunday evening, July 23. All young men and women of the five General Conference churches in this community had a special program in store for them Tuesday evening, July 25, when B. Bargan from North Newton was here to answer their questions on peace and war. Several of our young people are planning to attend the General Conference Work Shop at St. Peter, Minnesota.

—Burrton Burrton, Kansas. Our minister, Roy Henry, spent two weeks at the Audubon camp at Kerrville, Texas. This camp is operated for the purpose of training for leadership in the field of nature study. Henry's aim is to bring greater appreciation of God's great handiwork in nature at the young peoples' Retreat. The harvest offering for foreign missions amounted to $100. A youth caravan was in charge of the union service in the Methodist Church on July 9. A group sang for Mrs. Katie Woods and Mrs. John Dick. A. J. Dyck delivered the sermon on July 16. Delegates for the General Conference are J. V. Regier, Marcus Penner and Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Dalke. John Thiessen brought the sermon on July 23. Elmer C. Holzricher, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Holzricher, was married to Margaret Gwendolyn Rowlands of Emporia, July 23. Melvern Unruh, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Unruh, was married to Miss Hiedebrecht, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Hiedebrecht of Burrton. D. C. Wedel brought the message at the union service Sunday evening, July 30.

MRS. JOHN BECKER (Marie Dyck Becker), Aberdeen, Idaho, born April 24, 1872 in Russia, a member of the First Church, Aberdeen, died April 28, 1950.

JACOB P. WEDEL, Aberdeen, Idaho, born January 16, 1860 in Poland, a member of the First Church, Aberdeen, served as deacon since 1907, died June 1, 1950.

H. H. BANMAN, Aberdeen, Idaho, son of the late Rev. and Mrs. Henry Banman, Alexanderwohl Church, born October 15, 1864, a member of First Church, Aberdeen, died July 11, 1950.

MRS. MARIA UNRUH DALKE, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, born July 20, 1881, a member of Evangelical Church but attended Bethany Church, Freeman, died July 12, 1950.

Where Our Youth Serve

UNITED STATES

Hospital Units

"If we can love: This is the touchstone. This is the key to all the therapeutic programs of the modern psychiatric hospital; it dominates the behavior of its staff from director down to gardener." Our Christian faith which emphasizes a positive outgoing love makes our young people especially adapted to making a peculiar contribution in the care and treatment of mentally ill. Christian love, in tasks great or small, is the only effective motive for participation in a hospital unit. Much of the work consists of making patients comfortable, keeping them tidy by encouraging and assisting with personal grooming, and by supervising conduct on the wards. Progressive hospitals occasionally encourage the development of a unit recreational therapy program. A list of hospital units of this summer and their leaders follows.

Kansas State Hospital for Mentally Ill., Topeka, Kansas
Leader: Ralph Lehman, Topeka, Kansas
Assistant: Evelyn Poe, Grantham, Pennsylvania

Allentown State Hospital, Allentown, Pennsylvania
Leader: Donald Miller, Goshen, Indiana
Assistant: Esther Wiens, Elbing, Kansas

Delaware State Hospital, Farnhurst, Delaware
Leader: Albert Meyer, Goshen, Indiana

Cleveland State Hospital, Cleveland, Ohio
Leader: Dennis Epp, Bluffton, Ohio
Assistant: Christine Duerksen, North Newton, Kans.

Whitfield State Hospital, Whitfield, Mississippi
Leader: Pete Bartel, Wakeeney, Kansas
Assistant: Mrs. Pete Bartel, Wakeeney, Kansas

Within easy sight of our national capitol building in Washington, D. C. is a slum. Pictured above is the ruin and degradation of the slum with the beauty and pride of our nation looming up in the background. Within your and my shadow, there are likewise slums of sorrow, need, poverty, anguish of soul. It is to minister to such aching human needs that hundreds of youth go out each year. The places they serve in the M.C.C. program and our own General Conference program is presented herewith.

Other Units

Gulfport, Gulfport, Mississippi
Leader: Orlo Kaufman, Gulfport, Mississippi
Assistant: Laura Metzler, Hesston, Kansas

Summer volunteers supplement the program planned for one-year workers who serve both colored and white of the area. Several teams of four to six work all eight weeks with a given community. The varied program includes Bible school, recreation, crafts, music, shop activities, sewing, hiking, story hours, etc. Other volunteers assist in summer Bible schools in a number of small communities or in camp maintenance.

House of Mercy, Washington, D. C.
Leader: Jean Wismer, Bluffton, Ohio

The House of Mercy is a home where unmarried mothers can find medical help, social advice, and spiritual comfort. Five staff members guide the girls in the daily tasks of co-operative housekeeping. Girls of all faiths find a welcome at the House of Mercy. Chapel services are held daily and a chaplain is available for counseling when it is desired. Volunteers serve in the nursery, in recreation, and as a vacation relief.

Industrial Home School Annex, Washington, D. C.

The Annex cares for 100 to 150 children of mixed races who are under thirteen years of age. During their stay at the Annex it is the school's responsibility to provide shelter, medical care, education, and counseling. The children come primarily from homes that have been disrupted. Summer workers supplement one-year volunteers now serving at the Annex.

Boys Village, Smithville, Ohio
E. Stanley Bohn, Bluffton, Ohio

"With God's help and yours, our homeless, bewildered boys can be saved from a life of crime." These are the words of Mr. Kerr, founder and director of the village. Unwanted, neglected, predelinquent, and delinquent boys between the ages of twelve and eighteen, who are normal mentally and physically, are received at Boys Village from Juvenile courts and child welfare agencies regardless of race or creed. The program for the boys includes sports, vocational education, religious training, hobbies, recreational games, household and farm duties, and plenty of wholesome food and rest. Unit members work in the office on the farm, and aid in a construction program which is to assist in enlarging the village to accommodate more of the applicants on the waiting list.

Utica Migrant Unit, Clinton, New York
Leader: E. Susan Sensenig, Lancaster, Pennsylvania

Each year 2,000,000 Americans follow the harvest from south to north in three great streams: West, Midwest and East. Entire families work in the fields from dawn to dusk or have no work; live in one-room shacks, prepare meals in a common cookhouse, and usually find their only diversion around the juke box in what is called the recreation room. Migrants may be colored or white, nominally Catholic or Protestant —but each is an individual personality with an eternal soul. Project hours are irregular and the program of necessity flexible because of the uncertainty of the migrants' working day. Service includes conducting Bible classes and recreation for children, evening activities for teen agers, crafts, adult education, worship services, home visitation, and counseling.

California Migrant Unit, Reedley, California
Leader: Betty van der Smissen, Lawrence, Kansas

Migrants of the San Joaquin Valley live in tents, cars, or under the sky. Nonresident migrants are not accepted into the school, church, or other social or religious institutions. Only in the saloon or grocery store where money speaks are they tolerated. The unit

Y.P.U. WORKSHOP TO BE WITH MINISTER'S RETREAT

A CHANGE of location for the Young People's Union Workshop has been necessary. It will be held at Gustavus Adolphus College at St. Peter, Minnesota rather than at Camp Byron, South Dakota. You will be able to find detailed information on the location from your pastor who has information on the Minister's Retreat to be held on the same campus.

Full details of the Workshop are being sent out to all churches. Remember the date, August 18-23, and the place, St. Peter, Minnesota, and plan to attend.

Governor Bacon Health Center, Wilmington, Del.
Leader: Twila Hostetler, Goshen Indiana

The center is unusual in that it deals almost exclusively in preventive psychiatry, and as such closely focuses its attention upon childhood. For this purpose a group of cottages have been adapted to accommodate children in homelike atmosphere. Here both normal children from underprivileged homes and those who have serious personality maladjustments are assisted toward normal living under the supervision of a housemother. Volunteers serve as reliefs for the housemothers, as attendants, and in occupational therapy.

Crippled Children's Camp, Crestline, California
Leader: Pete Buller, New York, N. Y.

High in the San Bernadino Mountains an annual summer camp for underprivileged crippled children is sponsored by the Crippled Children's Society of Los Angeles. Many have been victims of cerebral palsy, polio, and other maladies. The camp accommodates varying age groups and types of crippled during the five two-week periods of camp. Volunteers serve as counselors, assisting with the various phases of camp life.

Camp Bennett, Brookeville, Maryland
Leader: Esther Shank, Petersburg, Ohio

Camp Bennett, located on the Central Union Mission farm near Brookeville, Maryland, provides two weeks of wholesome food, fun, fellowship, and worship for underprivileged children of Washington, D.C. The camp accommodates eighty-eight children for two-week periods for six consecutive fortnights. The unit is sponsored by the Brethren in Christ and receives administrative assistance from M.C.C. Volunteers spend the first several weeks of their service canvassing slum homes for prospective campers. At camp unit members serve as counselors and assist with the recreational and religious programs and in maintenance work.

M. C. C. Headquarters, Akron, Pennsylvania

Assistance will be given to the regular staff and in housekeeping.

MEXICO

M. C. C. Service Unit Cuauhtemoc, Chihuahua, Mex.
Leader: John Enns, Cuauhtemoc, Chihuahua, Mex.

Summer volunteers are supplementing the work being done by one-year workers. Two young people with German-speaking ability are conducting summer Bible schools for the children of Cuauhtemoc. Another is assisting with maintenance in the unit home. Others are making possible physical improvements which will enable the Santa Clara outpost to more effectively serve the community.

CANADA

Hospital Units

Though most Canadian mental hospitals are adequately staffed a major part of the year, summer vacations precipitate a help shortage. Work consists of attendant work on the wards, including making people comfortable, keeping them tidy, and supervising conduct. Educational lectures and religious meetings for the workers are arranged for where possible. There are units in five mental hospitals in Canada this summer. The unit at North Battleford is General Conference sponsored, but receives administrative assistance from M.C.C.

The Ontario Hospital, London, Ontario
Leader: Chester Raber, Goshen, Indiana

Ponoka Provincial Hospital, Ponoka, Alberta

Brandon Provincial Hospital, Brandon, Manitoba

Bethesda Home for Mentally Ill, Vineland, Ontario
Leader: Pete Klassen, Winnipeg, Manitoba

North Battleford Provincial Hospital, North Battleford, Saskatchewan

Ninette Sanatorium, Ninette, Manitoba

Throughout the past year M.C.C. volunteers helped staff the t.b. sanatorium. Summer volunteers are continuing this service. The work consists of bedside nursing, bedmaking, baths, hair washing, care of patients' skin, cleaning units, and serving meals.

EUROPE

Students, alumni, and others, sponsored by the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges, participate in a four-week service unit arranged by M.C.C. This is part of the total Council program of about ten weeks in Europe for an educational tour and service. A primary purpose of these international service units is to develop good will and understanding among German, Dutch, and other Christians and as an expression of love to the rebuilding of Europe and its people. The six European units are located in Germany, Italy, and France.

Donaueschingen, Siedlungsbau Donaueschingen, Baden, Germany

We will help in a county-directed refugees housing project. This aid will have real value since the work must be done almost entirely by the refugees themselves.

Darmstadt, Hessen, Germany

In Darmstadt a self-help building program is under way for Hungarian-German refugees who originally came from the Darmstadt area. We are to help in the construction of several 2- or 4-family houses.

Westhofen, Ruhr, Germany

A small group of refugees and homeless are settling on the edge of this town. Here again the work will be done through self-help. Contact with the industrial population of this vicinity on the fringe of the Ruhr will be promoted.

Kiel, Propst Lorenzen-Heim, Schulensee, Kiel

Hammer, a suburb of Keil, has received many refugees in the past several years. Here the church is building an emergency church and meetinghouse. Our camp group will help with the general construction of the building.

Italy, Agape Praly di Perrero, Torino, Italy

Here we have no M.C.C.-directed camp. Approximately fourteen American and former campers from Europe will take part for four weeks in the Waldensians' "Agape" youth center.

France, Valdoie, Belfort, France

In the vicinity of Belfort the French Mennonites and M.C.C. are hoping to build a center for French Mennonite activities.

CITIES OF TOMORROW

By Charles A. Wells

If man follows the will of God and does not yield to hate, fear and violence, we will soon see cities of light, abundance and comfort beyond our dreams. But if man continues his surrender to hate, suspicion and fear, we will see only cities of the dead. Science is pushing us rapidly towards that decision. And it does not depend altogether upon Russia. Contrary to popular comment, the most authoritative historians do not believe that communism will seek its fulfillment by a lunge towards a world-destroying holocaust. The Communists seek supremacy through the promotion of social and economic disintegration which is a force we can combat with faith, justice, and a revival of Christian sharing. The course that will bring war is hatred being added to prejudice and ignorance,—fanning fear into violence. Every one of us can say words that build towards the mounting tensions of war,—or the increasing structure of peace.

More Conference Information

ON AUGUST 2, with somewhat over one-half of the General Conference churches reporting (120 of the 230) your Conference Secretary has already tabulated 931 votes (representing about 28,000 members) to be cast by the reporting congregations.

The delegate certificates list 465 delegates coming to Freeman. Of these 128 are ministers and 99 women. The about 700 delegates expected, plus an equal number of visitors, promise to place quite a strain on the Freeman-Marion, South Dakota community.

Edwin P. Graber, Freeman, South Dakota, is chairman of the Lodging and Registration Committee. This committee is contacting all possibilities in town and community where conference guests may stay, both among church members and others. They are also canvassing hotel, tourist cottage and trailor house facilities.

Delegates will pay, if the host desires, $1.00 per night for two persons in a bed or 75c for one person. (This applies to hospitality in homes.)

This committee will endeavor to fill all requests with reference to lodging as far as possible. Those expecting to attend may wish to inform Brother Graber of this fact, also the time of arrival, if coming other than by automobile.

FOURTH MENNONITE WORLD CONFERENCE PROCEEDINGS: August 3-10, 1948, $2.00

The Fourth Mennonite World Conference Aug. 3-10, 1948 was without question a memorable one. It was the first such conference ever to be held in America. In North America it served to bring Mennonites of the various branches together in a way not experienced before. Mennonites of the various countries had not remained entirely free from the bitter tensions created by World War II and the violent and hateful things countries had inflicted on one another. Now, after a lapse of 12 years since the last previous conference, Mennonites of the world had their first opportunity to get together and allow God's spirit of love and conciliation to heal the wounds of war and re-establish old relations of fellowship. The program had been prepared with care and perspective with the hope of tying together the strands of the past and making possible a more effective and united Christian witness in our time.

This book reporting in print the proceedings of this memorable conference is, therefore, of great significance. The speakers had prepared their addresses carefully, fully aware of the far-reaching significance of these meetings. As a result their reports, concise and to the point, make fascinating reading because they report the effects of war on Mennonites, their struggles and sufferings, weaknesses and victories without and within, and they try to point out the road ahead. Addresses from Holland revealed something of the bitter experiences of foreign occupation, those from Germany reflected a deep penitence for national wrongdoing and a longing for forgiveness and re-acceptance into the full fellowship of the Mennonite brotherhood. The addresses from France and Switzerland revealed a longing for a revitalized spiritual life and a larger participation in the cause of Christ; those from South America reflected the privations of pioneer life and joy in the fellowship of the Mennonite brotherhood; those from the newer (mission) churches the vigor of a new faith; and those from American churches the zeal and urge for an active and energetic Mennonite witness in the world.

Mennonites interested in our past and in our mission as a people will be eager to possess, read, digest, and keep for reference this valuable report.—H. A. Fast

Looking Toward Freeman

It was 27 years ago that the Mennonite churches in and around Freeman hosted the General Conference for the first time. Within a few weeks they will have another opportunity to entertain a conference which, in view of the international scene, may call for critically important plans and decisions. As we look toward Freeman, therefore, let us pray much, strive for a proper sense of spiritual value, and honestly think through our faith, convictions, and reason for existence as a denominational group.

E. J. Miller
Freeman Jr. College

At Freeman we expect a time of good fellowship and spiritual refreshing, and also reports on the progress made in the various areas in which our conference is active and suggestions and recommendations for our future course of action.

In the way of fellowship, mealtime hours have offered much opportunity to meet friends and make new acquaintances. As a lay man I can also say that our Mennonite clergy has been blessed with a goodly measure of humor which dispels all thought of any dull moments. The gracious hospitality of the members of our host churches has never left anything undone which would add to our comfort and pleasure. There are no strangers at our conference sessions. Our interest in a common cause and the spirit of Christ, our Redeemer, unites us.

While hours of fellowship are enjoyable and helpful, it is conference business that fills most of each day. Conference business is important and a serious responsibility. We are here as ambassadors for a King to do His work. Our world situation in the last decade has become progresssively more complex and tense. This situation has not left our conference work untouched. We face many uncertainties. Boards and committees will come before the conference with reports and questions. They will want our help on important decisions. At such a time as this each member of our conference needs to be vitally interested in the progress which has been made and in the potentialities which the future holds.

At our last conference session the thought of our Colombia mission work was new and in its beginning stage. What will the mission board's

"WON BY ONE"

THE THEME of Evangelism is to be one of the high notes in the coming General Conference. Evangelism is a great word. It means proclaiming the Gospel with the desire to secure religious decisions for Christ. It may be public evangelism where such effort is made through a public meeting, or private evangelism in dealing with individuals.

Of late, the term "lay-evangelism" is becoming more familiar. It simply means that others than ministers and missionaries are leading people to Christ. They are being "won by one." This is not something new; it was the method used and encouraged by Jesus. How often He worked with individuals, and took time to lead them to God. He also instructed his disciples to go out two by two and tell people personally of the Good News.

Many people hesitate to try to lead others to God because they feel it is not in their place to do so, or that they are not specially qualified. Yet how often have we discovered that the sincere testimony by word and life of one individual has had more influence over another than the fine sermon of the preacher. He who has a personal experience of Christ, and lives in humble obedience to Him, and then shows a deep concern for the soul of another may make a much deeper impression than one with flowery phrases and eloquent oratory.

But perhaps the main reason why we do not practice lay-evangelism more is because we realize that we have not been very faithful witnesses ourselves. It is hard to convince another of the value of the Christian religion, if we are not absolutely certain of it ourselves. It is difficult to urge another to live by the standards of Jesus if we do not live by them ourselves.

The Church needs to put more emphasis on personal evangelism. It should encourage its members personally and in small groups to go out and speak to others about their relation to God. For we are all to be evangelists, we are all to proclaim the Gospel and endeavor to have others also enter into the joy of the Lord. This is our business, one and all. Evangelism begins with us, then must be expressed and proclaimed to others by word and life. "He that winneth souls is wise; and they that win many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever."

ATOMIC LOVE FOR ATOMIC BOMBS

IT IS WITH deep penitence that we think this month of the terrible destruction that our atomic bomb brought to Japan just five years ago. That event will remain a reproach to our country and to our churches. The stigma cannot be erased nor the thousands of needless dead restored to life.

But there is something we can do. We can arrange to release the atomic power of love not only over Hiroshima but throughout all of Japan. For love is still more powerful than any man-made bomb.

The time is ripe for mission work in Japan. The people of Japan are interested in the Christian religion as never before. Even General MacArthur is pleading for the churches to send many more missionaries. The doors have opened wide, but how long they will remain open in the light of the latest developments in the Far East it is difficult to say. We who are lovers of peace should move quickly in this hour of opportunity, that the islands of Japan may be flooded with the power of love, all else excelling.

Let us strengthen the hands of our Foreign Mission Board as it seeks guidance for the opening of new fields in Japan. It would seem an opportune time now that the doors to China seem to be closing. Let us read about Japan, pray for that needy country, and encourage our Mission Board to follow the leading of God in this matter. May we be ready to lend our full support in money and lives to this spiritual opportunity. The atomic love of Christ is more powerful than atomic bombs, but we Christians need to prove it. Lift up your eyes and behold the field, it is white already to harvest.

WHAT SHALL WE READ?

OUR BODY demands that we give it the proper food. But it is so easy to neglect the food for the mind and soul. Have you been noticing the interesting announcements about the "Every Home Plan?" (See page 545) It is a plan whereby our church papers, THE MENNONITE or DER BOTE, would be found in every Mennonite home of the General Conference. Can anyone think of a good reason why this should not be done? Look over the recent articles on this subject again and note the many advantages. Delegates to the General Conference at Freeman will have the privilege to make it possible for each home to receive the church paper. Consider well before rejecting this opportunity.

RELIGION AS A TEMPORARY CONVENIENCE

IT HAS BEEN aptly said that some people use religion as they do a bus; they use it as long as it is going their way. What a mistaken idea this is of religion, and yet we fear, a rather common one.

We talk about love and good-will to men, but on our trip to selfishness and power, we use religion only as long as it serves our purpose. We may laud the Sermon on the Mount but abandon it when we want to travel in another direction. We are ready to renounce war, until it is the popular thing to support it for a so-called noble cause. In other words we believe in the way of love as long as it is not really needed, but when put to the test, we believe more in guns. But for the true Christian this will never do. Religion is more than a temporary convenience; it is following Christ, wherever He leads, cost what it may.

The Call to Evangelism

by Harold Ratzlaff

"This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." I John 5:4

THIS verse contains two notes which are very characteristic of the entire New Testament. There is the conflict with the world on the one hand and the victory of faith on the other. In other words, the church is called to overcome the world by faith in Christ.

Thus, this verse poses a Call to Evangelism for it is only by giving witness to this faith that it will be in a position to overcome the world. In view of the present condition of the world, this Call to Evangelism is urgent. It is of equal urgency in the church on the mission field and in the church of the home land. In view of this urgency, it behooves the church to look well to the struggle, for it can overcome this world only by means of a strong, God-inspired program of evangelism entered into by faith. Yes, the call to evangelism comes to the church universally. It is to every member in the church. It is to every Christian.

There is a traditional conception in which the church is held to be the guardian and director of a well-integrated cultural complex which is sometimes, perhaps mistakenly, called "Christendom." In this way of thinking, Christendom becomes a protective shell of the church. The church tends to be resident only in the realm of Christian-influenced society, and direct intercourse between the church and the world is cut off. Consequently, the position of the church becomes a position of isolation instead of a dynamic life of overcoming the world. For instance, our own Mennonite church still shows many signs of its European background. This European heritage is good, but the Mennonite church must rise above this cultural pattern. Many Mennonite churches are surrounded by people of other ancestral and cultural backgrounds. Geographically speaking, those people are the natural recipients of these churches' ministries, but, no, the Mennonite church seemingly is bound to the one background, and people of other backgrounds are passed by. Somehow the Mennonite church must rise above this limitation and extend its ministry to all people regardless of their backgrounds or of their cultural patterns.

If the church continues this limited ministry, it will never overcome the world. The church must free itself of all entanglements with set cultural patterns and extend its evangelistic efforts to every segment of society at all cultural levels. The church can only overcome the world by evangelizing the world.

Therefore, we need a new vision of evangelism which will be Christ-centered. True evangelism has Christ as its subject. The goal is nothing less than that Christ establish His Kingdom.

In the New Testament, the aim of true evangelism is expressed in simple, yet rich and meaningful terms. In Acts 10:36 the preaching of the apostles is summarized as "Preaching peace through Jesus Christ." In II Corinthians 5:20 to 6:2, we find that we are to be ambassadors on behalf of Christ, working together with Him to proclaim that now is the day of salvation. Thus, it is clear that the goal of evangelism must be the extension of Christ's peace and of His sovereignty into all areas of life and into all segments of society. The church must move forward and bring Christ, in all of His fullness, to all people. We must break the shell of Christendom by which the ministry of the church is proscribed to a limited number or class of people, and we must extend the church so as to make it an instrument in God's hand by which He may establish His Kingdom in this world. Only thus can the world be overcome.

In this advance of evangelism, every Christian must be an evangelist. The gospel can not be monopolized. It must be shared if it is to be retained. Only by giving it to others can we maintain our own possession of it. Thus, evangelism becomes the very life of every Christian.

This life of evangelism can be expressed in our speech, in our fellowship, and in our service. We must preach it. We must live it in mutual communion and fellowship with all who know salvation in Christ, and we must express God's love in honest and humble service to our fellow human beings.

This Call to Evangelism must be answered in faith. In fact, it can only be answered in faith. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." Victory is not to be won in man's strength. This struggle, if it is to be victorious at all, must begin and end with God for He is our Eternal Refuge. It is God that provides the power by which to overcome the world, but it is our faith which lays hold of that power and brings the promise of victory within our grasp. "Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?" That is the gospel as it was first proclaimed. That is the gospel which overcomes the world. That is the gospel we are called to proclaim to this world of today. Yes, this Call to Evangelism is nothing less than a call to live our lives in the proclamation of the fact that Jesus is the Son of God, to live our lives in the fellowship of and mutual communion with all who believe that Jesus is the Son of God, and to live our lives in humble service by which to extend to all the benefits of the fact that Jesus is the Son of God. Evangelism, then, in all reality must be the life of every Christian.

SEEK 500 MISSIONARIES TO JAPAN

One of the boldest steps in contemporary foreign missions effort has been developed by the Far Eastern Gospel Crusade. Their proposed goal for the next five years: to send 500 new missionaries into the rural areas of Japan.

Some idea of boldness of the plan can be recognized when it is realized that there are only about 300 evangelical missionaries in Japan. The largest contingent of missionaries from a single mission now numbers only eighty.

The Crusade, an independent organization grew out of missionary projects carried on by Christian service men and women in the Far East during and following World War II. Christian Life

Our Father

by Paul N. Roth

THE Lord's Prayer is one of the most important and at the same time one of the most familiar portions of Scripture. Its use in the sick room and house of mourning always soothes and comforts those whose hearts and lives are disturbed by grief and pain. The Prayer is the one common denominator of all Christian churches. It contains seven petitions and is divided into two sections of three and four petitions each which follow each other in perfect order and sequence.

The first three petitions deal with God, His Fatherhood, His Holiness and His Kingdom. The last four deal with man and his needs; daily bread, forgiveness, exemption from temptation and deliverance from evil.

The Prayer is the foundation of social morals and contains the only true basis of brotherhood, and as a guide for personal life it gives us the order and relative worth of all human desires. The first petition states the nature and character of God, suggests that the Father is above earth's limitations, changes, and imperfections. Since He is "Our Father" the truth of human brotherhood is also taught.

Paul N. Roth
Pastor, Calvary Church
Barlow, Oregon
President
Pacific District Conference

Our Father is not a relentless and cruel tyrant or an Oriental despot dealing with grovelling slaves but the Perfect Father dealing with His sinful and needy children. The Jews held this truth dimly, the Greeks knew of a father of gods and men but Jesus came to show us what the Father is like for He said, "he that hath seen me hath seen the Father."

As the Father He is the Source of all life. All men are God's children because all draw their life from Him, were made in His image and are the objects of His love. There is another Fatherhood and Sonship which requires a spiritual birth from above. "Ye are the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ." 'To as many as received Him to them gave He the power to become the sons of God; which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." The birth into God's family is not by natural heredity nor by the strivings of human endeavor, neither can priests, preachers or organizations confer this new life upon others. The new life and relationship are ours through faith in God's Divine Son.

As the Father, He provides loving care for His children. We come to Him with confidence "for the Father knoweth what things we need." We must not shrink from telling Him our needs for He wants to provide those needs. How often we attempt to meet some emergency in our own strength, seek to solve some problems with our puny minds, never hearing the Father say, "I will meet your need, I will solve your problem, I will give you the power to do your work if you will but surrender to me.

As the Father in Heaven He is above earth's limitations and imperfections. His abode is calm and serene, removed from all the fret and anxiety of our disturbed world. Heaven is the storehouse of abundant Goodness, the Source of cleansing which results in inner calm, trust, joy, peace, power and health. As we come to Him we discover that "He gives good things to them that ask Him."

The truth of human brotherhood is also contained in this petition for in Christ there is neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, male nor female, chosen or unchosen races. He is our Peace and has "broken down the dividing wall of hostility, "creating in Himself one new man and through Himself giving us access in the Spirit to the Father." When we truly say, "Our Father," all our differences of race training, wealth and conceptions of Christianity must crumble. Let us hold this truth constantly before our mind and we find the explosive that destroys every man-made system that holds the human family in bondage.

NEW BOOKS AT CONFERENCE DISPLAY

THE Berne Witness, Berne, Indiana, printers of the new, revised edition of Smith's STORY OF THE MENNONITES, promises us that copies will be in hand of this new revision when you come to the Conference. We suggest now that you plan to devote some time to the very fine displays which all the various organizations of the conference will have and don't overlook the new publications such as this one.

The artist in Wichita is now designing the cover and the plates are being made which will clearly distinguish this new edition from all previous editions of Smith's classic in Mennonite history.

New chapters have been written, old information has been brought up to date, new chapters have been added for developments since the previous edition was put out and in every way our people will receive a very fine book. We invite your careful attention to this item on the conference display table.

MINISTER'S MANUAL NEARING COMPLETION

ALL PASTORS and ministers of our Conference will be delighted to know that the Minister's Manual is nearing completion. It is being printed by the Brethren Publishing House at Elgin, Illinois, under the sponsorship of the General Conference Board of Publication. The promise is that copies of this will be available not only for demonstration but for sale at the Freeman Conference.

Grace for Expanding Opportunities

by Walter H. Dyck

THE proposed revision of the constitution of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America is the product of many hours of careful study by a committee appointed for this purpose. It has been published and, we trust, carefully read.

The need for bringing the constitution up-to-date has been evident for some time. Due to a geographical extension of our borders it has been realized that the conference name (Article I) would have to be changed. The growth in scope of our work made the rewriting of Articles II and III advisable. The Charter, formerly included as Articles V to IX, has been appended with the Statement of Doctrine and a Suggested Procedure for Ministerial Ordination as Appendices 1-3. Articles J to XII in our present constitution, now combined into a proposed Article IV, remain the same in principle. It has been clarified by dividing it into two sections: (1) "The Basic Faith" and "The Separated Life." Supporting scripture references have been added as an aid to a study of our historical principles of faith and life. Under "The Separated Life" military organizations and other groups which "tend to compromise the loyalty of the Christian to the Lord and to His Church" have been added to membership in oath-bound secret societies. Congregations are urged seriously to strive to remain free of these evils.

The simplification of the organizational pattern as suggested under Article V also comes from the growth of the number of our undertakings. Many committees have been added by one board or another, or by the Executive Committee, which are not always properly related to each other nor represented for the interim between session on the Executive Committee. The enlarged Executive Committee from nine to eleven should help this need.

Each of the four major boards will find increasing benefits in this closer organization. We feel that once we have passed through the initial three years of adjustment we shall be happy about the change. We feel that about the same number of individuals will be active in these areas as heretofore, and that it will represent a more natural alignment of responsibility.

Let us rejoice that the Lord has permitted our fellowship of congregations to grow. May the Lord give us grace to face our expanding opportunities courageously and in a humble reliance on the Lord for His guidance.

We Have Much to Sell

by O. J. Sommer

TODAY many large institutions and industrial organizations issue regularly a publication known as a "house organ." Its main purpose and objective is to sponsor and to spread information relative to the merits of its goods and to secure customer acceptance of itself and its product. These publications display information in such an attractive manner that desire is created in the reader's mind. Wide distribution is given, and they are issued freely without cost to the public.

Our General Conference too, has much to offer—much to sell. The "One Hundred Per Cent" plan for the coverage of THE MENNONITE, now in use by many of the churches, and contemplated for all churches of the General Conference, has been employed by our Central Conference, for some four or five years. Our people are well pleased with the arrangement and would be very reluctant to step back to the individual subscription plan. A recent survey in one of our auxiliary groups showed that not only was every one that was present, a member of a family into which the official publication, The Christian Evangel, was a regular visitor, but each one also stated that they read the articles with interest. This complete coverage of our families gives opportunity to acquaint everyone with the workings of the various functions of the Conference.

The procedure that has been successfully used in bringing about the "One Hundred Per Cent" plan coverage in our Central Conference these past years is quite simple. At the annual conference delegate meeting sufficient appropriations are voted to make possible the direct mailing to each family in the Conference, a copy of The Christian Evangel. This appropriation is then included with those made for all other purposes, and all are prorated back to each church according to their recorded membership. So far the individual assessment for all appropriations, per person, in the church, has been considerable less than one dollar. Profits arising from the book and supply department are plowed back into the Conference treasury and assist in lightening the needed appropriation.

Under the individual plan many of our young folks would not subscribe for the official organ. This was especially true of such young couples where one party had not been reared amid Mennonite influences. Many such have been lost to our church because of lack of knowledge of the value of our comprehensive coverage of the principles of the Great Commission. It is among our young folks that we look for leadership of the future. They need to be kept fully informed of our every activity. The poet Bacon said "Reading maketh a ready man".

Our heritage of centuries must be preserved. The faith of our fathers must be kept aflame. Our institutions need to be strengthened. The sacredness of the home needs to be stressed more and more in our day. In church worship and attendance we should continue as an example. The religious life of each individual needs continual refinement. Our Mennonite way of life dare not be "hid under the bushel." We have much to sell! Information creates interest. Interest leads to action.

Improving the House of Worship

by J. W. Fretz

WHEN driving through the historic sections of southeastern Pennsylvania, one is frequently reminded that he is in the land of the Plain People, the Quakers, the Brethren, the Mennonites. A vivid reminder of this fact is the sight of the numerous houses of worship, commonly called meeting houses. They are unmistakenly recognized as the centers of worship of the Plain People because they are built according to a principle. It is the principle of Christian simplicity. Most of them can claim a modest beauty as they are nestled in groves of tall, old elms, oaks, hickories, and maples. Invariably one finds cemeteries adjacent to the buildings, thus suggesting a binding tie between past and present and reminding worshippers of their abiding resting place in the future.

The point of this article is that all churches should be built according to a religious principle. This is a church building-decade. Thousands of new churches are being built and many more thousands remodeled. In the General Conference alone a rough count by the Headquarters office reveals that within the year twelve new churches are being built and eighteen others remodeled. All of these churches, Mennonite and non-Mennonite alike, are being built according to a plan but not necessarily according to a principle. Many churches are built like dwelling houses, clothing and cars, according to styles. The architects are the style-masters in building as the designers are the stylists in clothing and cars. Styles are temporary fashions. They have their moments of popularity and then disappear to make way for newer creations. They are not being built according to abiding religious principles.

Among Mennonites there is a great diversity of styles of church buildings. The diversity is, of course, the result of each congregation building or remodeling to suit its own needs and satisfy its own tastes. Few churches in the past employed architects and if they had, there is no assurance of having built according to a more uniform plan or according to a religious principle. As a result one finds a great assortment of types, shapes, and appearances of Mennonite houses of worship. Variety within certain limits is in itself not necessarily bad, but the present situation suggests confusion and unawareness as to the symbolic significance of church buildings. There are churches with military fortress-like towers, cathedral-like spires, Grecian pillars, ornamental arches, and a host of additional artistic frills and meaningless decorations that were intended to spell beauty, and there are churches with absolutely no towers, steeples, stained glass windows, or ornamentation of any kind reflecting a severe plainness to the point of austerity. Many of these have not been built with an eye toward symbolizing characteristic Mennonite principles.

What Shall We Do?

In looking to the future, Mennonites could well afford to give more attention to the matter of the appearance of their houses of worship. The words of Haggai are appropriate: "Is it time for you yourselves to live in paneled houses while God's House lies waste?" It is important to remember that a church building is a symbol as well as a place of meeting. A symbol is an object that stands for something. It is the visible sign of an idea, such as the picture of a dove being a symbol of peace.

There ought to be something in Mennonite church architecture that reflects those Christian ideals which the Mennonite Church has especially stressed and professed. Christian churches should be so constructed and preserved that when people look at them they see a steadiness and permanence that suggests the eternal in Christ; they should see a sturdiness in the building that suggests the strength of Christ; they should see a plainness in the building that suggests the genuineness and sincerity of our Lord; they should see a house of worship amid the natural beauty of trees, shrubs, flowers, and birds which reflects the natural beauty and attractiveness of the character of Jesus. Mennonite churches above all should be completely free from the kind of ornamentation that reflects sophistication, arrogance, pride, ornateness, and vanity. They should strongly suggest simplicity, sturdiness of character, serenity, and peace. The House of God must bid a warm welcome by its appearance to the poor, the humble, and the lowly as well as to the rich, the esteemed, and the cultured.

One step in the direction of uniformity of purpose and ideal in the matter of church architecture would be the creation of a Conference committee on architecture. Such a committee could serve as a continuous study committee of the problem; it could gather valuable information on the subject and in the course of time become the repository for factual data, ideas, and experiences on the entire matter of Mennonite church architecture. Individual congregations then would at least have a consulting body within their own denomination to which they could go in case they face the necessity of remodeling or rebuilding. Such a committee could be especially valuable to small new churches which have had no experience with these matters and often no personnel with skills and training with which to do a good job of planning.

Another step in the direction of getting Mennonite churches to build according to religious principle is for congregations contemplating a building program to appoint a planning committee well in advance of any contemplated building date. Such a committee is a fact-finding or study committee. It would want to study church architecture in the light of Mennonite history and doctrine; it would want to discern good types from poor types of architecture. It should be the resource agency in the congregation which provides information to the members on matters pertaining to proper architecture and symbolism for the new house of worship. Too often congregations elect one committee to do the planning and the building. This is generally inadvisable since often those who know a great deal about planning know nothing of building and those skilled in the build-

Young Japan

Japan is an old country. When our nation was born 175 years ago, Japan had already reached the ripe old age of 2,300 years. And yet just now there is that in Japan which is young.

Young is Japan's new outlook on the military. For a long time she had been the slave of her militarists—slaves mentally, economically, socially, and politically. That old militaristic regime is no more. Young Japan has an almost terrifying terror of war. One can sense the underlying current of fear as one is asked the question, "Do you think the cold war will turn into a real war?" Ah, if young Japan could but learn to know the Prince of Peace!

New is Japan's present outlook on religion. One was largely born into his religion. One's religion was good because one's ancestors had bowed the knees to its altars. And above all loomed the semireligious, superpatriotic deification of the emperor. But now that Emperor Hirohito is just a man (and reportedly enjoying his humanity), much of Japan's religious attachment is at loose ends. Buddhism is coldly formal. Japan feels the void that the departure from enthusiastic religio-patriotic devotion has left.

Not old is Japan's indiscriminate imitating of all that is Western. And yet today cheap American music blares its way out of nearly every radio and record shop. American cigarettes and liquors are greatly in demand. To speak English is an accomplishment which every young person wishes to claim. To study in America is the zenith of every student's ambition. Japan has seen the glitter from across the Pacific and has not yet tried to separate the tinsel from the genuine.

Above all, new in Japan is the perennial freshness of her youth—youth vibrant with life and development, seeking, asking, knocking. Japanese youth is persistently energetic. Nowhere in the writer's limited observation has he seen anything like their eagerness to learn. They will put in ten-hour working days and then perhaps take an hour's trip by bicycle, train, and tramcar to attend a one- or two-hour unaccredited course in English or English Bible. Rapt attention indicates both a head and a soul hunger.

But of course, her seeking young people are not the only factor in Japan. Already there are signs that the old controlling interests in Japan are anxious to come to the fore again. Buddhism is not ready to relinquish the place of respect it once enjoyed in the nation's intellectual life. A remnant of Shintoism is again striving to rebuild a political favor and prestige it once possessed. Japanese militarism lies unsleeping in a restless grave. Just yesterday Prime Minister Yoshida made a statement before the Japanese Diet which was an echo of General McArthur's declaration earlier this week that Japan's new constitution did not make it impossible for Japan to rearm though that was clearly in the mind of those who framed it—at least so we had been led to believe. Both McArthur and Yoshida intimated that Japan should be rearmed. Though there are many in Japan who object to this, the door is again opened for modified miltarism. And so there is much of the old that young Japan has still to do with. Though one would not like to see them discard all that is old and tried, we had all hoped that some of these suppressing factors would be greatly broken.

For young, seeking Japan the age-old vigorous freshness and quickening energy of the Gospel message can be the only satisfying answer. Communism is making its false bid for the new Japan and it is quite evident that many are selling out to it. But we who know and possess the truth dare not permit falsehood to go unchallenged. Young Japan must have the Truth. She must become acquainted with the One who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life. It is exactly these three fundamentals for which youth of all ages have striven. Young Japan is no exception. It can—it must be the happy lot of this generation to bring to this seeking young Japan, the Way, the Truth and the Life.—Carl Beck in Gospel Herald

"Go Quickly and tell"

Chautauqua, N. Y.—A session of the Institute of World Missions here was told that recent developments in Japan make it imperative that Americans get on quickly with the task of leading the Japanese toward a Christian and democratic way of life.

This opinion was expressed by Thoburn T. Brumbaugh, associate secretary of the Division of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Church, who has spent seventeen years as a missionary in Japan.

Among the developments cited by Brumbaugh were:

(1) The Japanese parliamentary election earlier this year showed a trend away from mild economic and social reforms toward the older conservative leadership on the one hand, and toward aggressive Socialist and Communist representation on the other.

(2) The repatriation of thousands of Japanese soldiers captured by the Russians in Manchuria, North China, and Korea and held until recently in Siberia under Communist tutelage.

Brumbaugh expressed hope, however, in the longstanding admiration of the Japanese for American methods and ideas, in their distrust of Russian and some other European nations, and in their view of "democracy as a way congenial to the best in their own history and culture."

He said Japan is seeking the surest possible way to avoid another war, and "if and as the Christian and democratic way of life holds out the greatest assurances to this end, we can be certain of Japan's vital interest in learning 'what they must do to be saved.' "

Brumbaugh is chairman of the program committee of the Institute of World Missions which is sponsored jointly by the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, the Home Missions Council of North America, and the United Council of Church Women.—Religious News Service.

DEDICATION OF THE COMMUNITY CHAPEL SWEET HOME, OREGON

AND THIS stone, which I have set for a pillar, shall be God's house: and of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee." Gen. 28:22

It was with praise to our Heavenly Father when a group of ministers of the Pacific District Conference and a number of lay people met on June 13 at 7:30 p.m. to dedicate the Sweet Home Community Chapel to the worship of God and to the preaching of His glorious gospel. At the 1949 session of our conference at Upland, California, it was decided to build a chapel at Sweet Home, Oregon, where four months before a work had begun under the faithful leadership of Brother and Sister Alfred J. Schwartz. The Laymen's organization of the district conference had agreed to pay for the materials that it would take to build the chapel. The Lord blessed the faithful efforts of our brethren so that it could be dedicated free of any indebtedness.

Henry Dalke led the congregation in a song service after which W. A. Regier of Pratum, Oregon, read the Scripture and P. D. Unruh of Colfax, Washington, and Vice President of the Pacific District Conference led in prayer. Brother Elmer Widmer of Albany, Oregon and Chairman of the Building Committee gave a historical review of the project. Paul N. Roth of Canby, Oregon and Conference President and W. Cooksley, Chairman of the Sweet Home Ministerial Association brought greetings. The dedicatory sermon was preached by H. N. Harder Aberdeen, Idaho and Secretary of the Evangelization Committee. He used for his subject the sermon title "Dedicated unto God" based on Genesis 28:22. The dedication ceremony and prayer was in charge of W. Harley King, Paso Robles, California, and Chairman of the Evangelization Committee.

The evening of fellowship was enjoyed by all and the presence of God was felt by all present. May this chapel stand there as an expression of our faith that by the grace of God all who enter this sanctuary will be drawn closer to Him and souls who have not found Him as their Savior may experience the marvelous saving grace of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.—H. N. Harder

FARMING AND MISSIONS

SAM HIGGINBOTTOM—FARMER, An Autobiography, Scribners, Price $3.00, pp. 226.

REVIEWING an autobiography of a man whom one personally knows and with whose work one is fairly well acquainted, is sheer joy. The Allahabad (India) Agricultural Institute is about 400 miles distant from our own mission field: and it is between us and Landour, where the school is located where missionaries' children attend. So when we took our children to school we often stopped at the Agricultural Institute for a brief visit in the friendly Higginbottom home, or with other teachers at the institute.

The above book tells of Dr. Higginbottom's life pilgrimage. Born and reared on a farm in Walse, England, in a home where the boy early became acquainted with the vicissitudes of life. Poverty and disappointments alternated with modest fortune and well-being. His older brother had migrated to America, so Sam was also drawn to the new world. In time he too came to America as a student and entered D. L. Moody's school at Mt. Hermon. Under Moody's influence the urge came to be a missionary. After finishing the Mt. Herman school he entered Princeton, where he finished college. Then to India. His first impressions of India are vividly described; and any new missionary can feel with him, and an old missionary can re-live his own experience.

In India he early met with disappointments. He had planned to work in a village area with new Christians. Instead he was asked to teach economics in a Christian college at Allahabad (see p. 66). Later he saw that God had put him into this situation, because the teaching of economics brought him face to face with India's poverty (see pp. 78-79, 53-4, 75, 102, 138-39, etc.). Dealing with this appalling poverty he heard the voice of Jesus say: "Sam Higginbottom, you give them food," and: "I was hungry and you gave me to eat." Further, he recalled that D. L. Moody had often said: "First feed the hungry man, then preach to him." (see pp. 80, 167, etc.). When his first furlough was due, he returned to America, and reported on India's all around need, spiritual and material. His church (Presbyterian) responded. Funds were gathered. Land was bought in India. After studying more agriculture he returned to India and started the Allahabad Agricultural Institute in 1910. This institute trains young men on college level in agriculture, and young women in Home Economics. One of our own young man has graduated there, and another one is a student there at this time.

Dr. Higginbottom has sometimes been accused of just being a materialist, and directing young Indian students into materialism. Reading this book and also knowing the man personally certainly gives a person a different impression. To help the hungry to get food is as important as to heal the body medically. One is as important as the other in building the church of Christ.

The book gives very much insight into conditions and customs and the mental slavery in India (see pp. 121-22, 148-19, 153, 183, 215, etc.). This book should be read by all who have any interest in missions or in other nations.

The book also has a chapter on Mahatma Gandhi, his mind and his religious views. This chapter has unique value in itself. I would urge every reader of THE MENNONITE to read this book. As Mennonites we have a warm spot in our hearts for agriculture. Here is a book that shows what part agriculture can have and should have in the whole mission enterprise.—John Thiessen.

Keep Draft Boards Notified

It should be noted that it is the registrant's obligation to notify the Local Board of any change in address, or change in marital, occupational or other status since registration.

There are Service Opportunities

More young people may wish to enter service opportunities offered by the church, particularly as a witness in this time of "wars and rumors of wars." A variety of significant M.C.C. projects continue as a witness to the way of peace and Christian service, in which a considerable number of additional persons could be used to good advantage.

Among the people needed are secretaries, several nurses, a unit matron, an accountant, a teacher with German language ability; attendants, nurses and an office worker for M.C.C. Mental Hospitals, and other workers. Some of these may be on either Voluntary Service or allowance basis.

Persons feeling a call to serve, whether applying for a specific opening, or desiring to offer themselves for work wherever needed, should write to the Personnel Department, M.C.C., Akron, Pa.

Group Discusses Draft Situation

On July 21 members of the Peace Section Executive Committee, several M.C.C. staff members and others met to study and evaluate the present situation; to take counsel on future actions; and to consider what counsel should be given to young men at this time.

An informational letter is being sent to the pastor of each Mennonite congregation. Young men are encouraged to seek counsel from their pastors; information and assistance is also available from the Peace Section. Frequent releases will appear in regular church periodicals.

Peace Conference to be Held

Plans have been made by the Peace Section for a meeting to be held Nov. 9-12 at Winona Lake, Indiana, to discuss various vital subjects related to our peace witness to the world and to the church at large. Several study papers are to be written in preparation for the conference. Delegates are being chosen by each constituent Mennonite and Brethren in Christ group.

French Mennonite CO in Prison

At present there is no recognition for the position of CO's in France. Jean Widmer, a member of the Mennonite congregation of Montbeliard, was recently called for military service. Since he was unable for conscience sake to perform duties within the armed forces, he was arrested, and tried for disobedience; since he appeared to the judge to be sincere, was given a suspended sentence. However, his trial was that for the "disobedient" act and not for holding the position of CO, so he would simply be taken back into the army again where he would have to refuse again, be tried again, etc. In the meantime Jean has taken the step of refusing the army uniform. He needs the prayers of the brotherhood that he may stand firmly and witness for his convictions.

New Project in Formosa

A Christian Children's Home project is being planned on the island of Formosa. The China Children's Fund organization is primarily interested in the project and is prepared to provide the financial support. Use of a suitable house has been secured and tentative plans made for opening of the Home in August, to serve up to 50 orphan children.

Summary of Relief Shipments

Shipments of relief materials from the United States and Canada, valued at a total of $255,257.42, leaving port during May and June included:

To Paraguay: 17 tons clothing and bedding; 5 tons of lathes and attachments, and one refrigerator; 14 tons miscellaneous tools and equipment; 8 cream separators.

To Germany: 45 tons clothing, bedding, shoes, soap; 73 tons mixed foods; 14 tons dried eggs; 43 tons powdered milk; 55 tons raisins. To Austria: 3 tons dried eggs; 6 tons powdered milk; 4 tons raisins. To Belgium: 4 tons powdered milk. To France: 10 tons powdered milk; 1 ton raisins. To Java: one refrigerator.

report be of the progress made? How has the work in China developed? What will they report concerning the possibility of mission work in Japan? How will the world situation of today affect our entire mission program?

The report of our Emergency Relief Board, as they try to minister to the sufferers of war with spiritual and material help and resettle some of our own people, will interest all of us. Its future program must have our careful evaluation as the clouds of war rise again on the horizon.

The Board of Publication, believing that an informed church will be a responsive church, has a plan to present which will bring our conference papers into every conference home. This recommendation will need our careful evaluation during this conference session.

The Executive Committee has a number of recommendations concerning our conference constitution and organization to which we will all want to give careful thought.

The other boards and committees also will have their special problems to present and certainly we have a large responsibility in giving proper guidance and direction to those in responsible conference positions in order that they may know the wish of the conference in the many important matters which will come up for consideration.

The conference session at Freeman will not only be a busy session but it will be an important one. Its decisions for our conference will be far reaching.

Therefore, I would like to say, "I will see you at Freeman." May we together enjoy hours of good fellowship, spiritual refreshing, and may we together also carefully, and prayerfully evaluate the many matters which will be presented and seek to find God's leading in the important affairs of our conference.

—H. J. Andres

Early risers in New York City and vicinity can hear the Bible read every Sunday morning, starting at seven o'clock. This new program, sponsored jointly by the American Bible Society and Station WNEW presents a half-hour continuous reading of the Bible, which was begun with the Book of Genesis. The Talking Book Records, which the Bible Society has prepared for the use of the blind, are being used. The reading is by Alexander Scourby. It is expected that it will take a period of three years to complete the reading of the entire Bible.—American Lutheran

Jottings

PACIFIC DISTRICT

—Menno Church, Lind, Washington: The corner stone for the church was laid on July 23rd, after the Sunday School hour. E. J. Miller, president of Freeman College and former pastor of our church, gave the message taken from Phil. 2:15. Thoughts of his message were: God first, others second, ourselves third. A. J. Weber, contractor, and Olive Schrag, a deacon, handled and laid the box which contained a Bible, the history of the church written by P. C. Jantz, the annual church report of 1949, two church bulletins, a Ritszville Journal Times, and The Mennonite Weekly announcing the ground-breaking ceremony.

Fourteen members of the church attended the Pacific District Conference at Dallas, Oregon, June 14-18. At an evening meeting July 23rd Miss Arlene Sither presented to our congregation the mental hospital project; namely, Kings View Homes, now in process of construction near Reedley, California.—Mrs. C. C. Claassen, Corr.

NORTHERN DISTRICT

—Bethel Church, Mountain Lake, Minn.: On Sunday afternoon, July 9, Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Penner joyfully celebrated their golden wedding anniversary with their children and grandchildren, all of which were present with the exception of one grandson. Also present were some 500 relatives and friends. The son, Albert Penner, pastor of Broadway Tabernacle, New York City, had charge of the program which was presented by the children and grandchildren. Approximately twenty-five persons who attended the wedding fifty years ago were also present.

WESTERN DISTRICT

—Bethel College; North Newton, Kansas: The skeleton of the third floor of the library has been poured, completing the concrete work on this building. The next stage of construction will be the outside shell and the roof. The large classroom in the basement of the Science Hall which formerly housed the press, is now being completed making available a classroom seating at least 100 students.

Menno Stucky, Moundridge, is joining the faculty as instructor in farm shop and welding. Mr. Stucky received his B. S. degree in Industrial Arts from McPherson College 1948, and has taught in the Mt. Hope High School the past two years. While at Mt. Hope he has also taken work at the University of Wichita Night School and has also done graduate work at Oregon State College, Corvallis, Oregon. Mr. Stucky is a brother of N. Paul Stucky, physics instructor here.

—Lorraine Avenue Church, Wichita, Kansas: We concluded a two-week's Vacation Bible School with a program July 2. There were 70 pupils enrolled. Assisting the local workers were three members of the General Conference Youth Team. Forty-two of the pupils were from the church, twenty-eight from the neighborhood. Transportation was provided to bring our children from all parts of the community. Offerings brought by children and parents at the closing program ($45) will be used in part to pack several Christmas bundles.

The Education Committee is now organizing its staff for our Week-day Bible School which extends from September through May, one morning each week. Tenative plans are made for a child study class to be held in our church sponsored by the P. T. A. of the Sunnyside School in October and November. The Congregation voted on July 16 to go ahead on the completion of our much-needed sanctuary. Already $7,305 of the estimated $8,800 needed has been subscribed..

—Zion Church, Elbing, Kansas: Our annual evangelistic services were conducted by Erland Waltner, May 31-June 7. A Joint Christian Endeavor program of the Burns, Grace Hill, and Zion Societies was held in our church on June 18. Helen Regier of this church, taught Vacation Bible School at several of our Arizona mission stations this summer under the auspices of the General Conference Voluntary Service program. July 9th this congregation held a reception for Pastor and Mrs. H. J. Dyck, recently returned from a term of service in Germany under the MCC. Five young people were added to the church by baptism July 16.—Louis A. Janzen, Corr.

—Gnadenberg Church, Newton, Kansas: July 16 the Gnadenberg Church held its annual picnic on the church lawn. A group from Moundridge presented a short musical program followed by a report by Doreen Harms from this church, who has worked at MCC Headquarters in Akron for a number of years. Sister Lena Mae from the Bethel Deaconess Hospital presented the deaconess cause to us on July 30th.—Mrs. Herbert Schmidt, Corr.

—Herold Church, Bessie Oklahoma: Baptismal services were held on July 16; there were six candidates. Mrs. Elisabeth Flaming and Mrs. Ben Horn are still on the sick list though the latter is reported to be improving. Plans are being made for Childrens' Day to be held August 15. Reports are that the fields are green with volunteer wheat. We have had much rain during July so the fields are too wet for plowing.—Mrs. H. B. Schmidt, Corr.

MIDDLE DISTRICT

—First Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: July 23rd, Miss Erma Birky from Mukedi Station in Africa was our speaker for the morning service and on July 30th we welcomed our pastor, A. J. Neuenschwander, back to his pulpit after a 6,000 mile trip to the west coast. Charles Sprunger, son of our Missionary Vernon Sprunger, also gave us some highlights from Africa and his aims in attending school here in the states. —George McBride, Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Lehman are the parents of a baby girl, Cynthia Ann, who made her arrival on July 25. Miss Joy Brand of the Trail Evangelical and Reformed Church and Mr. Richard Gerber of this church were united in marriage Sunday, July 30. Both are high school instructors and will live in Smithville. Twenty-one persons attended the Golden Rule Sunday School Class social where Mr. and Mrs. Elam Gerber showed their movies taken on a recent trip to Florida. The Willing Workers Class held their annual picnic supper July 23, followed by a vesper service on the parsonage lawn, to which all Christian Endeavorers were invited. Carrying out the plan of the Christian Endeavor program committee of spending one Sunday evening per quarter on missions, China was featured July 30 with the showing of the dramatic film, "My Name Is Han."—Mrs. Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

MARY MAGDALENA SCHMUTZ, R. R., Sedgwick, Kansas, housewife, a member of the First Church at Halstead, Kansas, was born April 1, 1866 and died June 10, 1950.

WILLIAM HENRY ESSER, Lumberville, Pennsylvania, born July 6, 1863, a member of the Deep Run Congregation, Deep Run, Pennsylvania, died July 14, 1950.

Lay Cornerstone for Camp, July 4, 1950

On July 4, 1950, a group of about 300 people gathered at the Central and Middle District camp grounds on Shavehead Lake in Southern Michigan to lay a cornerstone and dedicate the new camp grounds purchased May 18, 1950. This climaxed several years of search for a suitable site in the lake region of Indiana and Michigan. Because of prices and the many cottages on most lakes, the search was a most difficult one finally culminating in the finding of a site on an undeveloped lake of 300 acres located twenty miles north of Goshen, Indiana. Because they were eager for such a camp, the owners have been very gracious and have quoted a very reasonable price of $3,500 for forty acres of lake front property.

This summer, Mr. Olen Yoder of Middlebury, Indiana has been serving as work supervisor and is responsible for the development of the site. Cabins are the first structures to be put up and churches have accepted cabins as their projects in the development of the site. Each cabin will have a fireplace and will house eight persons. It will be a simple but well built structure adequate to meet the demands of old and young. The cabins are to be built on a hill thirty feet above the lake with an appropriate view for each cabin toward the lake.

Miss Carol Hooley of Topeka, Indiana is living in a house trailer on the site and is serving as dietician and matron for the workers. Volunteers from churches are welcome to come and assist in construction work. Each church that has a cabin project is responsible for the construction of their cabin. Numerous other tasks are being done such as cleaning brush, the construction of a road, pouring footings and concrete floors for the cabins. By the summer's end ten cabins will be constructed. It is hoped also to have sanitary facilities and plumbing installed. The committee hopes to have the camp far enough along so that it can be used for retreats next year.

The beginning of the Central-Middle District Conference Camp grounds is marked with the laying of a cornerstone dedicating the camp "To the Glory of God." Ernest Bohn, pastor of Grace Church, Pandora, Ohio, and Harvey Nunemaker, pastor of Silver Street Church, Goshen, Indiana, representing each District, lay the stone.

What Some People Say

AUSTIN R. KEISER, director of the first retreat at Bluffton College in 1925, now of Greenwich, Ohio. Keiser tells of the early beginnings of retreats: "In the Freeman, South Dakota General Conference (1923), there was begun considerable thinking and planning in respect to Young People's work. I think it was at that time that I became President of our General Conference Young People's Union, and not too long thereafter I was asked to edit two pages of THE MENNONITE as a Y.P. Department. It was at that time that we were thinking of the value of a Y.P. Conference. There was quite a bit of discussion as to whether it should be called a "retreat," some thinking that meant going backwards but we borrowed it from the Roman Catholic Church as a time to draw apart to think together on important problems and so that name has held. From the beginning there was very good cooperation from almost all quarters. We had it at Bluffton College for the first few years then it was felt that it might be better to have it some place where we would be a bit more isolated and then moved to Shipshewana."

WILLIAM WEAVER, Danvers, Illinois, pastor of the North Danvers church and on the faculty of the first retreat in 1925: "The All-Mennonite Retreat started in the Spring of 1925 (400th anniversary of the birth of the Mennonite church). There was a Christian Workers Conference at Bluffton in January. The special feature was 'Our Young People.' I was asked to speak on the topic, 'What We Can Do for Our Young People.' After the service, A. R. Keiser came to me and asked what definite thing we could do. We talked it over and decided to meet in the near future and ask Vernon Smucker to meet with us representing the Old Mennonite Young People. So we were the first committee to arrange for a retreat. S. K. Mosiman offered us the facilities of the college. We arranged for a nine-day retreat, August 9-16, 1925. This first retreat represented five Mennonite groups.

"Sixty-three young people attended this first retreat. The second retreat was held at Bluffton, August 7-15, 1926. There were 90 at this retreat. Thus was launched the movement of the Mennonite Young People's Retreat. I am happy I had a small part in this great work. We moved the Retreat from Bluffton to Shipshewana Lake around 1932.

"Although perhaps because of age I am not as actively engaged in the retreat movement as I once was, my heart is still in it. May the establishment of the retreat at Shavehead Lake be a great step forward in the progress of this worthy movement. It is definitely true after these twenty-five years that Jesus said, 'Other men labored, and ye are entered into their labors.' John 4:38."

GORDON M. LIECHTY, Berne, Indiana business man and member of the Camp Committee which serves as the trustees of the camp site for the Central and Middle District Conferences:—"I am gratified by the sympathetic interest shown by many in this project. It holds wonderful potentialities for the people of our Mennonite fellowship. Once facilities belonging exclusively to us are available, I am sure many groups beyond the children and young people will want to use the camp. Through the fellowship such group meetings afford, and through the stimulating and inspiring leadership usually present, many of us will find our spiritual stature growing, and our relationship to the Lord more vital and intimate. Indeed only as the camp supplies that stimulus, and makes those who attend more Christlike will the

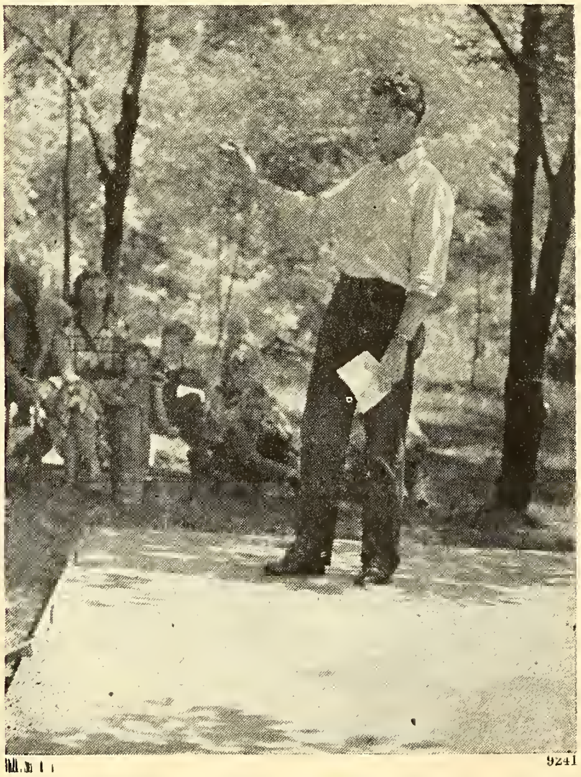
A Camp in the Program of the Conference

THIS MORNING's ceremony is a solemn and supreme moment in the life of our churches. Because, with the laying of this stone, a twenty-five year old institution of our churches is finding a home. It was twenty-five years ago this coming August when one of the first retreats in the General Conference was held at Bluffton College. For twenty-five years our church retreats were held in rented quarters, there was no home for them that could be called our own. For twenty-five years our retreats have languished doing only a part of the work that they should have been doing—because their rented quarters were cramped so far as available time was concerned. So, today we are observing a supreme moment in the life of our churches as our retreats find a camp of their own.

One of the first founders of our retreats, William Weaver, pastor of Danvers, Illinois has written to say, "I am not as actively engaged in the retreat movement as I once was, but my heart is still in it. May the establishment of the retreat at Shavehead Lake be a great step forward in the progress of this worthy movement." And then he adds, "It is definitely true after these 25 years what Jesus said, 'Other men labored, and ye are entered into their labors.'" John 4:38. With Brother Weaver, I look upon this as a great step forward for our retreats, and for the people of our churches.



Marvin Dirks of Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago, leads the assembled group in singing while standing on the first concrete slab of a future cabin.

This camp is being planned so that it will be usable by all ages in the church. The cabins are designed so that they will comfortably accommodate young and old. The camp lay-out is designed so that young and old will find it an inspiration. That has a significance all in itself. For, with the establishment of this camp, we will have a conference wide institution, a place of repair, which can and will be used by all ages. And this will be the one institution of our churches that will be so used. We have a hospital, an old people's home, a seminary, a college, and home and foreign missions and relief. These labors are all worthy and necessary. We do not wish to detract from them at all. We hope that they will be supported because of the camp. All the institutions we have are for the use of very special groups. The seminary prepares missionaries and preachers for their tasks. The college is for a specific age group in our churches. The old peoples home is for the aged. The hospital is for the sick. The missions are for the unsaved. Nowhere do we have a place to which all ages and all groups can go for spiritual repair. This camp is being designed and planned to serve that vital role.

In the Bible, one of the outstanding things about the great men of the Bible was how they retreated to a place of quiet to rest a while. "Come ye apart and rest awhile" Jesus said. And that is what Jesus did. How oft you find these great spiritual giants of old withdrawing into the wilderness, on the mountain top, apart and there gaining their vision of God. Story after story could be told of that experience as the experience of the ancients. Why did Jesus withdraw so often to pray? Why did Paul after his Damascus experience withdraw for a time to become prepared for his task?

In our hurried day, one begins to wonder whether we know how to withdraw and rest awhile, whether we know how to spend a season in God's very presence and restore ourselves for our tasks. Jesus went down to the temple at the age of twelve as their custom was. That was the vacation the ancient Hebrews took—to the temple to pray. Pilgrimages were taken as vacations to shrines there to worship and gain spiritual strength for the tasks ahead. We today take vacations that are much more fevered and without much spiritual motive as our way of gaining restoration.

This camp is being dedicated today to the glory of God as a place of repair. It is being dedicated for the use of all groups and ages in the church. I can see a camp like this used by Sunday School teachers and officers. Here they can get together and work out their problems and gain that spiritual depth they need to serve as leaders. I can see this camp used by mission groups, men's brotherhoods, church officers, ministers, Sunday School classes, special age groups, and churches. It can be used by them for spiritual repair—a place to which they may come and rest awhile. I can see a chapel on yonder hill as a silent symbol of Almighty God's presence nigh unto each and all. I can see this high hill as a place of decision where youth make commitments to God and old men and women dream dreams until this truly becomes holy ground for our churches.

It is such a dream that has motivated the committee in seeking a site such as this. It is such an aspiration that inspires us to hope that this camp may become a place of repair for the whole church. To that great purpose we dedicate it to the glory of God.

Mission Church at Comins Supplies Cabin Material

MEMBERS of the Comins, Michigan church have supplied the camp with ten cabins at a very reasonable cost. The men at Comins worked the material into planks ready-cut for construction and hauled the cabins to the site at Shavehead Lake, about 300 miles. The cabins will have a plank wall almost two inches thick of knotty pine. The Comins church supplied the walls, window frames, door frames and doors, everything excepting the roof. This was made available to the Camp at a saving of about $200 per cabin. Joe Atherton, pastor of the Comins church, was the point of contact for this project. This has been a major contribution to the camp.

The Comins church has long been a mission of the Central District and it is particularly significant that this church has made such a distinctive contribution to the life of the whole District. It is particularly because of this that the cabins from Comins are so much appreciated.

ing trade may know nothing about Mennonite doctrines, religious symbolism, and historic Mennonite principles. Planning and study committees elected or appointed well in advance of the building date can do much to bring unity into the minds of the members with regard to building designs and details when once that stage is reached.

Above all, a new church must be a house of worship with the emphasis on worship. New churches must never be mistaken, either by the members or nonmembers, for show places. Some congregations, like individuals and families, may try to outdo their neighbors. There can be entirely too much emphasis on the aesthetic to the neglect of the inner spiritual experience of the individual person. A house of worship is after all only a means to an end. It is the place where individually and collectively we may seek to commune with God. No aspect of the exterior or interior arrangement of the church building should detract from this fundamental objective. Maurice Hindus writes a warning on this point when he describes his native Russian Orthodox Church. Let us ponder these words carefully. "Our church has striven after external gorgeousness at the expense of inner virtue; after showy splendor at the cost of spiritual perfection. It acquired pomp, power, and riches but lost its soul." Let us build our churches so that they reflect as far as possible the religious principles which we preach and profess.

whole project be justified. If the people of all our churches will earnestly and continually pray that the spirit of God may guide the establishment of the camp, and the activities planned from year to year, there is no doubt its mission will be fulfilled."

R. L. Hartzler, Bloomington, Illinois, executive secretary of the Central District Conference. "The purchase of our own camp ground crystalizes a feeling and promises the realization of a hope which some of us have cherished for some years. That feeling is that the retreats which through the years have been held for young people and intermediates have been a potent factor in rallying our youth for Christ and the Church, but that with our own ground and the consequent opportunity to provide for various age groups at separate times an even greater work could be done. Now we envision that idea coming into its own, and flowering forth in material form in a ground of our own.

"Accompanying this feeling has been the further one that numerous other groups among our church constituency might well, and should have opportunity to spend time in fellowship and conference together regarding their common aspirations and problems in this kind of world. Who of us having tried to cope with our peculiar problems for any length of time does not realize this need? Let us anticipate the development of such a program to the end that the entire summer season shall be so used at this place.

"We realize that the call for the wherewith to develop this ground adequately may seem to some like a diversion of funds to this cause, which are much needed elsewhere. It has ever been so with each new departure in our unfolding program of Kingdom service, and we are not unconcerned about that matter. We want to see our entire program go forward effectively and adequately on all fronts. But we who envision the possible contribution which usage of this ground may make to the total life and work of the Church, are confident that if those potentialities can be realized, it will be found by all the others that any temporary diversion of funds which its founding may occasion, has in reality been for them a "casting of bread on the waters.

"May the good hand of our God which has been upon this work in the past, upon those who started it and on those who have carried it on, still carry it forward in His wisdom and strength to that end. Be this our fervent prayer and the guide to our earnest efforts."

* Includes one large gift of $18,000 from an estate.
 Includes one large gift of $6,000 from an estate.
 Includes $10,000 needed for loan capital.

It was encouraging to note an increase in contributions during the month of July. However, even though receipts showed a gain, a number of boards and committees are still far behind in meeting their budget quotas. In order to raise the average for all boards and committees these low averages must definitely be raised. We trust that within the next few months this shall take place.

All boards and committees are indeed grateful for the support you are giving your Conference; in behalf of them we wish to express our sincere appreciation and thanks to you for your gifts, your prayers, and your interest. It is only through the cooperation and sacrifice of all that your Conference can reach its goal.

Very sincerely,
Edna Ruth Mueller, Office Secretary

THE ROOTS OF EVANGELISM

(Condensed from the Freeman Conference Sermon)

THIS YEAR THE churches put a special emphasis on evangelism. This is the keynote of our Conference with its theme, "Witnessing unto all men." Jesus made a significant statement when He said, "as the Father hath sent me, so send I you." It is your obligation to bring His Gospel to all men.

This witnessing must not be mechanical or forced. It must be the natural response of something deep within the soul of man. Evangelism is the fruit of a deep rootage. We do well to consider these roots.

The motive for evangelism, and all our church work, must be that of love, for love is the very essence of the Christian religion. God so loved that He gave His only Son. The Son so loved that He gave His life on the cross. His followers risked all to share the good news of salvation in Christ our Lord. Now we should be "witnessing unto all men," because we, too, have the love of God shed abroad in our hearts.

Jesus said the first commandment is to love God whole-heartedly, from the depths of our soul, and with all our intellectual and physical capacities. In such genuine love there is reverence, admiration, awe, and worship. There is deep yearning to possess more of the Spirit of God, and a strong desire to be of service to Him.

This implies confession, cleansing, the new birth in the Spirit and a complete commitment to Him. This love to God is the basic root of all evangelism. We cannot go farther until we go deeper.

The second great commandment and root of evangelism is love to man. This is a natural outgrowth of the first commandment. If we keep ourselves in the love of God, we may be able to love others as we do ourselves. This goes much deeper than mere interest or sympathy for the misfortunes of others. It is a love for the soul of another, friend or foe, that will cause us to witness unto them concerning the good news in Christ. Since war is not from this rootage, we can have no part in it. But we must put forth far more effort to bring them the Gospel to save their souls, rather than to go forth in war to blast their bodies.

Let the General Conference go forth on this basis. These roots, love to God and love to man, must be nurtured or our witness is of no effect. While thousands are engaged in the manufacture of atomic bombs, we need to become highly skilled in the use of atomic love.

It is important that we take our religion seriously and work at it with both hands. But these two hands are not engaged in wrestling with each other in disagreement or combat. With one hand we reach up to God that he may clasp it firmly. With the other we reach out to our fellowmen. So we become the connecting link between God and man. We are His witnesses.

This is not a time for shallow planning and shoddy work; this is a time for full consecration to Him who will guide and sustain us. This is not a day for selfish desires and personal ambitions; this is a day for "witnessing unto all men." This is not an hour for thoughtless and careless living; this is the eleventh hour for proclaiming the love of God as we give ourselves fully to his will and work. We can go farther if we go deeper, and God shall supply all our need according to His riches in glory by Christ Jesus.

FIFTY VICTORIOUS YEARS

WE DO WELL to pause in deep gratitude to God for the way He has blessed our fifty years of mission work in India. It is fitting that the celebration of this event was planned to climax the General Conference on its last day's session.

Now we look to the future. Much ground-work has been laid, but we need to lift our eyes and behold the field awaiting more help. Our Foreign Mission Board and the missionaries are busy with plans and visions for the years ahead.

We may all have a part in this work. We need to keep ourselves informed. The special India number of THE MENNONITE under date of April 25, 1950, (which is still available) and the coming book FELLOWSHIP IN THE GOSPEL: INDIA 1900-1950, should be studied and kept handy for ready reference. Above all, may we continue to bear up our missionaries and our Board with sincere prayer and sacrificial contributions. It is God's work.

"I SAT WHERE THEY SAT."

IT IS BUT natural to shy away from those we do not know. It is very common to avoid those with whom we do not agree. But many times such differences disappear when we learn to know each other better. When Ezekiel joined himself with those of the captivity he "sat where they sat" for seven days before he ventured to bring a message.

One of the fine things about a Conference is that for seven days we are in the presence of each other. We meet face to face and try to understand each other's point of view. Unless we are determined to have our own way, we may learn to appreciate the other man's attitude. Even if we cannot agree with him, that is no reason to be disagreeable. We will never all think alike for our minds are as different as our faces.

So as we work and plan together we may also be enriched by the spiritual fellowship with one another. "While they communed together and reasoned, Jesus Himself drew near, and went with them."

Some people fail to recognize opportunity because it comes disguised as hard work.

Central Conference Report

by R. L. Hartzler

Photos by S. F. Pannabecker

Washington, Illinois, August 4-7.—The 51st annual session of the Central District Conference was opened with the call to order by the conference president, Lotus Troyer, with the Calvary Mennonite Church serving in the capacity of host church for the conference where all of the sessions were held except those on Sunday which were moved to the high school auditorium to insure more adequate seating capacity. The conference throughout was one of the best attended for some time, and was marked by an excellent spirit of unity and earnestness.

Program Emphasizing Witnessing

Since this has been designated as a year of witnessing, the devotional addresses for the opening day centered in the theme, "Jesus' Method of Winning Men" which was developed by a series, "Jesus Wins Andrew," "Andrew Wins Peter," and "Peter Wins Cornelius." This thought was also dominant in the other devotional addresses on "Jesus, the Saviour of Men" by Ernest Hostetler; "Jesus as Lord Over All" by J. N. Smucker, editor of THE MENNONITE and president of the General Conference; "The Church as an Effective Witness for Christ Today" by P. K. Regier, executive secretary of General Conference; the home and foreign missionary session in the afternoon; and the closing address of the conference, "Every Christian a Witness for Him" by W. B. Weaver.

Many Reports Given

The morning and afternoon sessions on Friday were largely given to the hearing of reports from the Conference Secretary, Conference Treasurer, Field Secretary, Mission Board Secretary, Mission Treasurer, Mennonite Seminary, Bluffton College, Mennonite Hospital, Old People's Home, Retreat Ground Committee, Peace Committee, and Ministerial Committee.

The morning session closed with the conference sermon by the president, and the afternoon session with remarks by the field secretary concerning some essential attributes of the future ministry for our churches. In the evening, "Our New Camp Ground—Plans and Purposes." and "Strengthening the Hearts and Hands of our Brethren in South America" were orally and pictorially presented by the camp committee, and by A. J. Neuenschwander, secretary of the General Conference Home Mission Board.

Conference Auxiliary Organizations

The Saturday sessions were given over to conference auxiliary organizations, viz: morning session to the Sunday School Association, the afternoon to the Conference Women's Organization, and the evening to the Young People's Union. The latter part of the afternoon period was devoted to separate business sessions for the Women's Organization, Men's Organization, Y.P. Union, and Ministerial Association.

The Sunday afternoon session was, as heretofore, under the auspices of the Board of Home and Foreign Missions and was accordingly presided over by Arthur H. Schertz, president of the Board. Greetings were brought by workers in our field at home and abroad, Joseph Atherton, pastor of the Comins (Mich.) rural mission church; Samuel Ummel, superintendent of the Peoria Mennonite Gospel Mission; and the Roy Yoders, missionaries on furlough from the Congo Inland Mission (Africa).

Pioneer Missionary Speaks

An unanticipated but highly appreciated feature of this session was the presence of L. B. Haigh, who

Three Needs Met

by Harry Yoder

THE UNIQUENESS of the Christian faith lies in its completeness. Many other religions present a "way" of life but one of the greatest things of the Christian faith is the Christian way of life. From the very beginning, Christians were known as "people of the Way," those who followed the One who called Himself "The Way." During the persecutions under the Roman Emperors, the early church fathers made it very definite that they invited and commanded men to walk in the Way which is summed up in Jesus Christ and His precepts. Years have passed, philosophies have come and gone, invention has succeeded invention and yet nothing has been produced that could point to a better way of life than the simple direct teachings of Jesus. "Love the Lord Thy God.... and thy neighbors as thyself." That is the plan for following in the Way of Jesus. He said also it is more blessed to give than to receive, and proved the real meaning by giving His life for sinners, on the Cross. Yet today, His way of loving self-sacrifice is the only true way for man to take.

Man's Deepest Need

When a man finds Christ's way he accepts also His remedy for sin. This is the most distinctive thing in the Christian faith for it deals with man's deepest hurt, his sorest need, and the source of all his sorrows. As someone has said "The Christian remedy for sin is not advice, argument or appeal, example or education, but pardon thru faith in Jesus Christ and Him crucified." That is the eternal Christian remedy for sin, that is a part of the uniqueness of Christianity, God in Christ reconciling the world to Himself, wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities. This has redeemed the sinner, inspired the writer, sent forth the missionary and built the Christian community on this earth.

There is Hope

The last unique phase of Christianity is the Christian Hope for the future. This has meant so much more since our missionaries from South America explained that for so many of their people "Hope" was crucified on the Cross. Do we appreciate what Christian Hope has done for us? It has given direction to the followers of the Way, it has opened the eyes, touched the hearts and moved lips of the redeemed, it has given peace, joy and security to those who rejoice in the risen Christ.

In the painting "Hope" by George Fredrick Watts we see the blinded figure sitting on a sphere with her broken lyre in her hands. She is bending her ear to catch what music she may from the last remaining string. She cannot see the star shining above her; one by one the sweet notes of music have been taken from her, but still she sits, bowed but not broken, plucking with tender fingers whatever melody she may from the last string of those that gave her the full harmonies of beauty. She has no vision either of the star above or of the world of darkness and gloom below. Her attitude of rejection almost rejects the conventional idea that there is happiness to be found when everything seems lost, but the picture suggests the larger hope for the world that there is peace and light above the turmoil and sorrow of life—the Christian Hope— God's plan that Christ Himself should come and establish the Kingdom.

As we watch the glowing sun sink slowly into the horizon we sing "Day is dying in the West," but does it end there? No indeed, we go on in joyful reverence "Heaven and earth are full of Thee, Heaven and earth are praising Thee." We can do this because of Christian faith in God's love. This is hope for the future, a living hope, founded in Jesus Christ who was dead and is alive forevermore.

with Mrs. Haigh, now deceased, was the first missionary to be sent to the field by the C.I.M. Board in 1911. He spoke briefly of their experiences in surveying the virgin territory which now comprises our field in Congo, the locating and founding of the first stations, and the beginnings of the work, which now comprises four main stations with two new ones now being established, 395 communities where the Word is given out regularly, 318 rural and regional schools with an average attendance of approximately 10,000, an organized church with native assistant pastors and a baptized membership of over 8,700, and more than 3,700 professed Christians under instruction and awaiting baptism. He spoke with deep appreciation of the grace of God which attended the beginning and the development of the work, and now has so gloriously triumphed in bringing it to its present proportions.

The missions session closed with a forceful setting forth by H. A. Driver, promotional secretary of the C.I.M., of the strategic opportunity confronting us in our C.I.M. field and the steps we need to take in "Girding for Our Task in Congo."

Conference Statistics

The secretary's statistical report showed a conference membership of 3,271, as of June 30, 1950, with 12 having entered some special form of religious service during the year. Contributions for church running expenses including pastors' salaries, evangelistic meetings, church improvements and repairs, janitor service, utilities, conference assessment, etc., totaled $75,949.86; for home and foreign missions, $34,568.93; for institutions including Bluffton College, Mennonite Seminary, Mennonite Hospital, Old People's Home, $11,001.12; and, for other benevolent purposes including Relief, $28,137.54; making a total of contributions for all purposes of 149,657.45.

From the Mission Front

Busy Days in China

by Elisabeth Goertz

WE ARE MUCH encouraged when letters from home tell us: "We pray for you daily." We believe you have definite times when you lift your heart to God for us and the many Christians here in this land. God is hearing and answering your prayers.

Many people ask these days, "What is going on in China?" We saw a good answer in the China Inland Mission paper "China's Millions." Director Houghton said in June 1949: "The whole future—every day and every hour of it is in God's hands, and I do not believe He has finished either with China or with us." We are astonished at the EXTENT of the opportunity still open to us!

A Dangerous Opportunity

Ours is a 'dangerous opportunity' (Chinese way of saying 'crisis'). What if we slow down? What if our time is 'running out'? We are putting our shoulder to the wheel as never before (How happy to be here.) We do not wish later to have feelings of regret for not having done what we could while we had the chance. We go to bed at night (more often near midnight), our strength entirely used up. How we praise the Lord for good beds. We rest. The next morning we start the day with: I believe in God Almighty, line up with God and go on, we sing a hymn and are ready for another day of service.

A few months ago I had gone past the limit of normal exertion (rode my bicycle too far and too fast). I became limp, had no appetite, life was a drag, I was weary to the bone. I went to see our lady doctor, Chinese, and she found Vitamin B deficiency. She ordered pills and injections. She was right and I praise the Lord for how quickly I pulled up. Now I can go again as before, but I am not allowed to ride the bicycle until after the heat of the summer.

Well, even this has fallen out to the furtherance of the Gospel. I am getting better acquainted with the neighbors near our West Street chapel, especially the rickshaw pullers. They offer in turn to take me home after the evening meetings. Our chapel is outside of the city, I have to pass through the big West Gate each time. It is about a mile to ride late at night—10 P.M. (daylight time, here we call it Peking time). Occasionally the police guard at the gate stops me to ask—where am I going, what am I doing, etc? I willingly show him my residence certificate and thus far he has been satisfied and has let me pass.

This is Monday night as I am writing. This evening is Testimony meeting. When I came home this time before dark the rickshaw man asked me if I were going out again for the evening's meeting. I told him a Mr. Wang would be in charge. I could not be present this time. I asked him was he on the program and he said, "Yes, I am going to recite Scripture verses by memory tonight." He said it with apparent joy. You see how fine our relations are between foreign missionaries and the working man here. This man's whole family wants to attend our next instruction class for baptism in the near future. There are others like him. In our evening class, called 'Brothers' Class' we have many of the poorer working class.

Another class is 'Sisters' Class' for grown-ups. All told we have about 100 in these classes.

These days we are busy in our clinic with regular patients, more mothers come for confinement, also we give injections against cholera. This latter service is free. There are many stations where these injections are given, plenty of mosquitoes; we must all sleep under nets. New fruit on market, these days, oranges, plums, peaches, baking apples, apricots, and cherries. Vegetables: green beans, radishes, cabbage, tomatoes, corn on cob, onions, spinach, etc. We're glad to be here, to be friends to the people in a time of crisis. We need your prayers.

We Are Kept Busy

Now as to what we are doing . . . We are keeping more than busy, We are rushed! We do everything we can, for we feel our time is going on, and might be running out. We find we have grand opportunities every day and always at the end of another full day we praise the Lord for He has permitted us to do another days' work for Jesus. The weather is grand, we have rain several times a week, it is delightfully cool, much like California, and who would not be happy to work?

We have the following meetings and classes each week:

Miss Kuyf—English reading and English Bible class several times a week.

Mrs. Boehr meets with the neighborhood women in the home of Christians three times a week for character reading and Bible study. She also goes to another home where there are some forty children in the same yard, mostly refugees. With her are a Bible woman and one of our fine Christian young women and they have meetings for grown-ups and children. Good attendance and fine interest.

P. J. Boehr keeps at his pastoral duties and chairmanship of the Mission, also has Bible study class on Sunday evening in city church.

My own time is taken up with supervising in the clinic work, helping to provide supplies for our nurses and our doctor. Also I share in the responsibility of evening classes, one each for boys, girls, men and women, in which they read, study Bible verses, learn songs, and general Christian teaching with one evening a month for friendly enjoyment.

All these are besides our regular meetings as follows:

Sunday morning: Sunday School for children—three places—300 enrolled; Sunday School for adults—two places.—Junior Church—two places—300 attend.—Worship Service—two places.

Sunday evening: Bible Class—two places, 80 in these; preaching in two chapels.

Monday A.M. to Friday A.M. Children's classes (City Church) W. Kuyf in charge.

Monday P.M. to Friday P.M. Children's classes (West St.) myself in charge.

Monday evening to Friday evening. Preaching in two street chapels. 150-250 in attendance every evening.

Each of these are preceded by half an hour of singing, and learning of new hymns. And you ought to hear all of the people here sing.

Count the number of meetings and classes held each week and there are over forty. Sunday School has over 300 enrolled. Same for Junior Church. Evening Bible classes 80 in the two places. Attendance at evening street chapel meetings is from 150 to 250 in the two places, every night. There is much sowing of the seed and we have catechism classes three to four times a year. Right now some people are asking when the next instruction class will begin. One woman whose house was over the city wall, has moved into the city to be near to attend instruction next time.

Heard in children's classes:

When pictures of children were shown, one little fellow piped up: I want to look a long time (take a good look). One little youngster stepped outside onto the veranda and shook himself loose. "They are crowding me so, inside." One little girl saw a leather belt used to show how Paul was beaten one day in one city. The next day she pickel up her daddy's belt and said: "This is used for beating people. I asked who was beaten and she answered "Paul." She asked, why? I explained Paul was a good man. She wanted to know—then why beat him? I explained further,—the officer did not believe in Jesus, so he had a bad heart.

Japan Today

National Chairman, Joseph C. Grew, addressed the 162nd General Assembly of The Presbyterian Church in the United States of America in Cincinnati, Ohio, on May 23. In his speech, which was widely quoted and commented on in the newspapers, he thus described his conception of the situation in Japan today:

"As I see Japan today, that country, especially the youth of that country, is standing at the crossroads from which several different ways emerge. One road leads back to the old military feudalism which brought about Japan's downfall. Much, very much, could be said about that. For ten long years I watched that blind philosophy working toward what proved to be its inevitable destiny, disaster. The best efforts of enlightened Japanese—and how many splendid enlightened Japanese I have known and know— were powerless to arrest the trend of that inexorable tidal wave of aggressive militarism.

"Another road leads to Communism. Youth is always susceptible to siren calls, especially when economic difficulties render the ground fallow for the sowing of that dragon seed. Is not Communism, with its golden promises, the real answer to their terrific problems? How can impressionable youth look through the mists that lie ahead and see the utter calamity of mental, moral and ultimately physical stagnation and slavery to which that philosophy is absolutely certain to lead them? Surely we have had ample evidence elsewhere to support that observation.

"But there is another road, the only road which, in the world as it is built today, can, I believe, lead Japan once more to resume her proper and honored place in the family of nations. That is the road of democracy built on high Christian principle and a high moral code. That is where our University, which we intend shall adopt and maintain the highest academic standards, can profoundly influence these young men and women, groping for the answer to their formidable problems."

SIN, A FOUNTAIN

Never trifle with one sin. It is like a little cloud which may hold a hurricane in its grasp. The next sin you commit may have a mighty effect in the blighting of your life. You do not know the streams that may flow from the fountain; for sin is a fountain—not a mere act, but a fountain of evil.—Andrew A. Bonar.

The Free

THE STORY of the Mennonites in South Dakota goes back to the 1870's. In the general exodus from Russia in that period Dakota Territory received from 1500-1700 Mennonite settlers. A striking impression, as one reads the newspapers of that day, is the eagerness with which the Territory received the Mennonites. Since Dakota had no transcontinental railroad, papers urged the Territorial Government to do more to secure as much as possible of this "most valuable tide of humanity."

In the immediate vicinity of Freeman there are at present thirteen Mennonite churches of which nine belong to the Northern District of the General Conference of Mennonites. These nine have a total membership of about 2,000, or with children and non-baptized persons, about twenty-seven hundred. Other Mennonite churches in the vicinity are one each of the following: Krimmer Mennonite Brethren, Evangelical Mennonite Brethren, Mennonite Brethren and a United Missionary Church (formerly Mennonite Brethren in Christ). Taken all together these thirteen churches give the Freeman community a total Mennonite population of about thirty-four hundred. There are an additional nine Mennonite churches in the state but not in the immediate vicinity of Freeman. All but four of these belong to the Northern District Conference. Of the remaining four, three are members of the Krimmer Mennonite Brethren Conference, and one a member of the United Missionary Church. Taking all of the twenty-two Mennonite churches together, the result is a total of about thirty-four hundred members and a grand total of some forty-six hundred Mennonite persons in the state.

There are currently fifteen Hutterian colonies in the state—four of them less than fifty miles from Freeman. These colonies have a total population of about twelve hundred. Most of the colonies moved to Canada during World War I—there are also several in Montana. All of these stem from the original colonies first planted in Dakota in the 1870's. There are now approximately eighty-five colonies all told in the United States and Canada with some eight thousand adherents.

The great majority of the Mennonites in the state are still devoted to farming. During the depression years—intensified by the drought—this industry suffered greatly and some of the farmers gave up their land and moved out or went into business. During the war years and since, there has been a marked revival of prosperity. The farm holdings have increased, equipment has been greatly improved, and the buildings modernized. In the Freeman community young people looking for a farming career are finding it difficult to establish themselves. There is a strong emphasis on a more intensified and scientific agricultural approach. The trend toward better poultry and livestock is striking. Whether east, north, or west of Freeman, one can find farmers whose beef and dairy herds are of the finest in the area.

There has been a rather steady trend, however, toward the opening of business establishments in the towns around which Mennonites live. These enterprises range all the way from retail general merchandizing stores, garages, farm implement dealers, shoe repair shops, blacksmiths, jewelers, and restaurants to feed mills, hatcheries, printing shops, nurseries, poultry dressing plants, banks, and others.

The social economy in the Freeman community has not reached a wholesome balance. So far the community has not been able to resolve a way of challenging the various talents and capacities of people within the confines of the community. It would appear that there is definitely a place for a number of small industrial plants that would utilize both the indigenous human and material resources.

There is the usual representation of the professions—doctors, dentists, lawyers, teachers, and ministers. The chiropractors have established three clinics that have reached out far beyond the immediate community. In all of these the men who operate them have come from a Mennonite background but only in one are a majority of the men still members of the Mennonite church—the Tieszen Clinic at Marion.

The influence of Freeman Junior College and Academy in the community can scarcely be overestimated. Incorporated in 1900 (this is the fiftieth anniversary year) and opened to students in 1903, the school has touched the lives of literally all people in the community. Out of its doors has come for many years a steady stream of elementary school teachers. These teachers have gone into the community and have filled the needs for practically all of the elementary school districts. This has been almost tantamount to the operation of a Mennonite elementary school system. It is a fact that there are young people who all through the grades, high school, and college have been under the direction and influence of Mennonite teachers. The increasing interest in education has been almost phenomenal. In large part the school at Freeman has been instrumental in this.

Not the last of the wholesome influences that have come from the school in the increasing measure of understanding between the various groups represented in the constituency. Here in the same classes are young people of Hutterite, Swiss, and Low German backgrounds. Through the years this has developed many mixed marriages between the groups. It has taught the groups to work together in a common cause. Moreover, it has enabled at the same time members of the General Conference, Krimmer Mennonite Brethren, Mennonite Brethren, Evangelical Mennonite Brethren and United Mission Church to unite in a common undertaking. At the present time at least three of the above mentioned church groups are represented on the College's Board of Trustees. All of this has made the Freeman community somewhat unique among Mennonite communities. The esprit de corps has not reached the point where complete harmony is a reality, but progress has been definitely marked in cooperative endeavors and the school has certainly played a significant role in this development.

For sometime the Mennonite ministers of the Freeman community have been meeting regularly to share problems, fellowship together, and on occasion to sponsor joint meetings which are usually held in the college auditorium. Out of this Ministerial Association came the establishment of the Salem Home for the Aged in Freeman several years ago. The planning and preliminary organization took some time but by the fall of 1949 the Home was opened for service. The united campaigns for relief flour, relief canning, and other kindred endeavors have almost always come out of this Association. The Tieszen Home for the Aged has an independent background but also serves a real need in the community. William P. Tieszen, along with other members of the late Peter D. Tieszen family, has been responsible for the development of this project. It is located at Marion.

There is a happy rapport between the Mennonite and the Hutterian Brethren living in colonies. With the rapid growth of the colonies there are indications that before too long their dilemma will be to find land in sufficient quantities to allow for their traditional type of social economy. On several occasions hostile legislation has been introduced in the State Legislature but happily there has thus far not been sufficient sentiment to support it.

By and large the Mennonites in the state adhere to the historic concepts of Mennonitism. There are, however, indications, that individuals, and in some instances churches, have gone a long way in giving up the principle of non-resistance, for example. There are also indications that the traditional nonconformity to the world is no longer a vital concern to many of the Mennonites. On the contrary, it has been extremely difficult for many to remain aloof from the secular trends so evident in our cultural complex. Since the war there has been an evident consciousness in most groups that unless the church is on its guard it stands in danger of losing its distinctive mission in the world.This consciousness is one of the more hopeful things one can say about the South Dakota Mennonites. Leadership in the churches and the school at Freeman will determine largely how successfully this consciousness will be implemented. —Reprinted from Mennonite Life.

Outline on Japan Relief

The purposes and objectives of the relief program in Osaka, Japan, have recently been restated in a three-point outline: (1) direct relief activities at the unit headqarters, including sewing classes, some distribution, a children's clinic, a dental service, classes in handcrafts and home economics, and religious meetings; (2) various contacts with Japanese individuals and groups, particularly in churches, with leaders of institutions for physically or mentally handicapped, and with classes interested in studying English; (3) readiness to assist the several Mennonite groups who have opened or plan to open mission activities in Japan.

The unit has made a good witness in the slum section of Osaka, and is carrying through extension projects of a commendable nature, thereby reaching other areas also.

Relief Booklet to be Published

A new booklet on Mennonite relief since World War II is now at the press and is to be ready for distribution in the near future. The author, Irvin B. Horst, is himself a former relief worker in Europe.

The book is particulary timely, and will be of vital interest to all of the Mennonites in North America. The story of war sufferers' relief "In the Name of Christ" stands out as a clear voice of peace in a time of strife and tension. Further announcement will be made when the book is available.

"Real" Christians

Recently one of the workers in Europe related her experiences while in the hospital recovering from an injury:

"It wasn't long until the nurses and doctors wondered who I was and why I had come to Germany. They wanted to know more about Mennonites, nonresistance, and the black book (Bible) which lay on my bedside table. Long will I remember the visits of the local Evangelisch pastor who every two weeks had Sunday devotions in the hall for the patients. He visited me one week day evening and we discussed at length some of the European church probelms. He had heard about our distributions but he was interested in Mennonites and our beliefs. The last time he was here to see me he had just seen another patient who had refused to listen to the devotions or speak about Christianity. She claims that she lost her faith because the church blessed the war, and to her war was wrong. So he related to her about my accident and that I was an MCC worker from America. She answered 'Those ... are real Christians'."

May this not be a temptation to feel proud, but bring to the Mennonite brotherhood a renewed burden to witness through this language of deeds.

About the Draft

What should a young man do, who had been classified I-A (or for that matter, deferred as veteran, for occupational reason, or for dependency), and since then has been sincerely converted to the Christian nonresistant position?

He should immediately request from the Local Board a copy of the Special Form for Conscientious Objectors (SSS Form 150), fill it out carefully explaining his belief, and particularly how and why he has come to the CO position, and return it to the Board. The Regulations provide that "the Local Board, upon request, shall furnish to any person claiming to be a conscientious objector a copy of such Special Form for Conscientious Objectors."

The Board is authorized by the Regulations to re-open any classification if the registrant presents new evidence in the case. Claim of having come to a sincere nonresistant conviction should be presented to the Board on this grounds. If the Board does not grant the desired Class IV-E, the man should appeal.

Acceptable Classification for CO's

It has been said in general that all CO's should seek classification IV-E. It should be made clear, however, that the local board considers eligibility of registrants for the inactive classes of V-A (men 25 years of age and thus over the age of liability for service) and IV-F (physically unfit for service) before making decision on his CO claim. It is therefore in order for men who are given either of these two classes, to accept such. It does not affect the future claim as a CO.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE: AN ADVENTURE IN FAITH, 1900-1950. $2.00

THIS 268-PAGE book, written by members of the Bluffton College faculty recounts the struggles and success of a small college in its first half century of growth. From an historical point of view, chapters one and two on "The Venture" and "The Builders" are of particular interest. Chapter four on "Christian Faith—The Center" refers briefly to Mennonite interest in education and frankly accepts the responsibility for Christian Education to be really Christian. The interpretation of Christian is given in the light of 2 Cor. 5:19 and is based on reconciliation to God through Christ with the implications this has in thought and life. Other chapters on finance, curriculum, alumni, etc., are all of interest.

Several lessons are evident which have a wide application. In the beginning the inaugurating of such an institution seems the principal problem but as time passes it appears that real problems are those of continuing support and development. There is no ready, flashy answer to the matter of education; it is only the long, persistent effort which counts. For a church related institution, dependence on the church financially, involves responsibility to the church. Large endowments tend to make a college independent of the church and thus gradually to lose touch with the group it was designed to serve. Because of the need of appeal to the church for support Bluffton College has had to reconsider its program periodically in the light of church demands with consequent closer cooperation. Significant also is the attempt to find the place of Mennonite faith in modern society. Bluffton College has held the conviction that Mennonite ideals of Christian living and particularly non-resistance can be maintained in the present day.

The book provides interesting insights into the church and college problems.—S. F. Pannabecker

Jottings

WESTERN DISTRICT

—First Church, Pretty Prairie, Kansas: Our pastor, Howard G. Nyce, celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary as minister and elder having been ordained June 21st, 1925, in the East Swamp Mennonite Church near Quakertown, Pennsylvania. The officiating ministers were the late A. M. Fretz and Freeman H. Swartz. It is planned to have Freeman Swartz here on August 20 to celebrate this occasion.—Ralph Krehbiel, Corr.

—Lorraine Avenue Church, Wichita, Kansas: Miss Sophie Koehn, Greensburg, Kansas was united in marriage to Mr. Alvin Unruh, Pawnee Rock, Kansas, Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church on Sunday, August 6, G. S. Stoneback officiating.

—Inman Church, Inman, Kansas: Reuben Wedel, missionary to the Mexicans along the Rio Grande in south Texas, presented the work and gave us the morning message, recently. Mrs. Wedel was not able to be with us because of illness. Several churches of the community have combined efforts to hold outdoor Sunday night services. July 23 the topic was "Why Voluntary Service " Wilbur Wiens, returned service worker from Akron, Pennsylvania, reported of his experiences as one of the speakers for the evening. July 30 George Neufeld, missionary to the Belgian Congo, gave the message at the Union Service.—Mrs. John Klassen, Corr.

—New Hopedale Church, Meno, Oklahoma: July 23 Missionary Harold Ratzlaffs were in our midst. He preached in the morning and for the evening a short missionary play was given by the C. E. after which both Mr. and Mrs. Ratzlaff spoke. In connection with the evening services a shower in money and materials for the mission field was given them. Friday evening the young people of the church were scheduled to have an outing. Rain prevented them from going out, but they had a good time in the O.B.A. basement. A baptismal service was held for Philip Johnson July 30. That same Sunday in the afternoon Herman H. Ratzlaff was laid to his final rest. The approaching marriage of Frances Unruh and Philip Johnson was announced July 30.—August Schmidt, Corr.

—Emmanuel Church, Moundridge, Kansas: Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Franz, Galva, Kansas, observed their fiftieth wedding anniversary Saturday evening, July 29, in the Emmanuel Church near Moundridge, Kansas. A program consisting of music by a male quartet of the church, songs by the grandchildren, and a sermon by the pastor, Garman H. Wedel, was presented. An interesting history of the experience of the honorel couple was also read. Mr. and Mrs. Jantz, their children, grandchildren, relatives, and friends enjoyed a fellowship meal following the program.—Mrs. Garman H. Wedel, corr.

MIDDLE DISTRICT

—Zion Church, Donnellson, Iowa: Dr. and Mrs. Ernst Crous from Goettingen, Germany, were with us July 6-7. They spoke to the mission societies; in the evening they spoke to the congregation in the church. July 11 Misses Lillian Lehman, Marie Liechty and Lorraine Burkhalter spoke to the missionary societies in the evening in our church and illustrated their work with some pictures. Our pastor, E. Basinger, found it necessary to submit to a nasal operation at the University Hospital at Iowa City, Iowa. During his absence on July 23, A. K. Byrns of Quincy, Illinois, gave the morning message, Monday July 23 our pastor was able to return to his home to take up his work. July 30 Mr. and Mrs. Hilty of Versailles, Missouri, worshiped with us. Mr. Hilty, a former pastor here, gave us the morning message.—Corr.

—Apostolic Church, Trenton, Ohio: July 30 Harry L. Yoder of Bluffton, Ohio, brought the message during the worship hour. He also solicited members in the interest of Bluffton College. The church choir has been sponsoring a community sing on the first Sunday night of each month during the summer.—Edna Kinsinger, Corr.

—First Church, Berne, Indiana: The only two living ex-pastors of this church, with wives, John P. Suderman and C. H. Suckau, paid us a welcome visit during the first week in August. The latter preached Sunday morning on "The Rapture of the Church." During the week the death and burial of Mrs. Amos Burkholder, wife of our church custodian, occurred. Sunday, August 13, Gerald Stucky preached his farewell sermon in this his home church. The family expects to leave shortly for their field in South America.—Martha Gilliom, Corr.

PACIFIC DISTRICT

—First Church, Shafter, California: July 2 the Shafter choir gave a half-hour musical program over the local radio station KWSO. July 9 the group motored to Paso Robles and gave an evening program in the First Church. Some nineteen young people enjoyed the day there. A group of about thirteen young people are planning to attend the 22nd annual young peoples retreat at Lake Sequoia, August 12-19. Our pastor, John Bartel, has been on the sick list for quite some time, due to a fall. While working with paint brushes to brighten up the church, we saw the need for new Sunday School rooms, and for some plaster on our basement walls, plus a new set of sinks in the kitchen which were donated by different individuals of the Church. Merle Bartel has been acting in the capacity of youth counselor at the YMCA Camp at Greenhorn Mountain for two weeks. Eugene Schmidt has enrolled at the Bible Institute of Los Angeles.—Corr.

—Second Church, Paso Robles, California: Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Russell (nee Martha Dueck) who were married April 16, are now at home at San Antonia, Texas. Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Fisher, (nee Louise Hamm) who were married July 2, are now living in Livingstone, California, where he will teach agriculture in the high school.—Mrs. Frank Hamm, Corr

—Cuauhtemoc, Chih, Mexico: June 25 we enjoyed an all-day picnic in which all German people in Cuauhtemoc took part, eighty people turned out. It was also opening for our Bible vacation school. About thirty children took part in Vacation Bible School which closed August 3 with a program. Teachers were Esther Voth and JoAnn Nikkel, both from Goessel, Kansas. Our MCC Unit is doing a fine work, more and more the doors are opening and we need more help. Who will come and help in this work?—B. H. Janzen, Corr.

—C.P.S. Reunion: The fourth annual fellowship of ex-C.P.S. men from Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, and Illinois will be held at Camp Alexander Mack, Milford, Indiana on September 3, 1950. The program begins at 10:15 and a carry-in- dinner will be served at 12:00. All ex-C.P.S. men are urged to attend.—Harold Vercler

WANTED: Young married man for general farm work. Four-room house—three miles east and one and one-fourth miles south of Newton . . . . G. H. Regier, Newton Route 3, or J. W. Fretz, North Newton.

VOLUNTARY SERVICE NEWS

An Indian Young People's Retreat

by Cornelia Franz

THE LARGE and scenic Roman Nose State Park near Watonga, Oklahoma, was the site of the Indian Young People's Retreat May 31 to June 3. Many large trees, wild flowers, natural springs and winding streams, huge rocks, cliffs, and steep valleys are some of the natural beauties of this park. Man has added winding roads, a Roman Nose statue, play grounds, swimming pool, fireplaces, camping ground with large cabins, recreation hall, and kitchen.

Indian retreaters,—Cheyennes and Arapahoes, participated in the activities of the retreat. The young people were invited from the Mennonite Mission stations at Fonda, Canton, Longdale, Thomas, Hammon, and Clinton. Rev. and Mrs. Alfred Wiebe, Rev. and Mrs. Herbert Dalke, Rev. and Mrs. Arthur Friesen—the missionaries of the field, planned this retreat. Rev. Arthur Friesen was the retreat director. Rev. and Mrs. Albert Jantzen, returned missionaries of China and now of Meno, Oklahoma, and Guy Heap of Birds, an Indian worker, were also leaders in the program. Mrs. Alice Heap of Birds and Jennie Hart, Indian helpers, served as cooks at the retreat.

The 6:30 rising bell began the day's activities. After breakfast all prepared for the F.B.I. (Fancy Bunk Inspection). The morning consisted of Bible classes taught by Rev. Jantzen, Rev. Wiebe, Rev. Dalke, and Mrs. Jantzen. We also had a singspiration, and Indian young people like to sing. Another feature of the forenoon which proved very interesting was a chapel program given by retreaters. Crafts and recreation constituted the afternoon's program. Rev. and Mrs. Dalke directed the craft work— the making of colorful retreat penants of felt. Swimming, softball, hiking, and a treasure hunt were among the recreational activities. Another feature was the daily newspaper of the retreat edited by Rev. Wiebe. Rev. Jantzen was in charge of the evening services. The last evening an impressive candle-lighting service climaxed the retreat. The following day at noon we bid each other farewell by joining hands in a fellowship circle and singing "Blest be the Tie that Binds."

Bible School

When 45 to 50 Indian boys and girls with smiling faces and sparkling eyes come to the Clinton Grade School building each day for Bible School, one is reminded of the phrase from a song, "More about Jesus let me learn." Classes for kindergarten through high school age are taught by Rev. and Mrs. Arthur Friesen, Donald Isaac, and Cornelia Franz. The General Conference Bible School material is being used in this school.

The Indian children sing heartily, and listen eagerly to Bible stories. Most of them are artistic and enjoy handwork immensely. Instructing children about the good way of life certainly brings true joy in service.

Bible Schools are being held at the other stations on the field also.

Bible Camp At Ashland

by Erna Dyck

THERE ARE great opportunities that have far reaching results in the Summer Voluntary Service. It is the second time that I have been in this service but had not served on the Ashland Mission Field. The trip to the mission field was greatly enjoyed with the beautiful scenery of our Creator who is the maker of all his wonderful works.

The Bible Camp with the white children started Monday morning June 12 through Sunday. The children arrived Monday morning with all their bedding and belongings. They camped in the pasture close to the Tongue river which was convenient for swimming. The boys and girls each had a tent for their sleeping quarters. We had Bible classes from nine o'clock in the morning to twelve o'clock noon—singing, Bible stories and memory verses. The children were divided into three classes, Mrs. Daniel Petter had the smallest group, Amy Petter had the second smallest and I had the oldest class.

Mrs. Laura Petter cooked the meals for eighteen hungry children. They had their meals outside under the shady trees, where they also washed their dishes. Before swimming they either played games—volley ball, croquet or circle games. Some went horseback riding, we also took a few minutes time off reviewing some of the lessons and memory work already learned.

When time for swimming came around, it was the greatest treat for all the children. Isaac Shoulderblade would take them on the wagon to the river, he also took them every night to their sleeping quarters. One afternoon they were taken to Mrs. Petter's log cabin where they camped their dinner and supper. They also saw the burning coal mine which was quite an event for them.

All these activities were very much enjoyed by the children but the Bible school meant most to them. How they enjoyed the simple Bible stories and would say "Thank you for the nice story" and they longed to hear more of them. Richard McElroy became a Christian during Bible School Camp and what a difference it made in his life. He didn't seem to enjoy Camp but after this experience he was such a happy boy. Some of the other children that were Christians already, were so concerned about God's purpose and guidance in their lives as they expressed it in their prayers.

During Bible Camp we had an evening service of singing and flannelgraph lesson with the Camp children and the Cheyennes that came out.

Sunday morning the children gave a demonstration program of what they had learned throughout the week. The children sang heartily, the flannelgraph story which was told by the children, of Philip, how he shared the good news with the Ethiopian. The Ethiopian saw Philip no more but went on his way happy after he decided to follow Jesus. The children joined in joyfully in the beloved song, "I have decided to follow Jesus." Richard gave his testimony in song what the Lord had done for him as expressed in the following song:

"He lifted me up, yes up,
Up from the miry clay
He lifted me up, yes up,
To walk the narrow way
He lifted me up, yes up,
I'm bound for heaven's shore
He lifted me up, yes up,
To live forevermore."

The Camp closed with a picnic dinner with their parents that had come for them. We were very happy that the parents trusted their children to our care. Many blessings were bestowed upon us throughout the week and all the labor and time we spent we know are not in vain.

We thank Mrs. Petter for her work that has made this Bible Camp such an success. She has sacrificed much—finance, labor and giving them the Word of Life. May the Lord bless Mrs. Petter and reward her for her service among her people.

Voluntary Service in Columbia

Cachipay, Cundinamarca,
Colombia, South America

THIS YEAR, for the first time, Voluntary Service decided to send a group of workers to Colombia. Two girls and two men were required and Gerald Stucky had visions of a house and an artificial lake emerging in these eight weeks. But instead, four girls volunteered, so while the house remains a vision, our "uniform project" is taking concrete shape. There are 22 girls from the ages of 4-16 and for these we are sewing, if possible, three sets of clothing each. The uniforms consist of navy jumpers, attractively trimmed with red ricrac, and white cotton blouses. There are three machines at our disposal, which we have arranged on an open porch so that when we look up from a seam we may gaze at a magnificant mountain scene.

We have spent three weeks here and our days are falling into quite a definite pattern. At seven the bell rings for devotions. The children have risen an hour earlier and have already made their beds and cleaned their rooms, and now we join them on the front porch, lined with benches and steeped in sunshine. The directors alternate in conducting devotions which consist of three or four songs, which the children love and join in lustily; prayer, in which the children participate without any self-consciousness whatever; and a story or lesson. At 7:30 another bell is the signal for the breakfast lineup. We were amazed at first at the huge portions of porridge the children consumed, and, of course, there is always fruit and milk and bread, though the cost of the latter has increased so much that flour now sells for the American equivalent of $.24 per lb.

Rosthern Reports

WE HAD NO idea what surprises were waiting for us the next day. Our ardent Bill Wiebe took us, and showed us the tasks we were to perform. I felt within myself not qualified to go ahead, but God has given grace and we are performing our tasks with humility and pleasure. The work consists of such as feeding, bathing and dressing the patients, also cleaning the rooms and making beds. We are having evening devotions with the patients three times a week and every morning at the staff breakfast table.

We were also impressed when we heard that everyone is using the German language in the Invalid Home, in spite of the fact that there is a comparatively young staff. We are told that there used to be a lot of "English" until the DP's came, seven of which are employed here at the present. Services here and in the churches are conducted mostly in German, and in outlying communities sometimes "Plattdeutsch" is used. That brought to my mind very vividly my childhood days when we had it that way.

Our unit this year consists of two members, Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Unruh of Kansas and their young son, Alden.

We took our first excursion to Scarpe (a small country school) to attend a Revival meeting conducted by John Friesen of Hague, which was very impressive and after a few days we attended again.

Then on June 11th we attended the Conference of the Rosenort Gemeinde at the Youth Farm. We noticed from the themes that were rendered, that the churches face the same problem we dealt with years ago, namely the language problem. In the afternoon they had a sponsored social hour for the children.

VOLUNTARY SERVICE IN COLOMBIA

After breakfast the children do their "oficios" (duties) which rotate weekly and include such things as washing dishes, sweeping floors and setting the table. At this time we four make for the sewing machine, or alternatively, we paint the ping pong table a bright green, and what interest in the sport that has awakened! One of the youngsters here we would like to see opposite some of our American champs, he would hold his own, even though he is only four feet tall. We have already finished a minor project of furniture remodelling. Six chairs stand proudly in the hallway, all have clean blue covers on seat and back and a new coat of varnish. The hallway is partitioned off as a reception room for those visiting parents who suffer from leprosy. At 8:30 Erna leaves us for a few hours to teach the youngsters English—I follow her example with another grade in the afternoon. Then peace descends on the house, due to the children's absence, not Erna's, until 10 when recess is the signal for us to play with the children. They are good sports and the language difficulty is quickly overcome when playing cat and mouse. After 10:30 we return to sewing or we do "landscape gardening" or "outdoor cultivation" or "ground beautification" all of which are variations on the theme of hoeing. We transplanted cabbages, and planted potatoes and carrots. We diligently watered the baby cabbages the day after transplanting them, which brought on three days of almost steady rain.

Twelve o'clock marks dinner—and hearty it is, what with rice, fried bananas and yuca, it is a challenge for everyone to remain slim. Before we came here we read with interest a sentence in the calendar about a course for the V.S. workers in "Latin American Culture." This we have gathered, is a long name for "siesta." We have great plans for this hour. We have started several books on Colombia, and we make some futile efforts at studying our Spanish lessons, but the efforts become increasingly futile as drowsiness descends. The children, in the meantime, under able supervision, hilariously dash off for their daily dip in the near Rio Cachipay, and occasionally we follow their example.

At 4:30 the children are off to play, and we to Spanish lesson. Clara is always asked to say "I have 3 brothers and 5 sisters," and will I ever forget that the hen sits on the nest? Our teacher always has one of the "native" boys or girls with her to help us with our pronunciation, the essence of which seems to be to roll your R's.

Supper consists of soup and pudding, which, though good, is an excellent incentive to climb the orange tree while it is light. Two in the branches and two below to catch—we haven't had so much fun since we were ten, and Ellen is qualifying as a first rate catcher, oranges or baseball, does it matter?

There is little we V.S. workers can do about all this, except tell you people back home about the missions here, and to ask you to join us in our prayer that the way will be opened for missions and for the Gospel in general here in Colombia.

Erna Friesen, Clara Dyck,
Ellen Harder, Renata Dyck.

Inventory of Unit Tasks

THE CHICAGO Five have been assigned teaching tasks at various places.

Wanda Bartel is one of twelve teachers at the St. James Methodist Church. This Bible School is sponsored by the Ellis Community Center Church, Mennonite Biblical Seminary and the St. James Methodist Church.

Cornelia Franz and Helen Neufeld are teaching at the Mennonite Bible Mission, 4215 South Rockwell, where John T. Neufeld is the pastor. They will conduct Bible School for four weeks with three other teachers.

Helping with the Bible School work at the First Mennonite Church are Betty Quiring and Edna Foth. The church is located at 73rd and Laflin and Aaron Epp is the pastor.

It is our prayer and desire to help these children to know that Jesus really loves them.

Service Unit in Peru Approved

ASSIGNMENT of at least four young men under the agency S.C.I.P.A. (Inter American Affairs Committee) in Peru has been arranged. The major project may be that of helping to clear a ranch in the Amazon jungle, as an experiment to see whether it would be possible to colonize the area.

The men would work as regular employees, but they are desired by the agency to serve particularly in a role somewhat between that of the technicians and laborers; their background in agriculture and their personal attitudes and character are also values which are sought to add a constructive influence to the staff. This work offers good opportunity to help people in physical need, and at the same time, to give a witness through life and service "In the Name of Christ."

My Experiences at the Cheyenne Mission Stations in Montana

by Jim Peters

UPON OUR arrival, as a group of five volunteer workers from Saskatchewan, at Lame Deer we found people very busy on the new church that had been started some time before. The first person we met was Alfred Habegger. It was not long till we were introduced to his family and the workers. Mrs. Habegger then took us along to town while she delivered milk. As she was going from place to place she reminded the people of Bible school that was to start the following Monday. She also reminded the Indian children as we met them. After we came back to the Mission station, we went on to the Busby station. From there two of the volunteer workers continued on to the Arizona mission field.

I returned to Lame Deer the next day. Here I spent the greater part of six weeks, helping on the finishing work of the church, fixed fences, built new ones, and did general work on the yard. The church was dedicated June 11th, for which Phil. A. Wedel, a member of the Mission Board was present. Milton Whiteman, a native Elder translated Wedel's message into the Cheyenne language for the benefit of the Indians. After a fellowship dinner we again gathered for a session. Since the church is called, "The Petter Memorial Mennonite Church," Mrs. Rodolphe Petter related a short biography of the late Rodolphe Petter. Mr. Milton Whiteman led a testimonal time during which several Indians gave a personal testimony and also expressed their appreciation for the mission work that has been done. It was very inspiring indeed! Following a solo by David Habegger adjournment was made.

While I was stationed at Lame Deer David Habegger, three other men and I started reshingling the roof on the Birney church, which I finished later while Bible school was being held. At Busby I helped with the work as Mr. Wenger thought most important while he had help. At Ashland I did some painting and helped with various other jobs.

To me, the time I have been at these stations, makes me more concerned about mission work in general. With the maintainance that has to be carried on at these stations, I would urge young Christians to spend some time at the stations. This would give them a deeper insight in mission work, and give the missionaries more time to make house visitations and to do personal work. This is very necessary, since church attendance is small. It is true, not everybody can go. But as one missionary said, "If you cannot go, help to hold the rope." When we think of the work the late Rodolphe Petter and the other missionaries have done among these Indians and yet so few have accepted Christ as their personal Saviour, we can see that prayer and worker's are needed. Have we been the priest or the Levite? Or are we the good Samaritan? Has the difference in the color of our skins and the living conditions built a wall between us? Jesus said according to Matt. 28:19, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations." In James 2:9 we read, "But if ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin and are convinced of the law as transgressors, come, let us all give our best to the Master."

In the Monday delegate session conference appropriations were voted as follows: M.C.C overhead expense fund, $150.00; conference peace committee, $100.00; Evangel printing, $1,480.00; field-secretary support, $720.00; conference officers' travel, $200.00. These several amounts with other conference expenses and allowance for a reasonable reserve were canvassed by the finance committee, which recommended an assessment of 80c per member for the current conference year, which recommendation was approved by the delegate body.

Beyond Our Own

NEW HAVEN, CONN.—Two Old Testament manuscripts about 2000 years old, which were accidentally discovered in a Palestine cave by Arab Bedouins, have now been published in photographic form along with a suitable transcription.

The two manuscripts are part of the cache of 10 animal-skin documents found in the Palestinian cave near the Dead Sea in 1947.

The publication of two of the manuscripts was announced today by Carl H. Kraeling, President of the American Schools of Oriental Research. This first volume contains the commentary on the book of Habakkuk and the oldest known copy of the Book of Isaiah, which is also the oldest complete copy of any book of the Bible.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—The Fourth Church of Christ, scientist, here announced that it was severing its connection with the Christian Science mother church in Boston.

In a resolution, the local church said the action was its answer to what it termed an increasingly "despotic control on the part of the Christian Science board of directors in Boston, depriving the individual branch churches of many democratic rights" of self-government.

Leaders of Fourth Church indicated that the move climaxed a dispute over policy that had arisen occasionally since the death of Mary Baker Eddy, founder of Christian Science, in 1910.—Hutchinson News-Herald

by Peter Dyck

On May 9 I left Winnipeg, Manitoba, and Canada. I am now on my way home to Brazil. I am stopping over in Newton with some old friends. This is Kansas one of the cradles of our Mennonite Faith. I was able to observe various things. There is Bethel College with an able faculty such as Ed. G. Kaufman, H. A. Fast, Corn. Krahn, my old friend, also Ernst Crous whom I learned to know in Germany.

The Mennonite Museum particularly impressed me. It is unique. How could one collect so many valuable items in one generation! There is a great deal of love and unselfishness back of this great undertaking. One thing is sure, the seventy and hundred year old articles out of our history will become more valuable every year. "A monument of significance for the coming generations" The massive buildings and the student body of 400 make a strong impression on one who knows Bethel College only from reading the periodicals.

I also visited Tabor College in Hillsboro. I became acquainted with Dr. P. Schellenberg, Professors Redekop and Lange. Here too there were many young people with a thirst for learning. After we and Krahn had visited the Publication House we drove on to the Alexanderwohl community settled in the 70's. In Goessel we visited a rural hospital and Old People's Home. We also looked at some old homes from the time of the first settlement which are still arranged in the original way. Krahn, the historian, views such a home as a treasure trove and if he had the means he would preserve one of those homes from the past as a memorial for those who come after us. And he is right. I shall remain here in Kansas for a few more days and then fly South via New York, as we used to say of the birds early in Fall. I left Canada a few days earlier than planned. The floods became so serious that Tuesday May 9 was the last day a train left for the U. S. A. by way of Emerson. This is by way of explanation and apology for having accepted several speaking engagements in Winnipeg and other places in Manitoba which I could not keep. This is to all whom it may concern.

I take this means of thanking all friends here in Kansas as well as in the Western Provinces of Canada for their hospitality and love which I enjoyed in the many homes. Many an old friendship was renewed, and many a new friend was added. On this trip I have always been a recipient and that places me under obligations.

I would like to mention particularly those men who contributed to the well planned schedule of my journey so far. Mr. Munroe of the Emigration Board. H. Warkentien of the C. P. R. Winnipeg. Mr. MacMilian C. P. R. Montreal and Mr. Wieler of the C. N. R. Winnipeg. Also Mr. Corny Remple, Kitchener, Ontario and J. J. Thiessen Saskatoon. To all of these my heartiest thanks.

THE GAVEL CHANGES HANDS

NOW that a new president takes up the task of guiding the General Conference, let us assure him of our good-will, our support and our prayers. Being president of the General Conference is a man-sized job, and could easily occupy one's full time. In fact the time may soon be here when it may be necessary for a president to arrange for leave of absence from his other duties in order to devote full time to this important Conference work. To keep in touch with all the District conferences and organizations, be acquainted with the many churches and their problems and needs, to head the Executive Committee in its many tasks, to have a personal acquaintance with the many ministers, missionaries and church leaders, and the numerous other duties expected of a president, is almost too much to expect of one individual with another full-time job. But there are also bright promises that may be claimed with this heavy responsibility: "If any lack wisdom, let him ask of God"; "As thy days so shall thy strength be."

THE MINISTERS RETREAT

THE third Ministers Retreat has come to a close. It is a splendid experience for ministers to get together in this way and learn to understand and appreciate each other better. It was a fine prelude to the Conference. It is to be hoped that it will now become a well-established annual gathering.

No doubt the Retreat Committee will so plan the place of meeting that it may shift from one section of the country to the other, so that it may be possible for all ministers to attend over the years. The next meeting should be in the east.

Many ministers still find it difficult to finance the attendance for themselves and wives. Those far-sighted churches or individuals who make it financially possible for their pastor and wife to attend are to be highly commended. By another year there may be many more with a similar vision.

MISSION DAY FESTIVALS

IN HIS letter to the churches, missionary Thiessen has a fine suggestion for stimulating missionary interest. It is a practice already used by a number of churches. Sometimes it is combined with a harvest home day, or in connection with the Thanksgiving season. Thanksgiving and missions are closely related.

Churches should welcome such special mission days. As suggested, all ages should be kept in mind. The children in particular should be well provided for. The men should be there too, for their interest and support is greatly needed. In planning their Fall program, churches would do well to arrange for such carefully planned mission days. It can be a high point in the church year.

"WORK WHILE IT IS DAY"

LABOR DAY is not a day for labor but has become the last great summer holiday. For the churches, the Labor Day season may be a good time to evaluate the Christian idea of labor, as well as to be clear on what labors are Christian. Particularly is this important as war clouds darken our sky again. Making deadly instruments of human destruction and preparing to kill others is not a Christian business.

Work is not a curse as sometimes thought, but a real blessing. Jesus was a workman, too. He said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work . . . we must work while it is day for the night cometh when no man can work." Work can be a double blessing when it helps both the worker and others. If our labor fits into the plan and will of God, it will do both. It will enrich and develop our own lives and make an important contribution to human needs.

We should consider work as a gift from God and a glorious opportunity to make our lives of value in a needy world. While it should provide for our needs it should also be of some help to others. If it is merely selfish and non-productive it is the wrong kind of work. God expects each one to use the talent given him and so holds us accountable for the work we do. Let us labor as unto the Lord.

REPORTS AND PLANS OF CONFEREENCE

THE brief exerpts from the reports made to Conference and the resolutions that were presented are well worth our careful attention. They represent the carefully thought-out plans and conclusions of men who have been entrusted with the work of the Conference. They are of interest because they deal with God's work. They may be dull to the spiritually dull, but to those alive and aware to the needs of our time they are of real interest.

The statistics show us where our people live and how the churches are progressing. Of special interest is the item about the children. It may be said that the Church moves ahead on the feet of little children. They should receive much more attention in our churches,—"for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

We can do more than just read such reports. We need to pray for the work in its various phases. We should also remember that each one is involved in the reports and statistics. Such records of church work are either strengthened or weakened according to our own faithfulness.

THE "FIRST CHURCH"

OUR Conference reports list thirty-seven "First" churches. Only one district has none by that name. The district with the largest membership has ony two. Ask any member of a "First Church" why the name and if he can think of any answer he will probably say that his was the first Mennonite Church in that town or community. But there does not seem to be the same eagerness on the part of other churches in the community to adopt the name "Second," or at least there are only three churches listed by that name.

We search our Bibles in vain to find any reference to "The First Church of Jerusalem," or 'The First Church of Antioch." Some time it would be interesting to have a vote on the most fitting names for Churches. There are many very appropriate ones.

Jude Speaks to Our Day

by Elmer Friesen

THERE can be no doubt left in any intelligent mind that the world has entered into its deepest moral and physical crises.” This was a recent statement in an editorial in The United Nations World. Today we are constantly reading and hearing statements of a similar nature. We, therefore, need to very carefully reconsider the program of our individual churches and the church as a whole and endeavor to determine if we are meeting our obligations in this day. It is up to the church to lift us out of this moral and physical crisis or face whatever it will bring to us. Thus the church is facing a greater challenge today than it has ever faced in its existance.

The Epistle of Jude has within its one short chapter of twenty-two verses and less than seven hundred words, some of the loftiest spiritual lessons and a most solemn warning for the Christian Church. It presents to us a most vivid picture of the church with its needs and challenges for today. It is well, therefore, to again review these important steps that the church should take today. First, we need to see that this epistle was written “to them that are sanctified,” that is, to Christians. Then we should note that Jude brings to these Christians a most solemn warning. There are certain men who have crept into the church unawares who are false teachers. Woes and destruction are pronounced upon these with unminced words. We must contend and strive for our faith. The Gospel must be preserved in its integrity.

But I am glad that Jude does not dwell only on the defensive but that he turns to an offensive program or the church. He turns from this painful and sorrowful picture to a most glroious and supreme challenge to the Christian in verses 20 to 23. As in the playing of various sports one cannot expect to win without a good offensive to make points, so it is within the church. We have here in these verses suggestions for beginning an immediate powerful offensive in the Church of Christ for our day. We cannot and dare not overlook even one of these important steps.

First, we see our task and responsibility is to build up ourselves in our most holy faith. We must continue the process of building upon that foundation of faith in Christ who is the only foundation. Peter also expresses this thought when he says, “Add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity.” When a young Christian comes into the church by accepting Christ he cannot be left to himself. He must be given the necessary spiritual food for early Christian growth and we ourselves are admonished to go on to perfection. We must grow in our Christian life. We cannot stay in the same place year after year.

Secondly, Jude tells us we must pray in the Holy Spirit. By this process our life is built up. But this is also a power at our disposal. We as Christians must pray as never before for the needs of the world. Often it seems that only prayer can possibly help today. If the Church of Christ would suddenly cease to pray the wrath of God would break forth upon this world. We need to pray constantly for those in authority in government, we need to pray for forgiveness, that the Lord will not turn his face from us. We need to acknowledge our sin and come to Him with repentant and humble hearts.

Thirdly, we are to keep ourselves in the love of God. Constantly must we recognize and be conscious of His great love to us. “As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you; continue ye in my love” (John 15:9). We must today within the church reemphasize God’s great hatred for sin. The sinful life cannot be kept in the love of God. But the love of God is infinite, it goes far beyond human conception. “God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us” (Rom. 5:8). “Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another” (I John 4:10,11). “Beloved . . . keep yourselves in the love of God” by loving a consistent Christian life, endeavoring to walk even as Christ walked when He was upon earth.

Fourthly, we are to look for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life. This mercy will be fully manifested at His coming. The kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of Christ. May we live in hope. Our King shall come. Our cause shall triumph. And He shall reign forever and ever. May we expectantly watch and wait and endure, striving with all our might until that great day.

Fifthly, Jude gives to the church a practical direction for service and soul winning. We are to save people by compassion. We must love them if we would win them. We must realize the danger and need of those who are lost. We must realize that missions are the very life of the church. The greater the interest the church has in missions the greater the life and the activity within that church. Many of our most growing churches make missions at home and abroad their first concern. They first support them and then look after their own needs but, strangely enough, these are often the ones that are growing in every way. The difference between the church that lives to save others and the one that exists for itself is like the difference between the Sea of Galilee and the Dead Sea. Christ came to seek and to save the lost. He spent His life for this. He gave His life for this. Dr. A. C. Wieand, the former president of Bethany Biblical Seminary, said one time that if he were a pastor of a church once again he would strive to have every member do two things—to pray and to witness—and the church would do wonders. We also know that if we as a church follow the preceeding four steps then we cannot help ourselves but have the desire and the goal within the church to save those who are not within the fold. If we have not

Open Letter to Our Churches

by John Thiessen

Dear Co-workers in Christ's Kingdom:

GREETINGS to all of you in the Name of Him who said "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel."

It is now a full year since our arrival in America after finishing three full terms of mission service in India. When we look back upon those years spent in India, from 1921 when we first arrived there, until 1949 when we left for this present furlough, it does not seem to be a long time. The years have sped by in a great hurry. One reason no doubt, why the time seems so short is that so very much could not be done that should have been done. There was never time enough to "catch up" with what needed to be done. Another reason why time went all too fast is that we enjoyed our work. When I look back then the discouragements that came in their stride seem very small in comparison to the encouragements that came on the path of life.

But now we are in America and for a real purpose. This purpose is incidentally to freshen up for further labors, but more so for the purpose of telling all our church members and all boys and girls in our members homes about what the Lord has done in "the far front lines" of that part in the kingdom which our heavenly Father has entrusted into the hands of the General Conference Mennonite churches. Every brother and sister in our churches and every boy and girl should know what's going on in the mission fields. What have been the successes, what the failures, what the problems, what are the challenges for us all? What are the opportunities to express our love and thankfulness to our Saviour? Some people say they are not interested in missions. I venture to say that they are interested. Everyone who loves the Lord to any extent is by nature of the case interested in missions, because missions is our Lord's deep concern. Now, we are at home to tell you about missions. But how can we reach you?

I have travelled now nearly a year in many of our church areas in U. S. and Canada. In a few churches and on a few occasions I have felt that just about all adults and children were present to get mission information. But in the majority of churches I have found that only a fraction, and often a small fraction only, is present. Very often almost no children are present, as though our Lord's work has nothing to do with children; whereas the fact is that if the teen age youth gets mission information he often gets his first urge to take part in that work, and that early urge often grows into a "call" and such a call is usually a call with foundations that last. Such a call develops like a tree with its roots way down in childhood days. Such a deep rooted urge and call make for a missionary or friend of missions who will not shrink back when dark clouds of discouragements come. So I would plead with you parents please bring your children and young people to get mission information.

Then still further: How can I get information to you? Sunday mornings the meetings are attended best. But there are too few Sunday mornings in the year. Sunday evenings are fair, but only if no other interests interfere. Week day evening meetings are almost impossible because the struggle for daily bread is so keen, that after the day's work on the land or in the shop is done everybody is too tired to go to get information about our Lord's cause. And week day daytime meetings can seldom be considered, because the physical and material needs of our complex civilization infringe themselves so powerfully upon us that Christ's cause and claims cannot possibly be given time or considerations.

Kindly note I am not complaining, I am just stating facts as they are or appear to be. But my question still is, how can we reach our churches and their children with mission information? I would like to make a suggestion here. A few churches have done what I here wish to pass on to others. How would it be if all congregations would have at least one "Mission-day holiday" per year. I mean a week day and the whole day, forenoon, afternoon and evening. (Every community occasionally has a day off as a holiday—perhaps county or state fair day, a big sale in the community, or a wedding, or maybe a snow storm enforces a holiday. So since we frequently do have a day off as a holiday when every material urge is set aside or subdued why not occasionally have a whole day holiday for our Lord's interests?) On such a mission day the forenoon could be used to consider the history of our mission work as God has entrusted it to us. Then a fellowship meal together. Then in the afternoon general open forum discussion of mission problems, considering how the work is done. Then those who have chores to do, go and do that and those who do not have chores to do stay for another fellowship meal and visit. Then in the evening all come together again to see pictures of mission work; such, or something like that, would give a well rounded mission day which would not be easily forgotten. I find that only one meeting in a church, even if it is pictures, is not enough to be remembered. But a full day is something that is not easily forgotten.

As for me personally I would be glad to meet you all on such "mission-day holidays." My strength is also limited, hence I would suggest to have three such meetings in three churches per week, besides Sunday, say on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturday (because on Saturday surely the children can come) A few churches could have a Sunday as such a full day.

But if plans are made for in advance such a mission day on a week-day could be a great day in the spiritual life of a church. Let us all pray saying: "Oh, Lord show us ways and means how to seek Thy Kingdom and its righteousness first."

Relief, Migrant, and Hospital Work

Regarding the Draft

Letters of information on the draft have been sent to the pastor of each MCC constituent congregation. Any minister not receiving this and desiring a copy, should write to the MCC Peace Section. Further information on the draft will appear from time to time in this column.

Relief in the Far East

The war and tension in the East have not interferred materially with the MCC relief work in that area. In Formosa the relief work has centered in medical work among aboriginal people in the remote mountainous areas of the island. More recently the MCC has assisted in the opening of an orphanage. This work among the poorest of the people has not been affected by the political issues in Formosa upon which the attention of the world has been directed.

In China, the Hengyang Orphanage continues in charge of Chinese Mennonite workers; likewise the program of teaching boys in the slums of Shanghai continues, in charge of MCC worker Franklin Beahn and assisted by native Chinese Christians. While the unstable currency situation has made the work difficult, it has been possible to carry on a small but significant work.

In Java, Japan and the Philippines the work has gone on much as usual. It is hoped that relief in the Far East can continue, for the suffering and need in this area will almost certainly become more acute as the strife is intensified and prolonged.

A Service to Teachers

One of the MCC workers in Europe, Erna Fast, has been made available to work among groups of student teachers in Germany. Her religious counselling and instruction to these teachers is a part of their preparation for pubic school teaching. Not only do these teachers need a background in religious training in order to be teachers, but many of them also have a personal concern for things spiritual. This work appears to be a particularly unique opportunity in giving a spiritual "plus" service in a task that would otherwise be essentially a rehabilitation assignment.

Migrant Unit in California Planned

A Summer Unit has served among migrant laborers near Winton, Calif. The challenge of the work has been such that a continuing program is being planned. This is to be somewhat mobile in nature, serving migrant settlements in various locations. Among the services contemplated are medical clinic facilities, home visitation, and counselling, child welfare, religious instruction, children's crafts, recreation, and some material aid distribution.

Topeka Unit Enters Second Year

Several unique values are seen in the work of the Service Unit at Topeka State Hospital, Kansas: (1) the contribution being made to the hospital itself (2) the training of personnel for continuing service in mental hospitals, and (3) the growth spiritually and in other ways, among the workers whose life centers in the unit house.

Rev. and Mrs. Frank Raber of Detroit have been appointed to serve as leader and matron of this unit, replacing Ralph and Evelyn Lehman. Additional short term and one-year workers are needed there to replace those completing terms.

Mental Hospital Notes

The building program at Kings View Homes, Reedley, California, has progressed to the point that walls have been erected and the roof is being installed. It had been hoped that the building might be brought to completion by this fall. This can be possible only if funds continue to be available in substantial amounts.

The Brook Lane Farm Advisory Committee met on August 9 at Souderton, Pa., to review work at this M.C.C. mental hospital. Described in the reports of Delvin and Helen Kirchhofer, Administrator and nursing supervisor, respectively, was the growth of interest in "cell groups" of a devotional nature, among the 17 staff members. About half of these workers will complete their service terms during the next few months, and considerable concern was expressed that replacements be available so that the effective services of the hospital be maintained.—M.C.C. Akron, Pa.

The Church of the Brethren has reversed the technique of missions in at least one area. Instead of sending missionaries to Europe they are inviting high school boys and girls from Europe to spend one year in a Brethren home in this country. This gives an opportunity for such an individual to feel not only the impression of words as spoken by a missionary but the full impact of a Christian home and community incarnating those precious words. The Mennonite Central Committee has a somewhat similar program in bringing agricultural trainees for work on American farms. One has the impression that both of these methods will make it possible for our home here to enter into the missionary task more directly as well as help these individuals go back to their own groups much better equipped to serve in their communities than most people we might send there.

The church which gives to benevolences always supports its own local work more adequately than the church which gives nothing to others. The idea of keeping all of your church funds for the use of the local congregation is pernicious. It dries up the fountain of the spiritual life of any church. "He that would save his own life shall lose it" applies to congregations as well as to individuals.—Selected.

First Danzig Mennonites go to Canada

A group of 74 Mennonites sailed from Europe on the "Beaverbrae" on July 4. Of this number 27 were Danzig Mennonites. Previous to this time none of these Danzig Mennonites, who are considered German Nationals, have been able to come to Canada.

From a Labor Day Message

LABOR DAY 1950 finds us living in a period which is putting our economic system and our democracy to a severe test. There is a sense of fear, of uncertainty, all over the world. Among nations we have neither peace nor war, and within our own country frequent recurrence of industrial strife. Ours is a busy and confused world of business and politics and of continual struggle for national, group, and personal security. In it the churches are challenged to proclaim more convincingly than ever the eternal truths of the Christian faith in language familiar to laymen and relevant to the common life. . . .

The present world crisis summons us as never before to bring our practices closer to our Christian ideals. To stress the value of Christian brotherhood and cooperation on Sunday, while we live under less exacting standards during the week, creates inner spiritual conflict. At best, our working life involves moral tensions. Unless we continually seek to make the convictions we hold as Christians operate in the work that is our livelihood, we invite moral decay. As Christians we must recognize Christ as Lord and Master over every department of our life, whether we are employers or employees, housewives or farmers. . . .

True Christianity is always prophetic. The early Church acquired influence with the people by stirring the imagination of those who longed for a fuller life. Here in America, churchmen were among the first to challenge slavery and poverty. And churches today have committed themselves, through many agencies and in many activities, to correct injustice in our social order and to support the just aspirations of labor. At the same time, in order to maintain the degree of freedom for individuals and groups that we cherish in our economic life, the churches, which include within their fellowship both employers and employees, need to oppose abuses of economic power by labor as well as by management and other groups. . . . .

Every person has a calling to serve God unselfishly in some useful occupation. All Christians are equally called to honor God daily in love to their neighbors through their different vocations. Every useful occupation, be it that of wage earner, businessman, or minister, can be an expression of a person's will to serve God and his fellowmen.

Our Lord taught his disciples to pray—"Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread." He recognized the material needs of man. Jesus never divorced man's worship from his daily living as a child of God. He expected Christians to relate their life to God's Providence and to his Kingdom. He left us no blueprint for a social system, but he gave us the law of love by which the whole of our life is to be measured. "The Kingdoms of this world shall become the Kingdom of our God and of his Christ."—Department of The Church and Economic Life.

A Protestant church is the only place in the world where people come and pay to have themselves criticized.

*Since 20 churches belonging to district conference are not members of General Conference (12 of these in Canada, including the large Bergtal church) the per member giving, especially in Canada, is not entirely accurate. Reports from 35 churches (19 in Canada) were incomplete. Average per member giving figures are very conservative.

1. Memberships are about 5 per cent higher than 3 years ago.
2. Financial Contributions for All Causes during 1944-1945-1946 were about $4,500,000. During the last 3 years it was $7,500,000, or a rise of 66 per cent.
3. Notice the percentages of churches, members, and children in each of the districts. Canada, for instance, has about one-fourth of the congregations, over one-fourth of the members, over one-third of the souls, and almost one-half of the children.

Walter H. Dyck, Statisician

Twenty-two of our states provide a penalty for failing to teach temperance in the public schools. In eleven states instruction is required in normal schools and teachers' colleges. In twelve states a special day each year is set aside for observance of temperance in some appropriate manner. The following states now have directors of alcohol education in their educational department: Ohio, Florida, Mississippi, South Carolina, Idaho, Montana, Utah.

No interest in Missions? The only explanation is either inexcusable ignorance or willful disobedience.—Evangelical Visitor

Synopsis of Conference Reports

Report of the Board of Foreign Missions: Entrance into China and South America is difficult. There are two large areas of leper work—in India and in Colombia, South America. Doctors and nurses are greatly needed in India, which this year celebrates its fiftieth anniversary. "As to the future outlook of the work in India, it is as bright as the promise of God. When India gets over her travail and birth-pains, the churches and the Christian work should prosper exceedingly." "Baptized Christians number 3,722. Christian community totals 6,147." The American Indian work continues in Oklahoma, Montana, and Arizona. The work in Africa, in conjunction with the Congo Inland Mission "is trying, by the grace of God, to enter into the doors open to it, and accept the challenge of the native Congo-lee today." There has been much interest in opening mission work in Japan. "The Board would like to send two couples to open the work, one to be sent as soon after Conference authorization as possible and the second couple to follow soon thereafter . . . we wish the Conference might consider favorably the possibility of opening a new work in Japan."

Report from the Home Mission Board: The Board is assisting eighteen churches in Canada; ten in the United States, besides mission work in the southern mountain fields. In South America groups are assisted in Uruguay, Paraguay and Brazil.

Report from the Board of Education: "The work of Christian Education is of primary importance. It is carried on in three essential ways, through the home, through the church, and through Christian schools. The work of this Board has been concentrated especially in the latter two areas, education in the church and in the school." "Part of the work of the Board is carried on by sub-committees. Such committees include the Curriculum Committee, Inter-school Committee, Nursing Education Committee, Ministers' Retreat Committee. The Young Peoples' Union works under the supervision of the Board." A visual aid program is building up a library of slides to be used by church groups. Such sets include mission fields, church institutions and buildings, worship material. "For the past four years General Conference in cooperation with other Mennonite schools have promoted a program of student exchange. The bulk of these students have come from Europe, with the largest number now coming from Germany." There are separate reports from the schools; Bethel College, Bluffton College, Freeman Junior College, Canadian Mennonite Bible College, Oklahoma Bible Academy, Berean Academy.

The Emergency Relief Board works closely with the Mennonite Central Committee. There are General Conference relief workers in South America, in Europe, in the Middle East, and in the Far East. There are two mental hospitals in the program, at Brooklane Farm in Maryland, and a new on under construction at Kings View Home, near Reedley, California.

The Board of Publication has three book stores—at Berne, Indiana; Newton, Kansas; and, Rosthern, Saskatchewan. The official church papers are THE MENNONITE and DER BOTE. There is also a fine line of Sunday School helps, as well as some recent new publications. The printing interests of Bethel College were merged with the publishing interests of the General Conference in a separate establishment to be operated under the name THE MENNONITE PRESS.

The Peace Committee considers its biggest task as that of peace education. It has provided study material and teaching helps. It is working in the area of the Voluntary Service programs, and with the MCC peace section, as well as through the district peace committees.

THE BOARD of Mutual Aid is not a new venture. It is not charity, but aims to help needy church people to help themselves. It works closely with the Relief Board and the Home and Foreign Mission Boards.

Mennonite Biblical Seminary has had a fine growth: "Definite steps forward have marked each year. The first year, 1945-46, was a preliminary gathering of seventeen students in quarters rented from Bethany and with only one full time instructor-administrator. The second year, 1946-47, marked an enlargement of the regular faculty by one, the transferring of the old Witmarsum library to Chicago, and the purchase of the first property. In the third year 1947-48, two new faculty members and a librarian were added, two more buildings were purchased, and sufficient room was secured in the property purchased to take care of needs. The four year finds the Seminary with adequate housing facilities, a staff of six dent body of thirty, home for Mennonite students in other schools in the city, and rooms for occasional guests To this it might be added that in the fifth year, 1949-50, a final purchae of property enabled the seminary to round out a continuous plot covering something over half a block long in a pleasant section of the city and to start developing this into an integrated unit."

Other committees, such as the Placement Committee, Church Unity Committee, Committee of Doctrine and Conduct, the Business Committee, have each performed their repective assignments. The Board of Trustees has kept the Conference property with business-like efficiency, and the Executive Committee has had much work to do.

Nothing is a failure that is done in obedience to His Word.

Recommendations to Conference

Recommendations of the Executixe Committee

1. The Executive Committee recommends that the proposed revision of the General Conference Consitution be adopted by the Conference and that the Coordinating Committee be instructed to continue to study the matter under this operation. Should any adjustments be found necessary, the Executive Committee is herewith authorized to make the same tentatively, and recommend further needed revisions to the next session of General Conference.

2. The Executive Committee recommends, that elections be by majority of all votes cast.

3. The Executive Committee herewith presents the statement regarding the recognition of organizations and institutions to the 1950 session of General Conference for consideration and adoption.

4. The Executive Committee recommends to the General Conference session that the Executive Committee be instructed to designate another individual who shall officially represent the General Conference at the India Jubilee celebration in December, 1950, at Conference expense.

5. The Executive Committee recommends the plan for universal distribution of church papers to the Conference for adoption.

6. The Executive Committee recommends to the Conference that the official minutes and reports be printed and distributed at one per vote and that churches be asked to take an offering to cover the costs of the same.

Recommendations of the Deaconess Study Committee appointed by the Executive Committee:

"1. We recommend, that the General Conference, through one of its boards, which shall be designated by the Executive Committee, assume definite responsibility for aiding the promotion of the deaconess cause. It is expected that this responsibility will include recogniing, encouraging, and counselling with our deaconess orders, as well as receiving contributions for the cause and promoting the same in our conference schools and churches. Further study of the deaconess cause would be made by this board which would then bring any further recommendations regarding the same to the conference.

2. We recommend, that conference boards which employ young women be encouraged to inform these concerning the possibilities of joining our deaconess groups.

3. We recommend, that we encourage our present deaconess groups to restudy their organizational structure and regulations, and give possible consideration to the following:

1) Provision for Pastoral Counselling within the group.
2) A closer church and conference relationship and cooperation.
3) Widening the scope of the service area.
4) More individual responsibility in the choice of service — operating on more democratic principles.
5) Modification of the garb.
6) Clarification of the vow.
7) Shorter term of service.
8) Broader education program.
9) More specific enlistment program."

Recommendation from the Board of Mutual Aid:

"1. That the Board of Mutual Aid or the Board of Christian Service be authorized to incorporate subject to responsibility to the General Conference for the purpose of carrying on its assigned task more effectively.

2. That members of the Conference go out of their way to help a worthy individual or family get a start in life by helping to find a job, rent or buy a farm, or get established in business. By so doing you will please God, serve the church, the other person, and bring yourself a blessing.

3. That individuals with savings of $100 or multiples thereof invest them with the Board of Mutual Aid for purposes of helping brethren in our congregations.

4. That District and General Conference boards and committees with funds to invest, consider the Board of Mutual Aid as the proper place to invest at least a part of such funds at a modest rate of interest."

Recommendations of the Home Mission Board:

"1. In this period of special efforts along evangelism, the Board stands ready to assist financially, new or small congregations, whether under our Board or not, so that these congregations might also have the blessings of such seasons of spiritual refreshing. Such congregations are invited to correspond with the Board.

2. Since our task of spiritual care and nuture in South America needs to be continued for some time, because of their economic situation, and in order to help the churches there help themselves, it is essential that we continue to provide aid for the ministers, and supply our Conference paper "Der Bote," Sunday school helps, as well as aid for the Bible Schools in the different colonies, therefore, we recommend that Conference congregations recognize this special need and make corresponding provision for this critical need. "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Galatians 6:10.

3. The Board has launched on a progarm of making Home Mission Workers available to churches, groups of churches or district conferences, for mission conferences, to bring warm, first hand information to our people of what the Lord is doing in our Home Mission fields. We recommend, that when missions be

The proposed plan of the Publication Board for universal distribution of our Conference papers.

"Under the proposed plan of universal distribution the Conference would authorize the Board of Publication to send the church papers to every home in the Conference.

The names would be secured from the church yearbooks or from the respective church secretaries.

The individual church would be invited to pay a nominal amount of $1.00 per name per year. Payments by the individual churches for this purpose would be considered as contributions to our Conference publications, and would be entirely optional.

At the close of the year any deficits remaining between the income received for subscriptions and the cost of publications would be treated as a cost to be distributed on an equitable basis among all the other boards of our Conference or in some other manner approved by the Executive Committee. It appears that our church papers exist primarily in order to sponsor the work of our various boards among our churches and since all boards have equal access to the facilities our church papers exist primarily in order to sponsor to determine some equitable basis for the distribution of such costs.

The adoption of this plan would bring our church papers to approximately 4,000 additional homes not now covered, we think, and it would place into direct contact with our Conference boards some 150 or more churches with whom it is rather difficult to maintain contact at present."

the compassion and longing to bring the lost to Christ we have one or more of these foregoing steps lacking within our lives and within the church.

Today in the increasing intensity of the hour we would say to ourselves as was said to the Church at Sardis, "Awake and strengthen thyself, O Church." May we launch forth with new courage, strength, and vigor in an immediate offensive in this five fold program as has been laid out by the Epistle of Jude.

Book Notes . . . . A SERVANT OF GOD

PANDITA RAMABAI, by Basil Miller. Zondervan Publishing House, Grand Rapids, Michigan. 1949. 121 pages. $1.50.

THIS BOOK is written in a very interesting manner, telling the story of a talented Indian woman who sought for truth and peace of heart and finally found them in the Christian faith. After this experience she devoted herself more fully to the service of her own country's most depressed group—the widows. Many of these widows are young girls that are rejected for life by their relatives because it is believed that they are the cause of their husband's death. This story brings out many Indian thoughts and problems and would be good reading for young people who are interested in understanding the difficulties faced by Christians in other countries. Pandita's service of love and the practice of vital faith in God will be a challenge to every reader. The book could also be used to an advantage by missionary groups as they study the needs in other countries.—Eleanor Thiessen.

The Resurrection never becomes a fact of experience until the Risen Christ lives in the heart of the believer.

MIDDLE DISTRICT

—Bluffton College, Blufffton Ohio: Summer school is well under way with four three-week sessions registering forty-nine students. Seven courses are offered from June 6 to August 26. The last summer session courses include Christian Ethics and Geography which begin August 8.

Teacher placements for the fiftieth anniversary class are as follows: Arlene Rickle, Carey, Ohio, will teach first grade in Fostoria, Ohio. Harry Schlott, Lima, Ohio, is head coach at St. Rose Parochial School, Lima. Margaret Diller, Bluffton, will serve as Home Economics instructor in Delta, Ohio, and Lois Rich, Washington, Illinois, in the same field at East Peoria. Both girls received their vocational Home Economics at Ohio State Normal University, Normal, Illinois, respectively, following the close of school.

Richard Gratz and James Gratz, both of Bluffton, will be teaching Social Studies and Physical Education in McGuffey and Spencerville, Ohio, respectively. Richard Alderfer, Souderton, Pennsylvania, has accepted a position in Social Science, English and Speech teaching at the Girls Industrial School in Delaware, Ohio. Dorothy Salzman, Upland, California, will teach English and Latin at New Washington, Ohio. Galen Lugibihl, Pandora, Ohio, will be instructor in Biology in Youngstown, Ohio, and Robert Ewing, McComb, Ohio, will teach music in the Florida, Ohio, schools. Beaverdam, Ohio, has claimed August Yoder for music in the grades and high school to replace the Treadways, also Bluffton grads. Mary Lou Dean Toews, Bluffton, is to teach vocal music at Wapakoneta, Ohio. Charlene Harber, Lima, Ohio, served as Home Economics instructor the second semester at Lafayette, Ohio, but graduated with the class of '50.

—St. John Church, Pandora, Ohio: Sunday evening, August 6, a group of young people from the First Church of Berne, Indiana, presented "The Hidden Motto," a missionary musical program. The Grace Church of Pandora and the Ebenezer Church near Bluffton joined in this program.—Mrs. J. Moser, Corr.

—Summerfield, Illinois: We are now enjoying the benefits of a weekly church bulletin, using form furnished by the Mennonite Press. The Younger Married Peoples Class is supplying them. Our young people are uniting with the young people of the Evangelical Church in union meetings of a religous and social nature, held every two weeks and on a weekday evening. Sunday, August 6, we had a dedication service for our new church pews. The young women's chorus rendered a sacred program of anthems, Negro spirituals and hymns Sunday evening, August y3. This chorus has been contributing to our morning worship each Sunday. Mrs. Orville Baer is the director with Mrs. Donald Baer accompanying. Our Mary and Martha Missionary Society sent off a large package of Christmas bundles August 15. Our pastor, Henry Grimm, and four boys attended the retreat at the Lake of the Ozarks in central Missouri August 16 to 20. It was sponsored by the young people of the Fortuna, Missouri, Mennonite Church. Brother Grimm directed a study course in "The Words of Paul" and also preached in the Fortuna Church Sunday morning. —A. S. Bechtel, Corr.

—Ebenezer Church, Bluffton, Ohio: The Ladies' Missionary Society and Girls' Missionary Band held a joint meeting in July with three mountain missionaries as our speakers; they were Misses Lillian Lehman, Marie Liechty, and Lorraine Burkhalter, representing the Tennessee Children's Bible Mission. August 6 our church united with St. John's Church for the evening service when a group of Berne young people gave an interesting musical program and missionary challenge called 'The Hidden Motto." Miss Mabel Amstutz will be returning to Grace Bible School as one of the faculty and Miss Verna Kiefer as secretary to the acting president. Six of our young people will be leaving for Bible schools; four to Omaha, Nebraska, and two to Moody Bible Institute. Others are returning to various colleges and seminaries. A new heating system is being installed in the parsonage. A three day missionary conference will be held in September with Paul Bauman, who has recently returned from a World Mission tour, as speaker.—Anona Landes, Corr.

PACIFIC DISTRICT

—Immanuel Church, Los Angeles, California: The marriage of Miss Marguerite Bixel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Verdi Bixel of Los Angeles, to Denard Loganbill, son of Mrs. Jesse H. Loganbill of Newton, Kansas, took place in this church August 15. Delegates to the General Conference are Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Regier, Mr. and Mrs. A. J .Richert, Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Preheim, Miss Elaine Franz and Mr. H. E. Burkholder. Speakers who will supply the pulpit while the pastor is gone are Elmer Friesen, Beatrice, Nebraska; Henry Hederick, executive secretary of N.A.E.; and P. N. Hiebert. A family retreat is being planned for September 1-4 at Cambria Pines.—Corr.

CENTRAL DISTRICT

—Warren Street Church, Middlebury, Indiana: Harold Thiessen and his family are spending several weeks in Newton, Kansas, with his parents Missionary John Thiessens and with her mother in Oklahoma. They plan to attend the General Conference session in Freeman also. Remodeling of the entrance of the church is almost completed. Rest rooms and a ladies' lounge have been added in the basement of the church and the interior of the auditorium is being redecorated.—Mrs. Alden J. Plank, Corr.

NORTHERN DISTRICT

—Bethany Church, Freeman, South Dakota: Sunday, August 27, this church had a special missionary service to which delegates and visitors at the General Conference were invited. Missionary John Thiessen of India was the speaker.—Corr.

—Salem Church, Freeman, South Dakota: "Our Church's Stand On Peace" has been the subject for two sermons by our pastor August 6 and 13. The Sunday School has again prepared Christmas Bundles for needy children overseas. Eighteen delegates were elected to the General Conference.—Alice Kaufman, Corr.

Communism -- Antithesis or Parallel?

by Dean Stucky

AT A time when every individual and institution in America is being strongly urged to join a frenzied anti-communist campaign, it is extremely important for the Christian and the church to examine the the issues upon which the ideological warfar of East vs. West is based. In other words, before we commit ourselves, we might well ask "Is communism the antithesis of the Christian faith? What part, if not all, of its basic principles are un-Christian? What can the church do to meet its present challenge?" These questions have been discussed at great lengths by many church groups during the post-war period. The International Congregational Council, for instance, at its meeting in June, 1949, at Wellesly, Massachusetts, passed a resolution declaring the existence of an "unbridgeable gap" between Christian principles and communism; then altered it to declare a "fundamental incompatability" between Christianity and "certain forms of communism" when an English clergyman objected to the strong language. Some flatly denounce communism in all its forms and others point to a world-wide tendency toward a "natural" change in all political and economic organizations to a greater degree of collectivism, and maintain that such a change can be Christian as long as it takes place in a Christian and democratic context. The position of all groups seems to vacillate, and there are many things which we need to know about communism as we consider the problem.

One fact of which we need to remind ourselves is that communism has not extended its influence by intimidation and militarism alone, and that its supporters do not come wholly from the ignorant, half-starved peoples of the world. We need only to examine the background of the highly-publicized Hiss-Chambers affair to realize that many avowed aims of communism have tremendous appeal to sincere, intelligent people who are motivated by humanitarian ideals. Although Russia's means of accomplishing them seem consistently undemocratic and un-Christian, we cannot help but see a parallel between the stated ends of Marxism and Christianity. Christian missionaries in China have testified that they have lost many of the Chinese youth because communism offers a dynamic which captivates them. Why have we, as a Christian Church, and supposedly Christian civilization, lost our potency? Is the Church program geared to meet this new challenge?

It seems to me that too many church programs are designed not to meet that sort of challenge, but an almost completely opposite one. Too many of us have concentrated on competing with the sensate, superficial aspects of our society. For instance, we have sometimes shortened our sermons to a few brief remarks, and have embellished them with thoughts which are "interesting" rather than stimulating and challenging; we have consciously modeled our church activities after commercialized leisure-time devices; we have made Christ's Way appear not as a challenge, but as an easy and passive experience. We have been almost apologetic about a message which strikes at the roots of man's intellect and which demands that he give himself wholly, and risk all, in the interests of a great Crusade. Perhaps the communists have taught us, that even though it is often latent, there is within each soul a powerful dynamic which can be set in motion by a great challenge.

Is communism the antithesis of Christianity? Should we as a Church identify ourselves with any political ideology or economic system, or commit ourselves to hostility against another? Although there are many interpretations of the doctrine of Karl Marx, and many point to the dissimilarities between it and Russia today, we must assume that Marxist doctrine serves as the core of Russia's present-day objectives. Marx was mechanistic in his explanation of the creation of the universe and spoke of "matter in motion" as the only reality. He visualized the ideal of the brotherhood of man without the Fatherhood of God; a new heaven on earth with the absence of the Eternal. The reasons for his position were probably twofold. In the first place, he wrote during a period when the agnostic was quite well received by the intellectuals. In the light of this emphasis, it is the duty of the Christian today to proclaim the existence of a God and a soul that are not matter, but spirit, and that this Spirit has a reality apart from all matter.

The second reason for his antagonism toward Christianity was the status of the church itself. It had become, and still too often remains today, an institution which supported that status-quo rather than an institution of reform. And we as Americans need to remember that a mere separation of church and state does not make us immune to this illness. In Russia the church was identified with the Czar and all that he stood for. Consequently, the church was destroyed along with the government when the revolution took place. Even the Mennonites named some of their public buildings after the Czar or his family, and thereby invited the scorn and the distrust of the suppressed serf. And the Communists have done away with many forms of feudalism against which the church should have protested long ago, but about which it preferred to remain relatively silent. No wonder that the Communists delight in calling religion "the opiate of the people."

What then, does this mean for our church today? It should challenge us to prove to the world that we are not merely a smug, middle-class institution, but that we support a living, vital Way of Life which demands constant reform and justice among all men. Although we must ever declare the wonderful truth of the immortality of the soul, we must also remain acutely conscious of the plight of the unfortunate in his mortal existence. The nations of the West must incorporate more completely the idea of Christian charity in their policies if we desire to emerge the victor over this rival doctrine. "Communism grows on tissues made gangrenous by disease, poverty, and exploitation—and doesn't respond to the therapy of tanks and guns."[1] Christ made clear to us the responsibility for clothing the naked, feeding the hungry, and visiting the sick. Does our government, through its policies, fulfill this obligation?

The church must not hesitate to cry out against the abuses of capitalism, and must operate on the premise that many abuses exist within our system. Even though we feel that our system probably comes nearer than any system devised by man, we must ever realize that no existing political or economic system can be identified with the Perfect Will of God. We cannot allow America to lose the virtue of self-criticism.

Although the Catholic church has clearly taken a hostile postion toward all that Russia stands for, many Protestant groups continue to seek a satisfactory solution to the dilemma with which they are faced. The Barth-Brunner debates on the Continent about a year ago concerned this issue. The Garrett Seminary faculty drew up a plan to meet the challenge realistically. The Quaker proposal was a different approach to the same problem. Perhaps we as a Mennonite church do not desire to formulate a statement concerning our position; there are often many undesirable results. However, we as individual Christians are obligated to probe far deeper than newspaper headlines, radio commentaries, and popular articles to discover the well-spring from which this mysterious, rapidly-expanding movement is nourished. Perhaps it is nourished by our own imperfections.

We need to search Christ's teachings and ourselves for the Dynamic which is Omnipotent, and has no rival in the frail imitations conceived in the minds of men. If the Christian Church and our so-called Christian civilization would only bring into reality the vital, all-embracing Way of Life which we have professed for the past twenty centuries, we would fear rival ideologies today. It was our own failure to apply more completely the Sermon on the Mount to our institutions that precipitated Das Kapital. It is not too late to attempt to remedy that failure. However, it demands action and not mere lip-service

Youth of All Nations

HAVE you ever heard of "Youth of all Nations?" This is an organization of letter writers who exchange thoughts and information from all parts of the world. A letter-bulletin is published in which a host of letters are used as quotation material. There one gets to know other nationalities.

Here are some quotations from letters:

Malaya—(age 19) "I have learnt from books, etc. that all the people in the U.S.A. are rich. I wonder who is to be the poor who cleans the drains, etc."

Pakistan—(age 23) "The arrogant attitude of American is too unexplained."

Norway—(age 18) "Most time when I am listening to the American stations on the radio, I get headache."

India (age 16) "In U.S.A. people shoot each other on trifles, as is generally shown in films. Is every other man in U.S.A. has a revolver?"

Ireland (age 23) "It's hard for me to understand about Americans how they always try to "sell" you their country. What I mean is, no matter how poor they may be, or how downtrodden they always insist that, not only is it the greatest place on earth, but that it IS the earth!!!

From these samples of letters, one can get an idea of what impressions people have of America. Youth of All Nations tries to foster better understanding among the people of the earth. For anyone interested further, write Youth of All Nations, Inc., 16 Saint Luke's Place, New York 14, N. Y.

THE BIBLE IN THE HOME

The first step in making the use of the Bible effective in the home, is that of having the parents themselves understand, read and enjoy the Bible. The best introduction of a child to the Bible is to see it in his home as a book highly valued by his parents, read and studied with interest; to hear it read aloud with satisfaction. It he associates boredom or discomfort with hearing it, if the people who read it are not kindly and attractive, he will develop a feeling of antagonism to the Bible without knowing why. But if the Bible sounds interesting, if some of the passages are within his understanding, if he can share in the reading occasionally, if love, kindliness and comfort are associated with hearing the Bible read, he will feel that its message is meant for him.—from booklet by American Bible Society

According to an estimate by the American Business Men's Research Foundation the total gross loss to the public, due to liquor, is more than $90 per capita. This makes the $13.78 per capita the liquor interests boast of paying back to municipalities, states, and the Federal Government in taxes look small indeed.

When sorrow is shared, it hurts less.

God never asks anyone to go out and argue for the truth; He sent us out to declare it.

International Christian University Contest

The International Christian University is a school being established with Japanese and American Funds in Japan. It is an interdenominational project. The contest reported here is for youth who would make a contribution and fulfill the requirements of the contest. The prize for the contest is a trip to Japan. More complete information is available from the address listed in the article.—Editor.

IN order to create and stimulate interest in ICU and to provide for participation by representative youth in the presentationto the Japanese people of the roster of American Youth donors to ICU, a two part ICU Youth Contest will be held during 1950:

1. A Junior Contest, open to youth from 13 to 17.
2. A Senior Contest, open to youth from 18 to 24.

Rules for the Contests follow:

Junior Contest

1. This contest will be open to all young people from 13 to 17 years, inclusive, who are residents of the United States or Canada and who have contributed to the ICU campaign and signed the roster.

2. For the best "open letter" to the youth of Japan, written by a boy, and the best written by a girl, a $500 Government Savings Bond will be awarded.

3. The letter should answer the question: Why I contributed to the ICU Campaign and signed the rosters for peace and goodwill. The judges' decision will be based on literary form and content.

Senior Contest

1. This contest will be open to all young people from 18 to 24 years, inclusive, who are residents of the United States or Canada and who have contributed to the ICU campaign and signed the youth roster.

2. For the best speech to be used in presenting the rosters of "voters for peace and goodwill" to the people of Japan, written by a young man, and for the best speech written by a young woman, an all-expense round trip to Japan in the summer of 1951 will be awarded. The ocean passages will be provided by the American President Lines, Inc., George Killion, President.

3. The judges' decision will be based on:

(a) Literary form and content. The speech should be one which the contestant would use in presenting the rosters in a public ceremony in Tokyo.

(b) Ability of the contestant to make an effective public presentation, and

(c) Qualifications of the contestant to serve as a spokesman of American Youth to the youth of Japan.

4. In each of the foregoing contests the manuscripts (of the letter or speech) must be typed on one side of an 8½ x 11 inch page (or pages) and each page must bear the name, age, address and sex (M or F) of the writer, and the polling place where he or she registered in the ICU Youth Campaign.

5. No entry (letter or speech) shall exceed 1,000 words.

6. Manuscripts should be sent to Miss Ruth Miller, National Youth Director, ICU Headquarters, 44 East 23rd Street, New York 10, New York. Only manuscripts postmarked by or before midnight, December 30, 1950 will be considered.

7. Announcement of the awards will be made by the judges as soon thereafter as possible. All decisions of the judges will be final.

8. The judges of the two contests will be announced shortly.

9. All participants in the ICU Youth Contest to be eligible must have polled their vote for "Peace and Goodwill" on or before October 29th, 1950, when the ICU Youth Campaign is formally concluded.

10. All persons desiring additional information on ICU in order to participate more effectively in the ICU Youth Contest will address Miss Ruth Miller, National Youth Director, 44 East 23rd Street, New York 10, N. Y.

Quicken Me

Quicken thou me, O Lord of hosts
According to thy will
That my strength may be your strength
My power—your power still,
For any task that should be done
Quicken my feet that they might run.

Quicken me, Lord, without the "if"
And teach me to obey
With spirit tuned to love and joy
That here on earth I may defray
The cost of ignorance lest I stray
To lead another from the way.

Quicken me, Lord, that I might grasp
The meaning of fidelity,
For hatred is so costly and
A deadly foe that will not free,
So where the spirit of faith will dwell
Quicken me, Lord, to serve you well.

Record Distribution of Braille Scripture Volumes

The distribution of embossed Scriptures to the blind in 1949 is the largest in the history of the American Bible Society, totalling 18,811 volumes. This is an increase of 2,629 volumes over 1948, which was a record year.

The Bible Society has been supplying Scriptures to the blind since 1835. The books are furnished in 34 languages and systems.

Suffering never stops at suffering; it comes out as wisdom, tenderness, refinement, and sympathy!

Today's trouble may be the preparation for tomorrow's discovery.

What Think Ye of Christ?

TO ME Christ is actually and literally everything. First of all I believe that Christ was the mind of God in the form of man; in other words, He was God manifest in the flesh of man, or further, the image of the invisible God. In this form He was the perfect example as is shown in the Bible, a flawless being. I also believe that He was human as well as divine in that He met temptations much as we do but He had the very great power to resist and overcome them.

I believe that Christ was the greatest teacher that ever lived. His teachings on loving our neighbor and doing unto others as we would that they should do unto us, believers as well as unbelievers, is a recognized practical and pragmatic principle containing the very roots of psychology and human relations of modern times.

Christ is our supreme friend and helper. When we are lonely, when we are in pain or suffering, when we are troubled, when we have lost our way, Christ is our refuge and a very present help. When we are thankful or happy in the work of the Lord He is ever near giving us new strength and courage to continue.

I believe according to John 3:16, that Christ was the only begotten Son of God and if we believe on Him we shall have everlasting life. Christ showed us that we must live according to the will of God if we are to have eternal life.

Christ is our Savior. Only through Him can we be saved and enter the kingdom of heaven. Only through Him can we be forgiven of our sins.

Christ is the only permanent, unchangeable and everlasting inspiration for higher and better things in the world. Christ had very strong points and desirable characteristics in all of his attributes. He was strong, brave and courageous, yet pure, loving and gentle. There are many men of today who have a few very great points but they also have many underlying weak points. Christ is the same yesterday, today, and always, never changing. Christ has set forth certain principles and laws in the ten commandments and in the Sermon on the Mount which are to be applied today as in His day; they have not lost any of their significance or meaning with the passing of time. However, they must be practiced and used to produce positive results; if they are passed by or shunned they are worthless.

Christ is the way, the truth, and the life. In believing in Christ and in following His teachings we will find it possible to follow the right path, to know the truth and to have eternal life.

Finally, I believe that in Christ, the Prince of Peace, lies the only hope of the world. Christ in God, the creator and sustainer of the world, has laid down certain fundamental principles and laws of the universe and in order for His world and its people to function most efficiently and effectively we must begin practicing the simple teachings of Christ. We must begin to love our fellowmen as brothers, we must come to recognize Christ as our only means of salvation, we must pray without ceasing and we must work together to establish His kingdom.

Good Samaritan—Modern Version

A CERTAIN DISPLACED PERSON went down from Estonia to America and fell among religious people who carried his raiment, fed him and sought a brother to aid.

By chance there came down a certain Pious Person that way, who measuring with a glance the foreigner's lack of spirituality, folded his hands and ascended the stairs, pitying the poor man's displaced soul.

And likewise a Chosen One, when he was at the place, came and looked at him, made an offering, read from the Book, prayed for immediate help and marched off rejoicing.

But a certain non-conformist, as he journeyed, came where he was: and when he saw him, he had compassion on him, and he went to him, carried his trunk, shared with him his room and his bread and found him a job. On the morrow he gave him ten-dollars and said: "Use this until you are repaid for your labors, and if you need more I will gladly share with you."

As evening came the Pious Person fell to his knees and prayed: "God, keep me zealous of my own kind and on guard against becoming yoked with those in darkness or of the world."

At a sumptuous table in a chair overstuffed, the Chosen One sat alone and uttered: "I have been faithful today, Lord, for I saw a stranger and I stopped to expound unto him the Scriptures, and I gave him the price of a meal and I prayed that he might find a room in which to live."

While at a plain table sat an unseen Guest and two new friends, eating thin soup surprisingly rich, and stale bread surprisingly soft. From that fellowship ascended an evening prayer: "My new friend has made me happy, Lord. In finding him I have found You. Bless my soul."—Covenant Weekly

It would be far better to improve our actions, than to continue to defend them.

RUSSIA. — Easter services were held in a larger number of Russian churches before larger congregations than at any time since the war, according to a newspaper correspondent in Russia. The high point of the festival was the Easter mass in the Moscow cathedral.—Gospel Messenger

MINNEAPOLIS.—Speaking to the 8,000 people at the 6th anniversary rally of Minneapolis Youth for Christ in the Minneapolis Auditorium Minn., on March 25, Governor Luther W. Youngdahl, stated: "We need much more than a half-way loyalty to Jesus Christ. If Communists are willing to burn the midnight oil, we should be equally as willing. There never has been a time when being a Christian has been an easy thing. There never will be such a time. No waving of the wand will spread Christianity to the far corners of the world. It takes dedication of individual hearts of men and women willing to pay the price of Christianity in every phase of human endeavor." It is good to know that a governor says such things.—Watchman-Examiner

—Upper Milford, Zionsville, Pennsylvania: August 6th our church celebrated its two-hundred and tenth anniversary of the founding of the congregation, and the ninth quin-qennial of the Sunday School. Special speakers for the occasion were both sons of the congregation with William H. Stauffer from Sugarcreek, Ohio, bringing the anniversary sermon and Wilmer S. Shelly, Bally, Pennsylvania, as the reunion speaker. A sign bearing the name of the church was erected in the front lawn. It was a project sponsored by the Senior Christian Endeavor Society.—Corr.

—Hereford Church, Bally, Pennsylvania: Roland G. Johnson represented our Sunday School at the World Council of Christian Education which met in Toronto, Canada, August 10 to 16. Our Sunday School sponsored Goodwill Christmas Bundles and made 12 bundles for 14 year-old boys and 18 bundles for 16 year-old boys. Our Sunday School picnic was held at Men-O-Lan Saturday, August 12.—Mae Latshaw, Corr.

—Deep Run Church, Bedminster, Pennsylvania: During the week of August 6 our pastor J. Herbert Fretz conducted the morning devotions over Radio Station WBUX. A very pretty and impressive church wedding took place August 5th when Myrtle Wasser and Robert Amstutz, Bluffton, Ohio, were united in marriage. The reception was held at the church. Delegates elected to General Conference were J. Herbert Fretz, Ely and Lillie Fret, Mahlon and Bertha Wasser, Wallace and Katie Roth, Myrtle Wasser Amstutz and alternate Ervin Freed, guest Elsie Freed. During the pastor's absence A. C. Rosenberger of Souderton, well known preacher of the Sunday Bible Hour over WBUX, will preach for us. Sunday, August 13, the sermon was presented by Ernst Crous, a Mennonite professor from Germany.—Corr.

—First Church, Phidalephia, Pennsylvania: July 9th our new pastor, Curtis C. Bedsworth, was ordained and installed as minister of this congregation. Assisting in this service were J. Herbert Fretz, A. S. Rosenberger, John J. Plenert and Wilmer S. Shelly. October 22 to 28 will mark the 85th anniversary of the First Mennonite Church, a special program is being planned for the week. Much interest is being shown in the preparation of Goodwill Christmas bundles.—Corr.

WESTERN DISTRICT

—First Mennonite Church, Halstead, Kansas: Mr. and Mrs. Harold Ratzlaff, missionaries to India, and daughter, Mary Ann, were guests on Sunday morning, July 30. Brother Ratzlaff gave the morning message. He spoke about the Church of India and of their experiences during their service there. Sunday morning, August 6, Mr. and Mrs. Ernst Harder, MCC workers recently returned from Paraguay, and daughter were guests. Brother Harder spoke concerning the refugee settlements in Paraguay. He formerly served our church as a student pastor while attending Bethel College. The Union Service in the evening was held in the Methodist Church with H. J. Andres, manager of the Bethel Hospital at Newton, speaking on hospital visitation and how lay people may help in this needy program of the church. Offerings in July were as follows: Foreign Missions, $81.65; Western District Educational Committee, $52.73; MCC Emergency Relief, $67.16; and Bethel College, $46.68.—Betty Jean Franz, Corr.

—First Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Bennie Bargen from North Newton and Paul Goering who served as associate secretary of the National Service Board for Religious Objectors, were speakers at our special services arranged by the Lehigh, Johannesthal, Bruderthal and Hillsboro churches for the discussion of Mennonite problems confronting young people as a result of the growing war threats around the world. A large group of young people attended. Our next speaker will be Albert Gaeddert. Twenty-nine Christmas Bundles were taken to the M.C.C. Relief Center in Newton. Our delegates are planning to attend the General Conference and four of our young people plan to go to the General Conference Work Shop at St. Peter, Minnesota.—Corr.

—Bethel College Church, North Newton, Kansas: The ground-breaking ceremony for our church took place Sunday morning, August 13, in connection with the regular church services. The setting including the weather was ideal. This day had been anticipated by many for years. J. H. Langenwalter, now director of pastoral work during the absence of Lester Hostetler, was in charge of the service with August Epp, chairman of church building council, P. J. Wedel representing the pioneers, D. C. Wedel representing those in the prime of life and Dwight Platt Platt (grandson of J. W. Rich) representing youth, taking part in the ceremony.—Mrs. Selma Linscheid, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Oklahoma: The entire congregation met at the parsonage to plant grass on the playground west of the girls' dormitory. The evening was spent visiting after which refreshments were served. Pastor Kaufman and Val Krehbiel will leave August 21 to attend the General Conference.—Wilfred Ewy, Corr.

—Faith Church, Greensburg, Kansas: A farewell service for Ferd Ediger, our pastor for the past two years, was held in our church Friday evening, August 4. Mr. and Mrs. Ediger plan to attend Biblical Seminary in Chicago this fall. The Curt D. Boeses moved here from Fort Cobb, Oklahoma, August 3. He will be installed as our pastor Sunday, September 3.—Mrs. Otis Unruh, Corr.

—Missionary W. C. Voth returned to his home (from China) Friday evening, August 4. He reported on his trip to Japan at the General Conference and also at the Ministers' Retreat at St. Peter, Minnesota.

—A daughter, Mary Elizabeth, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Keiser, missionaries to Colombia, South America, July 26.

Conference Sidelights

Then and Now—1923 and 1950

HAVING a fine new gymnasium, Pioneer Hall, for our conference sessions instead of a large tabernacle is one of the differences between the present General Conference and the one that was held here at Freeman in 1923, according to A. S. Rosenberger, pastor of the West Swamp Mennonite Church, and member of Conference Seminary and Education Boards. He said that at that time, 1923, he was surprised that a community would erect such a huge tabernacle for one week of meetings; however, the present Pioneer Hall is a vast improvement, he added. The additional buildings on the campus also testify to the progress of Freeman College.

Entertainment facilities have improved, he stated: meals are served very efficiently; benches are provided for seating instead of planks on cement blocks. It is also evident, he said, that we have learned much about conducting conferences with smoothness and efficiency, and also in love and understanding.

The language change is very noticeable; at the 1923 conference many of the sessions were conducted in German and most of the discussion was in that language. Rosenberger said he was most impressed with the way people sang the German hymns so heartily.

Along with the language change has come a change in personnel. The grand old men of that time like H. P. Krehbiel are gone. As is only natural many new faces have appeared. The styles, too, have changed; in 1923, shawls were seen quite generally among the women.—Alice Ruth Pannabecker

Impressions of Conference at Midpoint

IN THE CONTEXT OF CRISIS

THE Freeman community has remained relatively stable under the impact of an influx of over one thousand visitors and delegates. The fact that it has maintained its equilibrium reflects deliberate and efficient preparation, which enables it to perform a commendable service of feeding and housing its guests.

In the new Pioneer Hall Auditorium, consistently filled to capacity, one can sense that this congregation of common simple-life Mennonite folk has two express purposes. First, to worship and glorify God and the Lord Jesus Christ, their Savior; second, in a spirit of Christian love and patience, to carefully and prayerfully consider and determine Conference policies in the light of crucial and rapidly changing contemporary world situations.

The Conference has been immeasureably enriched by a well organized program of choral and instrumental music. Here classical sacred music has found expression as a cherished Mennonite heritage. Between sessions the observer quickly recognizes a third purpose of this conference. It is the free and warm expression of Christian fellowship and brotherly love between ministers, delegates, visitors, and local people.—O'Ray C. Graber, Freeman, South Dakota, but attending Seminary, Chicago.

THE "LEITMOTIF"

OBSERVING the attitude of the people and listening to the discussions and sermons at the meetings I am impressed with the sincerity and earnest desire that the delegates and representatives of the churches showed in clarifying problems and simplifying constitutional matters. With great interest I followed the discussions and the presentation of the revised Constitution which showed that some sound thinking had been done. It could be seen that we take our religion seriously and that we are interested in the keeping, preserving, and furthering of our Mennonite heritage where it falls in line with God's will and purpose. The spirit of love as emphasized in the Conference sermon and the need for fuller consecration in His service to be "His witness unto all men at all times" seemed to be the Leitmotiv (the theme) in the discussions and preparations for the working of our General Conference Mennonite Church in the years to come.—Jakob Friesen, student of Paraguay.

A BREATH-TAKING EXPERIENCE

IT IS A PRIVILEGE to be a participant again after years, and see the progress that has been made. The people of Freeman have done a good job of oiling the machinery. As for the Conference itself, I am happy to see how thoughtful most of the comments are and that there have been no "fireworks." It was rather a breath-taking experience to see the new constitution pass with such a large majority vote.

Credit for the smooth running of the Conference, no doubt, was due to the fine Christian spirit of the officers. But beyond that we know that much fervent prayer has gone up for this Conference and God is answering our prayers.—Marie J. Regier, returned missionary from China.

A WELL-INFORMED CONSTITUENCY

A FEW thoughts of the first two days of Conference as they impress themselves on my mind and thinking:

Foremost is the harmony, unity, and spirit of cooperation and the Christian brotherly love that is manifested in all phases of Conference; no doubt this can be attributed to the admonition that is presented to the delegates in the Conference sermon and spiritual addresses bringing to the attention of the delegates that we are a group of Christian people come together for the purpose of furthering the cause of our Lord and Master, the Prince of peace and love.

Difference of opinion will naturally arise but worthy of note is the democratic principle that was so prevalent in the business deliberations. If a certain line of thinking was not accepted by the body as a whole, no ill feeling or resentment manifested itself. The majority vote was taken in good graces, in a spirit of co-operation.

Impressive is the large attendance of both delegates and visitors, and the faithful attendance of all meetings, that is indication of the fact that there is a vital interest and concern for information. It is a well known fact, that a well informed constituency is a more loyal constituency.

The large vote on nonconformity and a holding fast to our heritage was most encouraging and gratifying. The growth in number and scope of activities since the first General Conference I attended in 1917 at Reedley, California, and the complete change in leadership since then reminds one that we have no continuing city here to be busy about doing good, for we will not pass this way again.

I must not forget the favorable impression received of the Freeman community, the college campus, the buildings and the efficient way in which the comfort of the guests had been provided for, took much forethought and planning. We thank you.—D. C. Krehbiel, Reedley, California.

A EUROPEAN IMPRESSION

AN invitation to the 31st session of General Conference at Berne, Indiana, in 1947 was in vain as a passport could not be procured in time. But now Mrs. Crous and I are allowed to attend the 32nd session at Freeman, South Dakota, which impressively closes our year's stay in this country.

Again we are overwhelmed by meeting so many Mennonites in one place and already so many acquaintances among them. The memorial and communion

NEW Constitution Adopted

by Carl Lehmen

CONFERENCE ACTION ON THE REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

A NEW name for the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America, a new constitution drastically revising the organization of the conference, and an unusually large list of other activities are the direct result of activity for which the Executive Committee of the conference was responsible. Nearly two days of the conference session were devoted to the report of the Committee, discussion of its recommendations, and final action of the Conference on the reports and recommendations. The unprecedented volume of work delegated to the committee, and the far reaching importance of that work as accepted and adopted by the Conference, is probably the one distinguishing feature of the 32d session of this body of Mennonites.

A New Name

A new name for the conference was adopted as a part of the new constitution which was also adopted with better than a two-thirds majority vote of the delegates present. THE GENERAL CONFERENCE MENNONITE CHURCH was adopted as the new name for two reasons. First the old name was too long and cumbersome. More important however was the fact that the conference has admitted into its membership churches from outside North America, and further admissions are being contemplated. Dropping "North America" from the name of the conference was therefore a logical step.

Congregational Polity Clearly Defined

Of considerably greater significance than the change of name was the adoption of the rest of the new constitution. Conference activities had grown like Topsy, and in too many instances there was an overlapping of jurisdiction of the various boards and committees. The new constitution was adopted to correct this situation and to provide more efficient machinery to accomplish the aims and purposes of the churches, and not in any way as a change of those aims and purposes. The denomination remains as strongly congregational in government as it has been in the past, in fact the new constitution more clearly defines this than did the old.

New Organizational Outline

Several of the previous boards have been combined and their functions more clearly defined. Instead of having a separate board for both Home and Foreign Missions, there is now one board, called The Board of Missions. This Board will have two sections, one for Foreign Missions and the other for Home Missions. The scope of the Board of Missions has been enlarged to include jurisdiction over the Committee on Evangelism as well as over several other committees concerned with church unity, the training and placement of ministers, and similar activities.

The new Board of Education and Publication now combines in one board the functions formerly covered by two boards. The Board of Christian Service now will cover the activities formerly under the jurisdiction of the Emergency Relief Board, The Mutual Aid Board and the Peace Committee. The former Board of Trustees is now called The Board of Trustees and Finance, and in addition to its former duties will be responsible for the preparation of the conference budget, the promotion of the budget after adoption, and the administration of the minister's pension system.

The report of the Executive Committee indicated that the General Conference had been represented on the American Bible Society Advisory Council at the request of the society since 1947.

The Committee has given tentative approval to the preparation of a Catechism Workbook. A revision of the Ministers Handbook was authorized and completed. Encouragement was given the Board of Education to provide a ministers correspondence course.

Five Churches Unite Adding 810

The Church Unity Committee, which has been under the jurisdiction of the Executive Committee, reported that five new churches had applied for admission to the General Conference with a total membership of 810. The churches are: Bethel, Enid, Oklahoma; Bethel, Marion, South Dakota; Faith, Greensburg, Kansas; First Church of Glendive, Glendive, Montana; and Mennonitische Gemeinde, Neuland, Chaco, Paraguay. All five of these were admitted by an overwhelming majority vote of the delegation. In addition the delegation voted to admit the Vollendam congregation in Paraguay with 700 members pending receipt and approval by the Church Unity Committee of a formal application from the congregation, informal application having already been received.

The Deaconess Cause Into Focus

A special committee appointed by the Executive Committee recommended that the General Conference aid the promotion of the deaconess cause, that boards which employ young women inform them concerning the possibilities of joining the deaconess groups, and that the groups themselves restudy their organizational structure and regulations, giving attention to such things as closer church and conference relationship, widening the scope of their service, choosing their field of service on a more democratic basis, a modification of the garb and clarification of the vow, and a shorter term of service. All these recommendations were accepted by the conference.

Church Papers to Every Conference Home

The Executive Committee also recommended to the Conference the adoption of a plan for the universal distribution of either The Mennonite or The Bundesbote to all families in General Conference Churches. This recommendation too was adopted and will mean that the circulation of these papers will probably be doubled as the plan goes into effect. This should make for much more effective dissemination of news concerning conference activities and help unite the work of the church.

Acting on a matter that has been studied at last conference and in Berne and at the Bloomington Council of Boards meeting, the Conference adopted the statement regarding the recognition of organizations and institutions as recommended by the Executive Committee.

Local Wheels in Conference Machinery

by Alice Ruth Pannabecker

LONG hours of planning and labor have been spent by the people of the Freeman and Marion, South Dakota, communities in preparing for the 32nd session of the General Conference of Mennonites of North America. Members of the Mennonite churches of this area have provided lodging, food, and space to hold general assemblies and other activities. A new gymnasium, Pioneer Hall, has recently been completed, and here are held the Conference assemblies. This building will serve as the gymnasium for Freeman Junior College, on whose grounds the Conference is being held.

A Building

Freeman College began construction of the gymnasium two and a half years ago; the need for the building during the present Conference has served as an incentive to completing it as soon as possible. Voluntary labor amounting to 30,000 man hours was donated to helping build the gym. Now Pioneer Hall adequately serves the needs of the conference with its large auditorium; a lobby in which is located the information desk, mail service and a book store; and a basement which includes rest rooms, a lounge and a large dining hall.

A Master Committee

To mobilize the Freeman-Marion community to meet conference needs, a representative was elected from each Mennonite church of the conferenc in this area. These representatives, in every case the pastor of the church, and the president of Freeman College formed a master planning committee. Chairman of the committee was Willard Claassen, pastor of the Salem Mennonite church, southeast of Freeman; T. A. van der Smissen, pastor of the Bethesda Mennonite church, northeast of Freeman, served as secretary, and Hugo Mierau, pastor of the Bethany Mennonite church, Freeman, was treasurer.

This committee appointed and supervised the many necessary sub-committees such as Lodging and Entertainment, Foods, with its many different committees, Music, Parking, Information, Flowers, Registration, Ushers, Publicity, and Seating committees.

As Conference time approached, this master committee met once a week with the chairmen of the sub-committees. Here each chairman reported his needs and problems and together the committee endeavored to solve these problems. This overall committee also was in charge of a host of miscellaneous items, just one illustration of which is the identification ribbons for delegates and visitors which alone cost over $200.

Meanwhile the sub-committees were busy ordering food supplies; leveling a parking space, which necessitated buying 500 square yards of gravel; arranging for sleeping quarters in homes for delegates and visitors, of whom over one thousand were expected; and preparing musical selections for many programs. The men of the churches cleaned the college grounds and supervised a sale held Saturday, August 19, at which scrap material from a building bought for its lumber (used in Pioneer Hall) was disposed of. The women's societies cleaned the buildings, painted and furnished rooms in the dormitories for guests, and planned the food.

A Host of Workers

To meet the expenses of the Conference, most of which are borne by the community, an offering was taken in each of the cooperating churches. The oratorio "Elijah," which was presented Sunday evening, August 27, for the conference people, had also been given before the community on Monday evening, August 21; here an offering was collected to help meet the cost of the Conference.

Entertainment for Children

The results of this planning were evident in the efficient registration system; the excellent meals served in Pioneer Hall basement; the convenient lunch room in the administration building, and the crafts and recreation provided during the sessions for children between the ages of 4 and 12. Lodging was arranged for everyone, and ample parking space was provided. It is impossible to mention all the work accomplished by these faithful church members who cooperated in preparing for this 32nd General Conference, but the successful results of their work are obvious to all attending the conference.

In connection with the Conference, exhibits were on display in the old gymnasium, which was slightly remodeled. Every mission showed articles of materials from their field; each college and the seminary displayed publicity material; art work from the colleges was also exhibited. Various standing committees of the conference such as the Evangelism Committee, the Historical Committee and the Peace Committee had displays, as did also the Young People's Union. The Conference book store was also located in this building and had a large variety of books for sale.

service united more than 1,000 Mennonites from many parts of the world. The Women's Missionary program shortly, yet just to the point, explained problems and needs of the Congo, China, and Berlin. The exhibits also abundantly stressed the manifold activities of the General Conference. How quickly and smoothly the new constitution got settled, how clearly the report of the Board of Publication showed the spiritual side of a technical work. The report of the Deaconess Committee revealed to us similar difficulties in different countries, and the addresses of the guest speaker and the Conference sermon of the President appealed to us by their deep understanding for the menace of the present world situation.

We are thankful for much information and rich inspiration, which will be helpful, as we hope, for the brethren and sisters in Europe too.—Ernst Crous, Goettingen, Germany.

This article is an address delivered at the recent General Conference at Freeman.

THE Christian message is relevant today, as it was yesterday and always shall be, because it is an eternal and unchanging message. Christianity confronts world cultures at their heights, and also at their depths: it brings the world, in all of its predicaments, face to face with the eternal and unchanging God.

In our times, western culture hangs perilously on the edge of an abyss. Renaissance ideals are in a state of collapse, naturalism is for the first time threatening to become the basis of a world culture, and secular philosophies are once again calling Christianity to a battle for survival. Some great fulness of time, some pivot-point in human history, is upon us. Tomorrow will not be for your children and children's children what yesterday was for their father and fathers' fathers.

Yet there is a growing sense of evangelical opportunity—unparalleled since the first missionary journeys of Paul—if we are swift to seize it. There are signs of a reawakening in many sectors: the new era of evangelism underway in America, the opening in Italy of a seminary for the training of converted Roman Catholic priests, the conversion in Korea of literally thousands of natives just prior to the unexpected military assult from the North, the sense of apocalyptic urgency that is fastening itself upon many believing minds and hearts today. The need for pressing the Biblical claim promptly upon the Occident and the Orient alike, while doors yet remain open to us, is everywhere acknowledged by the churches, which are being driven anew to a vital testimony by the conviction that the Christian message is particularly relevant to our age, and furnishes the only adequate hope for the resolution of our problems on an individual and social level. We sense that the apostle Peter wrote to us in the mid-twentieth century crisis the words: "Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear." (I Peter 3:15).

I. THE APOSTLE ASSUMES THAT CHRISTIANS POSSESS A DISTINCTIVE HOPE

The content of "hope," in this sense, was unknown to the pagan world when Christianity invaded it. The Greek view of history, in both its religious and philosophical expressions, was vastly different from the Biblical view. For the pagans, the golden age lay only in the distant past, and history was thought to move in a series of recurring cycles; an all-inclusive future hope was an impossibility, in that sort of outlook. It ought not to surprise us, therefore, that as modern culture puts itself more and more at a distance from Biblical Christianity, the word "hope" should dwindle from the vocabularly of the modern man. Newspaper and magazine, radio and television combine to remind us that the post-war period is one of hope deferred and of hope lost. The optimism with which men look forward to the mid-century is tempered by somber shadows indeed. A subtle fear of the future, rather than confident assurance, characterizes the modern mood alert to the stale-mates of world peace conferences, the uncertainty associated with the atom and hydrogen bombs, and military tensions on the borders of China, India, Turkey, Germany and Palestine. The minds of men are given a pessimistic turn in our day; the times are unpropitious and ominous.

Christianity is the religion of hope, of a distinctive hope which sets apart the Christian community from the remainder of mankind. The Christian hope is a complex hope, and therefore hardly as simple as some of the humanly-invented hopes, or daydreams, of modern times. It is a hope which sweeps the totality of human history, past, present and future, and sees its eternal meaning, as the Bible discloses it. The pious Hebrew, no less than the Christian, knew that the golden age lies in the future: that the great turning points of human history subsequent to man's sinful rebellion against God were the divine gift of salvation and the final consummation of all things. The Old Testament and the New Testament alike pivot on those great events, even if, with respect to the cross, the one is the volume of promise and the other the volume of fulfillment. The cross and the crown furnish the content of the Christian hope. The cross and the crown are the guarantee of the reality of the self-revealing God, of the genuineness of His moral law, and of the meaningfulness of human life and history.

The cross is the assurance that an infinite distance separates sinful man from the holy God, that God takes sin seriously, that there is salvation because of the gift of God's son. Here is the contribution of the cross to the Christian hope: man rejected by God in sin is accepted by God in Christ! The crown is the assurance that man's rebellion against God will not go on permanently, that the future is not an uncertain enigma, for the crown speaks of the ultimate triumph of righteousness, of the return of Jesus Christ to inaugurate in its fulness the kingdom of God, of the final judgment of all men and the vindication of divine justice. Thus the Christian hope embraces the confidence that the power of God is sufficient for the needs of men in every age, and that the partial triumphs of the Gospel in our times will find their fulfillment in a new society of the redeemed in which Christ shall be the center of all.

> Destroy the cross of Christ, and man is a doomed sinner, lost and without hope. Destroy the crown of Christ, and you conceal the future triumph of righteousness, and invite the world to barbarity. The possession of this hope differentiates the Christian community from the world of unbelief and rebellion against God.

The apostle Peter has brought all these strands together in the emphasis on "the hope that is in you." The Christian hope is not something outwardly appended to one's life and thought, but it colors one's whole outlook and activity. For this hope stands in the whole context of Christian affirmation about God and the world; it is anchored in the Biblical revelation of a personal, ethical, selfrevealing God; of the universe as a creation of God's power and wisdom; of man as a creature in the divine image, fallen into sin, and offered salvation through the shed blood of Christ; of a future judgment, with an everlasting division between the righteous and the unrighteous. It is an inner hope, involving a living fellowship with the living God, and it differentiates the Christian community from the rest of mankind.

Do you have this hope, of which Peter writes, or are you without hope in the world? There is no other hope. Destroy the cross of Christ, and man is a doomed sinner, lost and without hope. Destroy the crown of Christ, and you conceal the future triumph of righteousness, and invite the world to barbarity. If you do not have this hope, there is no other. Everythings else to which you turn will mock you and deceive you; the Christian hope alone will endure. The possession of this hope differentiates the Christian community from the world of unbelief and rebellion against God.

And God cannot do much for the world in its desperate need today—since He has chosen to work through believers as His instruments—unless once again the church is clearly differentiated from the world by the living possession of this inner hope. The major tragedy of modern times is not the tragedy of nations which have lost all moral sense, for that has happened before in history; rather, the great shame of our era is the secularized church which has lost God. May it not be that any great evangelistic impact upon the world in our day shall wait upon a revival of the churches? The story is told of a prominent British surgeon, vacationing quietly in a rural town, who was summoned to a railroad accident not long after his arrival. The locomotive had been derailed and upset, and the engineer and fireman were pinned, in agonizing pain, beneath that hot, hissing monster. The surgeon is said to have wrung his hands at the painful sight, and to have declared: "Oh, I could do something—if only I had my instruments." God's instruments—where are they, in this desperate hour? Is the church clearly separated from the world by the possession of the inner hope? The apostle Peter assumes that the church stands over against the world, poised for the rescue of the lost, in possession of a great and distinctive hope.

II. THE APOSTLE ASSUMES THAT THERE IS A SUFFICIENT REASON FOR THE CHRISTIAN HOPE

The apostle Peter assumes, moreover, that the Christian hope has a sufficient foundation, that it is possible to give an adequate "reason" for the Christian hope. Christianity is not embarrassed at the gate of reason; it offers itself rather as the divinely-revealed religion, as the infinite rationale of things.

So many modern hopes have been poorly grounded. Much of the reason for the mood of despair today is that our modern hopes have so often come to naught that multitudes wonder whether every hope must end in disappointment. The temptation increases, with Ernest Hemingway's heroine, to cry out: "Life is a dirty trick!" We fought the first World War to make the world safe for democracy, or to end war for all times; we thought that the universe was wound up in such an evoluntionary manner that it progressed automatically to ever higher and higher levels—Come the mid-twentieth century, men seemed to say, and surely the kingdom made by human hands will be a reality; we thought that man was essentially good, and that his thoughts were God's thoughts and his ways God's ways; we thought that the military defeat of Germany and Japan would be followed by a global utopia, with peace and happiness for all. How wrongly the modern man hoped, because his hopes were poorly based.

The modern mind quite characteristically holds its religious convictions, such as they are, on poor grounds likewise. The influence of Immanuel Kant will furnish an example. Kant help that sense experience alone furnishes the content of knowledge, so that we have no cognitive knowledge of spiritual realities. It was the absence of knowledge of the supernatural that made faith possible, held Kant: we can believe in God because nobody can ever know enough to disprove His existence. Here religious faith is based upon the absence of knowledge—the risk or adventure of belief, as some liberal thinkers have put it, in an area where we cannot know. Many a modern theologian seeks to justify religious experience in terms of the emotions, or the will to believe, or

by Elmer Neufeld

CONFERENCE support of the publication program was evidenced by an almost unanimous approval of "A Plan for Universal Distribution of Our Conference Papers."

The need for closer communication with and among our churches was illustrated by Bennie Bargen, board secretary, in referring to the Board of Publication as a nervous system which should coordinate the whole. Failure to perform this communicative function results in a "spastic" type of behavior. Mr. Bargen voiced the question of maintaining unity in our organization when a large part of our constituency is unaware of conference activities. The Universal Distribution Plan or Every Home Plan was proposed to remedy this situation. Under this plan the Conference is authorized to send the church papers, The Mennonite or Der Bote, to every home in the Conference. Basically, it is an extension of the 100% plan which had been adoptd by approximately 32% of the conference churches. (The secretary estimated that 50% of the conference constituency is now receiving one of the above papers.)

The proposed plan was presented in five summary statements:

1. Each church is asked to submit a list of addresses of all homes within the congregation.

2. Each church is invited to submit a nominal subscription price of $1.00.

3. Any deficit in paying for the plan will be distributed equitably among the conference boards.

4. The selection of papers which are to be sent, either The Mennonite or Der Bote, is optional to the church or individual home.

5. The election of editors is to be confirmed by the Executive Committee.

The Universal Distribution Plan—quoting the Secretary's Report—is "one of the most far-reaching and significant recommendations which our Conference could undertake in this session.

New publications was another important item of the Secretary's report. The most recent are the Ministers' Manual, of which a sampling is to arrive for exhibition before the conference adjourns, and the revised Story of the Mennonites which has just been completed. A tribute was paid to C. Henry Smith, original author of the Story of the Mennonites and an important contributor to Mennonite publication work until his death. The Story of the Mennonites was revised under the editorship of Cornelius Krahn, and the Ministers' Manual was published under the direction of D. C. Wedel.

The Conference print shop, originated by a merger of Bethel College printing interests with the publishing interests of the General Conference is now in operation under the name, The Mennonite Press, and is gradually taking over all conference printing jobs.

Three Conference book stores serve our people in three major areas—The Mennonite Book Concern at Berne, Indiana, serving the East; The Mennonite Book Store, at Rosthern, Saskatchewan, serving Canada; and the Mennonite Book Store, Newton, Kansas, serving the Mid-west and the Pacific Coast.

Editors and other personnel assisting in the work of our conference publications were introduced by H. J. Andres, Chairman of the Publication Board.

WITNESSING unto all nations" was the challenge specially presented to the conference by the Home Missions Board. The work of Home Missions was introduced by J. M. Regier, long-time member and chairman of the board, and perhaps the only person having attended 15 consecutive sessions of the General Conference.

Southern Mountains

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Wahlsteadt of Barbourville, Kentucky, reported on mission work in the Southern Mountain Fields. A special opportunity for child evangelism is present in much of this region as many of the public schools are still open to religious instruction. In reward for memorization of certain Bible passages the children are entitled to spend a week in Bible camp, where more intensive work can be done.

Efforts to promote lay evangelism have been the primary concern of the evangelism committee, reported on by W. F. Unruh. Whereas much effort in the past has been spent in distributing posters and publicity material, the emphasis this fall will be placed on the promotion of evangelism through the Sunday Schools.

Refugee Ministry

Peter Klassen, minister at large and delegate from the South American churches, reports that although the churches are numerically strong and progressing in their organization, they still need the support of American churches. Destruction of the bombed cities in Europe, says Mr. Klassen, is insignificant in comparison to the destruction of spiritual life inflicted on the refugee peoples. Gratefulness was expressed for the work done by J. E. Kaufman, J. W. Nikkel, A. J. Neuenchwander and J. J. Thiessen and other conference workers in South America.

A letter of appreciation to the Home Missions Board for supporting workers in Canada and making loans to Canadian churches was read by G. G. Epp. Here too, churches are overflowing due to the coming of many Mennonite refugees—some 11,000 having come to South America and Canada in three years. Progress is evidenced in many of the churches by a growing self-support as well as the increase in membership. To the 1947 membership of Canadian churches supported by the Home Missions Board, 615 members have been added, now making a membership of 2,200.

A report of Home Missions Churches in the United States showed a membership increase from 430 to 499 since 1947. A special tribute was paid to A. H. Leaman, former minister of the First Church in Chicago, who passed away May 28, 1950. His place is being taken by Aaron Epp, student at Bethany Seminary.

All Home Missions workers present at the Conference were introduced by A. J. Neuenschwander, secretary. Workers receiving part time or full support from the Board total 68—26 in Canada, 16 in the United States, 1 in Mexico, and 25 in South America.

The Board recommends that continued support be given to new and small congregations, and to South American and Canadian congregations, also that Home Missions personnel be made available to present our Mission work locally.

Under the new constitution the work of the Home Missions Board will be incorporated in the larger Board of Missions.

The church which gives to benevolences always supports its own local work more adequately than the church wich gives nothing to others. The idea of keeping all of your church funds for the use of the local congration is pernicious. It dries up the fountain of the spiritual life of any church. "He that would save his own life shall lose it" applies to congregations as well as to individuals.

of human desire, or some other subjective reference, and has all but eliminated the rational support of religion. Few theological movements have so reduced the significance of reason for religion as post-Kantian liberalism.

During my experience as a Long Island newpaper reporter, I covered a strange story one day for the New York Herald Tribune. Late one cold winter night, off the north shore of Long Island, the crew on board a scow decided to put in at Port Jefferson Habor for something to eat. After anchoring the scow, the two men climbed into rowboats, and headed for the pin-points of light that marked the shorefront. They had not gone very far before they noticed that their rowboats were developing serious leaks. It was a cold night, and they rowed with desperate fury, hoping to reach the shore. When it seemed an impossible task, they leaped fully dressed into the icy waters some hundreds of feet from shore, and clung to some of the piling which protruded above the water. There they shouted for help, twisting their legs and arms around the piling to keep from sinking into the watery deep. Throughout the night they called, but nobody heard their voices. Their one hope, they felt, was to cling by their own energy to that piling, in order to save themselves from a miserable death. In the early morning, some fishermen on the shore saw the forms clinging to the piling, and went to the rescue of the men; suffering from exposure and numb. In that rescue operation the sad truth came out. All through the night those men had clung to the piling in water that was only a few feet deep; all through those hours of uncertainty, they could have walked to shore on solid ground which the hand of God had provided.

To what painful ends men sometimes go in the dark night of the soul's search for God, clinging by the energy of human effort to the piling—whether faith devoid of knowledge, or the will to believe, or the feelings, or human desire—in order to save significance for life. But all the while God has spoken! He has not left man to grope after Him. There is a reason, a sufficient reason for the Christian hope, anchored in the speaking God, who has not stuttered in His speech.

Do you know that reason today? The promises of God—have you made them your own? It is not enough that your theologians and educators know—do you? It is not enough that your pastors know—do you? It is not enough that your Sunday school teachers treasure the revelation of God—do you? You are a Christian, and as such, as Peter makes plain, it is a legitimate expectation that you know the "reason for the hope that is in you."

III. THE APOSTLE ASSUMES THAT THE WORLD WILL INQUIRE INTO THE REASON FOR THE CHRISTIAN HOPE

Nothing is more obvious than that the world, in our day, is again calling the Christian to the witness stand, in this period of crisis when western culture is in the balances and our ideals in process of disintegration. The interlude of global indecision is like one big question mark, addressed to the Christian community, asking: "What have you to say to times like these?" All the alternatives have been swept away, so that the choice seems more clearly than ever between Biblical theology and nihilism, with the whole world in the valley of decision. It is with an uneasy conscience then that we ought to feel the force of Peter's reference to men interrogating the Christian community about the reason for its hope.

And in reply to that inquiry, the apostle bids us make a complete apology for the Christian message. He has a two-fold program for us, involving the expression of the Gospel both in word and deed. That is our task today, as we stand in the gap for God and right, against the forces of unbelief.

1. We are called to give a spoken apology: "Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you. . . with meekness and fear."

To "be ready always" means, for us, not to miss the opportunity right now confronting us. In this very hour, in the brief interlude before what may well prove the final crisis of humanity, we have a high responsibility before God to witness to the world. Never since the early apostles pressed the gospel upon the pagan world was the preaching of the cross so urgent as today.

That responsibility reaches not merely to those of our own choosing, but "to every man that asketh." These are days in which the crowd in the Munich beer hall down the street may run a nation tomorrow, days in which the conversion of a paperhanger like Hilter would have changed the course of world history. These are days to read again Justin Martyr's apology to the Roman emperor, to whom he bore witness for Christ, pressing the claim of the Saviour, and reminding the emperor that, although he might put Justin Martyr to death, the emperor must some day stand at the judgment seat of Christ. The God of creation, and revelation, and salvation, and judgment is on our side; need we hesitate to speak to any man?

We are to bear our witness "with meekness and fear." There is an obnoxious and self-defeating way of speaking of spiritual things. The Christian recalls a pit from which he has been digged. The man who speaks of his relationship to God with pride and boastfulness often encourages an inquirer to avoid that sort of religion. A witness for Christ tempered by humility and reverence will best shine forth the glorious light which the grace of God has shined in our hearts. We speak to the pagan world as men rescued from paganism.

What is it that we are to be always ready to do? "Be ready always to give an answer"—literally, an apology. The Greek words apo and logia are there; send the words back, the wonderful words of life. Not an apology in the sense of an embarrassed excusing of our convictions, but an apology in the sense of declaring the content of the Word that God has assured us will not return to Him void, but will accomplish that whereunto He has sent it. Be a spoken apology to a world that is lost for words, in the confusion of its ideologies—that is a major part of our task.

2. But we are called also, and especially, to be

M. C. C. Notes on the Draft

Will CO's be Assigned to Camp?

The present draft law defers men with conscientious objection to combatant and noncombatant military service, whom the local draft boards have classed in Class IV-E. We have information that Selective Service does not anticipate any change in this provision in the immediate future. On the other hand, there is high regard for the relief and service work done by agencies such as the M.C.C., and into which a number of deferred CO men have gone to serve. The nature of the long-term attitude toward COs, whether on the government or local community level, will probably depend to some degree on whether deferred men spend their time and energy selfishly, or in seeking to make some Christian contribution to the welfare of humanity.

The M.C.C. has had in operation a number of Voluntary Service units, (see Youth Section, pp. 594-597) which now could utilize the services of as many as 50 additional young men, in various types of work and using a variety of skills. Other avenues of work within the church are also open.

Status of ex-CPS Men Under The Draft Law

Certain veterans of the armed forces are given Class IV-A and are deferred under the present draft by virtue of their past service. However, since C.P.S. was not a part of the armed forces, this veteran status is not given to ex-CPS men. Therefore, all men within the 18 to 26 age group, whether ex-C.P.S. or otherwise, who hold conscientious objection to war, should accept only Class IV-E (except those physically impaired, who should have Class IV-F, and those 26 years old or over, who should have V-A)

UMT Bills Presented

Several bills have been presented for consideration by Congress, to introduce universal military training. The provisions of these bills are much like those of UMT bills presented but not passed during the past number of years. The M.C.C. Peace Section is keeping in touch with the further developments regarding U.M.T.

No More Shoe Repair Material

The M.C.C. Relief director in Europe reports that the units at Gronau, Neustadt and Heilbronn will need no more shoe repair goods from the states. The materials that have been sent in the past have been very helpful in alleviating the needs of people, through the shoe repair shops at these various centers.

Specific clothing needs which continued include underwear, stockings and shoes for children; all types of clothing for men and older boys; and other types of clothing and bedding.

Relief Shipments

During July shipments of relief materials from United States and Canada, valued at a total of $5,426.16, left port.

Among these items were :7 tons of woodworking machinery and electric generators for Paraguay, contributed by Western Mennonites; and school supplies to Germany, Java and the Philippines in total amount of 1½ tons.

Approach to Race Relations

Children, parents and others were contacted recently in a two-week Bible School conducted in a village near the Gulfport, Mississippi Service Unit. There was evidence of much interest among the 27 colored children who attended. On the last day there was a short program and an informal fellowship with parents and friends, and a blind mother said when speaking of the race relationships, "There won't be any separation in heaven, we know, so why can't we get together here below?"

Der Mennonit Publication Continues

The M.C.C. German language publication Der Mennonit is now in its third year. It has recently been changed from a bi-monthly to a monthly paper. It is published in Europe, but distribution in the U.S. is handled in the M.C.C. office at Akron, Pa.; in Canada through the Waterloo, Ont. office. The editor is Peter Dyck, former M.C.C. relief worker now located at Moundridge, Kansas. Der Mennonit is written primarly for Mennonite refugees in camps, in new colonies and in new homelands, although it deals with items of interest to Mennonites in all parts of the world. subscription price per year is $2.00.

a living apology: "Sanctifiy the Lord God in your hearts." That is the first thrust of Peter's message, and if we miss it, we misunderstand everything else. The perferred text is "Sanctify Christ as Lord in your hearts." We are to be witnesses in life as well as in word, and if we are not witnesses in life, that is where we need to make a beginning. The world is tired of merely verbal solutions; it craves solutions which are written in flesh and blood as well as in ink. We need a living apology whereby the living Christ is outlived through us. We need not only to attack the philosophical convictions, but the moral failure of our day, for if we proclaim our apologetic verbally without realizing the Lordship of Christ experientially the name of God will be blasphemed among modern Gentiles because of us. Just as the moral impact of the Gospel was effective in apostolic times, and offered a divine dynamic for the conquest of sins, so we must let must let our light shine before men that they may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven. We need the fires of revival, that the world may feel the glow of our Christian convictions.

That is why the public message—even this one—does not suffice to prepare us for the task. It is our speaking privately to God, in the place of prayer, and our wrestling there for a doomed world, that will ready us for the effort; without that, all else is incomplete. Peter's words are words for us in the mid-twentieth century crisis, and we have not heard them unless they lead us back to God for power: "Sanctify Christ as Lord in your hearts, and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear."

Long Term M. C. C. Voluntary Service

THE Voluntary Service program of our church has grown until it includes one-year service under M.C.C. supervision. This is a thrilling thing to witness youth going forth to give a year's service to the work of the church. Ten years ago this program did not exist. Today it is a reality. It needs greater support and consecration on the part of each church as the program continues. Volunteers may make themselves available for service through its channels. Churches can give it the financial support and prayer that the program needs. This issue is devoted to informing you of the units now functioning.

GULFPORT, MISSISSIPPI.—One who has never visited the poorer sections of the deep south has no idea of the poverty, ignorance, and filth which exist there. Race prejudice teems. The community service project at Camp Landon is an outgrowth of one of the C.P.S. sanitation projects. C.P.S. was discontinued years ago, but the work has not been abandoned. Fifteen to twenty volunteers have been serving in the community during the past several years. The unit's goal is not merely the alleviation of material poverty but poverty of soul and spirit.

Various channels of service are being used to help them realize this goal. There is the family welfare program, the sewing classes for both white and colored girls, Bible instruction and recreation in the colored schools, home nursing and health education, adult education, construction and repair work, community Sunday school, summer Bible school, and recreation.

INDUSTRIAL HOME SCHOOL ANNEX.—The Industrial Home School Annex in Washington, D.C., was established two years ago as a result of the conviction that the younger dependent children should be separated from the delinquent children at the Industrial Home School. The Annex provides both temporary and long-term care for over a hundred girls and boys between the ages of one and twelve. White and Negro children are received on an unsegregated basis, there are usually about the same number of each race. Volunteers work with the children in classwork, recreation, crafts, and Bible classes.

In speaking of the needs of the children one unit member says: "There is a need for love. Many of them come from broken homes and just crave love and affection. Here we can pour forth our Christian love and let the love of God radiate through our lives. There is a need to understand. Many of the children have been misunderstood by their parents. They need individual attention, someone who will listen to their troubles and try to understand their deepest longings. The children need guidance, morally and spiritually, in building their characters. Many have had little advice and training because of the poor environment in which they have been brought up."

KANSAS STATE HOSPITAL.—The year-round voluntary service program in the Kansas State Hospital for mentally ill in Topeka really began with a summer unit in 1949. Now there are seven long-term volunteers, four of whom are enrolled in the Menninger School for Psychiatric Aides. This school is administered by the famous Menninger Foundation, the world's foremost in psychiatric research and education. Courses run for twelve months, divided into six-month semesters. Candidates are carefully chosen and at the completion of the course are expected to serve somwhere as a psychiatric aide or as an instructor of aides.

The Gulfport, Mississippi unit works in the state which is highest in illiteracy and deepest in poverty and want. Here the worker can perform a broad range of service, Bible School work, teaching, construction, social and recreational work.

Committee, lies among the foothills of the Blue Ridge country near Hagerstown, Maryland. The hospital facilities are a large residence, the new one-story 23-bed hospital building completed in 1948, and two dormitories. A large barn and other small outbuildings complete the farm-home setting.

Of special interest is the fact that this farm was formerly the location of the Hagerstown Civilian Public Service camp purchased by the M.C.C. for this purpose. When the need for the camp ended, and later a site for a mental home was desired, it was not difficult to decide upon this rural environment for the location. Thus Brook Lane Farm has become a monument in memory of the men who served in C.P.S. and through this experience helped to inauguate within the Mennonite Church a program to care for mentally ill.

At Brook Lane Farm voluntary service personnel work as regular attendant, housekeeper, and farmer. Regardless of the particular task of the worker he is an aide in the total healing program. His whole experience is that of serving through ordinary and menial tasks, of living a life of friendliness and Christian understanding in the presence of those in need.

KINGS VIEW HOMES.—The ground-breaking service for the Kings View Homes near Reedley, California, was held November 20, 1949. Sometime in the fall this 32-bed home is to be completed as the first of a "three home" plan to provide one hundred beds. This first unit is to serve especially the chronic mentally ill and the senile who need long-term care.

Eight voluntary service men from the Midwest were on hand to begin construction. To date most of the work has been done by these men under the direction of the building supervisor. It is planned to continue a unit of eight voluntary service personnel.

BETHESDA, HOME FOR THE MENTALLY ILL.—Bethesda is located on a 97-acre farm several miles from Vineland, Ontario. The director, Henry Wiebe, received some training in Russia on the theory of caring for mentally ill and had also acquired a great deal of valuable experiences in this field while working with mentally ill in his native land of Russia. After arriving in Canada about twenty years ago he again showed his interest in this work by accepting the responsibility of caring for two or three individuals at the plea of their immediate families. Thus was born the first Mennonite institution for the mentally ill in North America.

This work grew, and as the number of patients and the responsibilities increased, the Mennonite Brethren Church of Ontario became interested and accepted it as one of their projects. Later this venture became a project of the entire Canadian Conference.

The hospital now has a staff of seven, including voluntary service workers, and takes care of nineteen patients. The new two-story 30-bed structure is to be ready for occupancy in July.

VOLUNTARY SERVICE IN MEXICO.—Voluntary Service in Mexico has expanded considerably since its beginning in 1947 when nine young people went there for the summer to work with the Methodist Mission Center in Chihuahua. This unit observed the health and other needs of the Mexicans and Mennonites living in colonies and villages in the Cuauhtemoc Valley. Now there is a continuing unit in Mexico with five people serving in the regional government hospital in the city of Cuauhtemoc and three at the Santa Clara clinic. Both places serve Mexicans and Mennonites.

It might be a source of surprise to many to know that Mexico is the home of about 15,000 Mennonites By far the largest number of these are Old Colony Mennonites who went from Russia to Canada and from there to Mexico in 1922-1927 when their educational privileges were taken from them. Two smaller groups also from Canada are the Sommerfelder and Kleine Gemeinde Mennonites.A number of General Conference Mennonites came dirctly from Russia and have a congregation of about 100 in Cuauhtemoc. A small Church of God in Christ Mennonite congregation is the only Mennonite group carrying on active mission work among the Mexicans.

The M.C.C. clinic in Santa Clara, located in the northern part of the valley about three miles from the nearest Sommerfelder community, was first a maternity hospital but is now also doing public health work.

The M. C. C. Headquarters puts the Volunteer in touch with the hub of the world-wide M. C. C. service. There is all kind of work available for the volunteer to do. It is an unusual opportunity and experience to work at Headquaters.

M.C.C. is also serving the Mennonites at Santa Clara by providing an elementary schoolteacher. Their educational standard is quite low, for their own people do not have sufficient training to teach. In the regional hospital the voluntary service members work as nurses, nurse aides, and orderlies.

The voluntary service group does not stop with their hospital work but attempts to contact the Mennonite families living in Cuauhtemoc and surrounding vicinity through personal visitation and inviting them to young people's meetings and choir practice. These devotional and fellowship gatherings have done much to bring the Mennonite young people of Cuauhtemoc closer together and to strengthen them spiritually. The summer vacation Bible schools are another important step in aiding spiritual development. A small agricultural program has been started which we hope will grow to become a great asset to the people. English classes are an important point of contact with the Mexican young people in the city. Then there are those numberless other ways of serving the people which hardly seem worth mentioning and yet go such a long way to establishing friendly and congenial relations, and bring joy to the heart of the worker.

ESPELKAMP.—The site of Espelkamp is a forest tract of about two square miles which was used during the war as an ammunition store and poison gas works located in the British Zone of Germany. All the military installations have been blown up by the British army since the war, but throughout the forest are solidly built sheds and storehouses which are being converted into houses and workshops.

Early in 1947 the British were persuaded to turn over this area to Evangelisches Hilfswerk of the churches of Germany for refugee resettlement. Immediately they set up several children's and old people's homes. Plans were made for a city to accommodate 10,000 people. It is the hope of the Hilfswerk to build Espelkamp into a model Christian community, but the road thus far has been rough and steep. It is self-evident that it is a slow process to build a "community" from a wide variety of people which have been uprooted by the war and have been pushed around for several years after the war.

Since the Evangelisches Hilfswerk was well acquainted with M.C.C. through their material aid, they invited the M.C.C. to help in this project. That is how voluntary service began at Espelkamp eighteen months ago. Since that time about seventy-five different people have served in the camp, the average strength being fourteen. Over half of these people were German, about one fourth American, and a few Dutch, French, and British. Most of the campers have been Mennonite young people.

The work of the volunteers is mostly construction work, and as the director of the unit puts it, "Our work project is the tangible edge of our community witness and it is perhaps this element which puts reality into our idealism and which puts weight behind our words." Additional activities of the unit members are conducting an evening of recreation and devotions for the youth of the "jugendheim," Thursday night Bible study, Friday night prayer meeting, Sunday evening services, old women's sewing circle, children's meetings, and services with the Mennonite refugees.

M.C.C. HEADQUARTERS, AKRON.—Voluntary service members at the M.C.C. office are actually a part of the 45-worker staff and do various jobs. They might be secretaries, truck drivers, maintenance men, warehouse or clothing center workers.

Becoming acquainted with the work of the M.C.C. at home and abroad, meeting the many relief workers, who leave for and return from the field, and enjoying fellowship with various of the Mennonite groups are features which make the work especially interesting here.

PARAGUAY.—Darrel Albright and Robert Snyder are the first volunteers to serve in Paraguay with the Institute of Inter-American Affairs. The Inter-American Affairs Agricultural Program operates in various Latin-American countries. The United States representative in Paraguay is actually in control of the program, known as STICA, although it is within the framework of the Paraguayan government department. The purpose of this organization is to raise the agricultural and living standards of the rural people.

The boys are located on a large ranch about 110 miles southeast of Asuncion. It covers about 27,000 acres and has approximately 6,000 head of cattle. Their job is to operate the two tractors and work with the cattle. One of the fellows says "This work does not seem to be as nearly connected with voluntary service as some hospital work might be in a way, but yet, we have already seen the opportunity to witness and to give our testimony by our lives. When we refuse their offers of cigarettes and drink, they think we are very peculiar people. They speak of us as 'las Menonitas' who neither smoke, drink, nor kill. I will be glad when we learn the language well enough to explain some of these peculiar ways of living to them."

—The twenty-third annual Bethel Deaconess Hospital and Bethel Home for Aged Gift and Fellowship Day will be observed on Friday, September 8, on the lawn of the Home for Aged in Newton. The afternoon program will begin at four o'clock, and J. B. Graber, West Zion Church Moundridge, Kansas will be the guest speaker on this program.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Thirteen Good Will Christmas Bundles have been prepared this year. Our two delegates to the Women's retreat at Bluffton (Mrs. Wilbur Berkey and Mrs. Caroline Lehman) report a most worthwhile and inspiring stay. Sunday evening, August 6, Iona and Stanley Hofstetter showed slides of their work done the past two years in the development of community centers first at Kaiserslauter, Germany, and then at Vienna, Austria. The central purpose permeating through such work of managing sewing rooms, running a shoe repair shop, building up a library, directing recreation, arranging informal language groups and creating good will in general was not to give a material hand out but to lend a helping hand in social and spiritual rehabilitation.—Mrs. Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

—Deep Run Church, Bedminster, Pennsylvania: Some of the results of statistical survey of our congregation by questionnaires sent out from Bluffton College by Marvin Wasser and Jean Wismer are as follows: Out of 209 members 129 members replied or a 62% return. Of these 53.6% are males, 50% are under 40 years of age, 42% travel over eight miles to come to meeting, 30% are farmers. Most desired things in life? Friends-69, a good reputation-66, money-eight, service to mankind-74, happines, thrills and adventure-19.

A special congregational meeting was held July 29 to revise our present legal Constitution of 1849 and to adopt a supplementary Constitution or Congregational polity. The Eli Wismer family have sponsored another Latavian displaced persons family, they are Mr. and Mrs. Sauleskalus and daughter Ilona and Mrs.. Lize Evele, mother of Mrs. Sauleskalus.—Corr.

—Johnnestal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: P. W. Penner brought the message Sunday, July 23. The five General Conference churches of this community have been having special programs in the interest of peace. Recent speakers were Cornelius Krahn, Bennie Bargen, Paul Goering, and Albert Gaeddert. August 2 the Parval Haroch family arrived from Poland to live in our midst. The church held a gathering to welcome them. Thirty-six Christmas bundles have been prepared and sent out this year. Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Plenert were with us August 13 when he brought the morning message to us.—Mrs. Edwin Plenert, Corr.

—Bergtal Church, Pawnee Rock, Kansas: Gerald Stucky brought the morning message on July 30. The Missoin Workers Society sponsored an open air program for July 30 but due to heavy rains, it was held in the church with a basket dinner at noon and the program topic for the afternoon was "God's Geography" with Mrs. Gerald Stucky as guest speaker. The Stucky's showed slides of their work in the Mennonite Mission in Colombia, South America, at the union services on the high school lawn. The following attended the young people's retreat at Camp Mennoscah: Marylin Smith, Norma Lee Schmidt, Deverne Rudiger, and Kenneth Kaufman. The Mission Workers met August 2 to quilt, pack twenty Christmas bundles and several boxes of relief clothes. Project for August was donations for Testaments and shipping costs. Our pastor and Mrs. Kaufman held a social for the young people and their friends on August 8 in the evening. Alvin Unruh and Sophie Koehn were married August 6. Virgil Smith and Joan Sprier were married on August 12.—Mrs. John K. Friesen, Corr.

Work in Paraguay is under STICA, an American agency which seeks to improve existent conditions in Paraguay. Present volunteers are in agricultural service there.

Beyond Our Own

NEW YORK.—Announcement of the seventh annual National Convocation on the Church in Town and Country to be held in Columbia, Mo., Nov. 7 to 9 was made by Benson Y. Landis, secretary of the Commitee on Town and Country.

Held each year to give church leaders, laymen, social service workers, civic groups and government officials an opportunity to exchange views on the rural church and agriculture, the Convocation will feature twenty seminars dealing with a wide range of topics.

Some of these include the Church and farm policy; the Church and the family type farm; cooperation among rural churches; cooperation between the Church and community agencies, and religious education.

One of the principal speakers will be Carl C. Taylor, of the United States Department of Agriculture, who will speak on "Some Rural Situations and the Responsibilities of Rural Churches.

A recent project of the Gideons is the placing of Bibles in planes. Eddie Rickenbacker, president of Eastern Air Lines, has asked that Bibles be put on all planes of his company, and has provided racks for them. Arrangements have also been made to furnish Pan American Air Lines with Bibles.—Gospel Herald

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Seventy-five active workers belonging to the Fellowship of Reconciliation, Peacemakers, War Registers League, and other pacifist groups held an Emergency Action Conference at Labor Temple, New York, over the week end of July 21-23.

Among other things the Conference declared: "Unashamedly, therefore, we are against the Korean war and the participation of the United States in the global conflict, whether cold or hot, concealed or open, against Russia. This involves no support whatever of Russia or Communism. We oppose Russian military measures as unequivocally as we condemn American military measures. Atom bombs in the hands of the Kremlin are no more instruments of peace than atom bombs in the hands of the Pentagon.

"We oppose the Korean war because we do not want to be implicated in the material and spiritual destruction of our own country or mankind. We want to oppose Communism, but not by means such as war which actually promote its growth."

LONDON.—A survey of world Protestant missions by the World Dominion Press in London reveals that there are approximately 27,000 missionaries in 102 various mission fields. The average missionary is responsible for 64,500 non-Christians. This survey does not cover missionary work done in the United States, Canada, Europe, Australia, and New Zealand.—Gospel Herald the conference when Paul N. Roth, pastor of the Calvary Mennonite Church of Barlow, Oregon, emphasized that the conference theme of "Witnessing unto All Men" meant to all men regardless of race and color. He brought out that our conference is now facing probably for the first time the prospect of having a direct connection with colored people in this country. The Pacific District Conference is currently considering assuming the sponsorship of an already established colored mission in Los Angeles, California.—Irvin E. Richert

HUTTERITE-COLONY VISITED

Ninety cars containing approximately 450 Conference delegates and visitors spent an interesting Saturday afternoon at the communal Hutterite colony at Jamesville, S. D. This motor caravan was led by Mr. Dell Waltner who was the local chairman in charge of recreation for the conference. He was ably assisted by John P. Kleinsasser, Abe F. Tieszen, Adolph Preheim, and Dr. Henry P. Tieszen, who served as lecturers and authorities on the Hutterites.

The line of cars which stretched out for miles along the highway created an impressive sight and indicated the interest which had been generated among the people of the Conference. The tour which included a number of stops at nearby Mennonite churches was climaxed by the colony.

Upon arriving at the 77-year old colony, the groups were addressed by Fred Waldner, president and minister for the colony, who gave a general outline of their colony and its checkered history of persecution and prosperity. Though this Hutterite colony practices Christian communism which is a long-standing principle of the Hutterian Brethren, it is different from Marxist communism. "The difference between our Christian communism and Russian communism" said Waldner, "is just this: in ours, what is mine belongs to you, whereas the other says that what is yours, belongs to me!" Any attempt to "have all things in common" such as this apart from Christianity and the Bible is doomed to failure according to the testimony of these Hutterian Brethren.

The occupation of the colony members is primarily agriculture but they do have several small industries or skills which they have developed, such as broom and shoe making. Though it is one of the smaller colonies, Jamesville has 18 families and 102 people who take care of the 3,500 acres of land belonging to the colony, 2,400 acres of which are under cultivation.

But far more interesting than mere figures and the physical set-up were the children and the people themselves. Many and varied were the impressions received when the delegates visited with these people whose dress and customs are so unique and different from our own. A quiet Christian grace was exhibited by the "brethren" in the face of what could well have seemed an intrusion to them.

Tired, a bit dusty, but thoroughly satisfied, the conference "tour-ists" returned reluctantly with a feeling that the afternoon was well spent and would not soon be forgotten!—Irvin E. Richert

AS VIEWED FROM THE SOUTH

To a visiting brother from South America the General Conference sessions have been an example of orderly conduct and a spirit of goodwill.

Peter Klassen, minister at large from Brazil, and formerly a resident of Hamburg, Germany, has spent several months visiting churches in the United States and Canada. Realizing that the conference does not represent completely unity of ideas, Mr. Klassen commented on the spirit of goodwill which pervaded all conference session.

Mr. Klassen was also particularly impressed with the organization of layman for the purpose of witnessing for Christ.

The conference missionary interest too, impresses him as growing in a good Christian spirit. The emphasis on Home and Foreign Missions has been seen by Mr. Klassen as a common ground for uniting our efforts, although in other respects we occasionally misunderstand each other.

Although as a foreigner he might be offended in small differences of custom, Mr. Klassen feels a distinct positive influence of our conference work.

Education is another aspect of our culture which draws the attention of a visitor. Yet, Mr. Klassen suggests that we need to remember that "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom."

When asked for other critical observations Mr. Klassen said somewhat jokingly but perhaps also truthfully "die Americaner sind vieleicht doch schlecht zu bekehren," i.e., the Americans are, after all, hard to change.

Last of all, he has appreciated the Mennonite hospitality and their immediate acceptance of a visitor, and Mr. Klassen wishes to thank them for this.—Elmer Neufeld.

Foreign Students Arrive

Fourteen Mennonite foreign students arrived between August 19 and 23, en route to the schools where they will study during the next school year. The names of these students, countries from which they come, and the college where they are going are:

From France: Willy Peterschmitt, to Goshen; From Germany: Karlheinz Arnold, to Goshen; Ernst Cremer and Karl van der Smissen, to Bethel; Gerhard Dyck to Hesston; Adalbert Goertz to Upland; Rudolf Kisters to Bluffton; Marie Lichti and Elizabeth Musselmann to Tabor; Gerhard Schmutz to Messiah Bible College; Hans Wiehler to Eastern Mennonite College; Christa Hege to Freeman; From Italy: Franco Cosco to Mennonite Biblical Seminary; From Ethiopia: Paul Vergis to Goshen. The student program is sponsored by the Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges, with M.C.C. assisting in various ways.

STUDENT AND ALUMNI FELLOWSHIP

A FELLOWSHIP service for all students and graduates was held at Freeman Park on Tuesday afternoon, August 29, at 4:30. Don Smucker of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago, spoke to the group on trends in education; this message was preceded by informal fellowship.

No longer is it a question of whether or not to get an education, Rev. Smucker stated, but what kind. Moreover the educational level is rising, he added; school teachers must have more degrees now than formerly. An interesting fact to notice is that the leaders of our conference are college graduates. Great universities, on the other hand, he emphasized, have become death factories because their science departments are so closely connected with the work on the atom bomb; people are coming to fear the universities.

The service was sponsored by the Inter-School Committee of the Board of Education of the Conference; Ronald von Riesen, executive secretary of the Board of Education, was in charge of the meeting.—Alice Ruth Pannabecker.

What Impressed Me About Conference

WHAT impressed me most at Freeman was the way in which the community prepared to receive the General Conference. Not only were the preparations for our physical comfort complete, but there was also evidence of a deeper, spiritual readiness. Conference guests were made to feel that they could be at home in Freeman and in the surrounding community. Opportunities for fellowship were provided, the doors of the local churches were opened, facilites for auxiliary meetings were made available—in short nothing was overlooked.

Surely the local committee deserves a vote of thanks for their part in making it possible for the conference to operate in a smooth and efficient manner.

—Eldon W. Graber
Registrar, Bethel College

AT THIS session one was impressed with the strong leadership that is coming forward from the younger circle of church workers. A very heartening thing was that these young leaders believe in a vital Christianity. This was evident by the way they stressed evangelism and witnessing and real Christian service. Also were they very outspoken in their opposition to war. The local Freeman community deserves much credit in making the conference so pleasant and successful. It was wonderful the way the meals were served. As a whole the conference was an inspiration to those who attended.

—J. M. Regier
Johannestal Church
Hillsboro, Kansas

ON arriving at Freeman, and on the campus of Freeman Junior College, one could notice right away that there must have been a very good spirit of cooperation. The local community must have put forth its best efforts, even during the busy season of the year, to get everything in working order.

The harmony has been excellent, even though some discordant notes appeared; but in good music sharps and flats do appear. And so the power of atomic Christian Love prevailed.

In discussions at the regular meetings, it was conspicuous that not a single woman's voice was heard. Do we have too much "Men in Mennonite?"

—A. M. Lohrentz, M.D.
McPherson, Kansas

WHILE attending this General Conference I have been gratified by the very evident spirit of good will which has permeated the sessions. It is as though we had here solidly unified our forces behind the central theme of Witnessing. Surely there is much more to bring us together, in our mission to witness for Christ, than there is to divide us. I for one am happy to say that it has been a time of strengthening one's faith, and I will leave the Conference with a feeling of greater confidence in the work of God through our Church.

—Arthur Thiessen
Senior Medical Student
Chicago, Illinois

THAT THIS CONFERENCE chose to place emphasis on evangelism and that the theme, "Witnessing onto all men," was constantly kept in the foreground, seems to me to be very timely indeed. That brotherly love prevailed in the discussing and adopting of the new constitution is cause for much gratitude. But in my opinion the high-note of the conference is found in the fact that in all discussions and resolutions there was a deep concern to preserve or return to sound doctrine—there was a consciousness that we can have an elaborate organization of boards and committees and yet not have a message for a sin-sick world. Fully aware of the tragic fact that many churches of our country find themselves in just that situation, the new constitution provides, among other things, for a holding fast to "nonconformity to the world." That sound organization was coupled with this apostolic and anabaptist emphasis seems to me to be the greatest achievement of the conference and will, with God's help, enable us to bring Christ unto all men.

—Peter J. Dyck
Pastor, Eden Church
Moundridge, Kansas

THE REFORMATION IN MENNO SIMONS

My heart trembled in my body. I prayed to God with sighs and tears, that he would give to me, a troubled sinner, the gift of his grace.... In my weakness I feared God; I sought out the pious, and though they were few in number, I found some who were zealous and maintained the truth. I conversed with the erring, and through the aid and power of God, with His word, reclaimed some from the snares of damnation and gained them to Christ....

Behold, thus my reader, the God of mercy, through the benign influence of His abounding grace, exerted upon me, in my heart, a miserable sinner, produced in me a new mind, humbled me in his fear, taught me to know myself in part, turned me from the way of death and graciously called me into the narrow path of life, to the communion of His saints. To him be praise forever more. AMEN.—Menno Simons

PRAISES OR PHRASES

WE CAN LEARN lessons from mistakes. In a recent volume of sermons, the reader may be startled to find this given as a quotation from the Psalms: "Thy vows are upon me, O God. I will render phrases unto Thee." But a check with Psalm 56: 12 shows that the correct reading is "I will render praises unto Thee."

But there may be much truth in the mistaken rendering: how many times we try to fulfill our vows by simply rendering phrases—pious phrases that do not come from the heart nor lead to action. Where we have been guilty, let us correct ourselves and render sincere praises unto our God. Gratitude is a great Christian art.

Further Highlights of Conference

First Missionary to Japan

GREAT MISSION RALLY

Conference action on a mission field in Japan, and the Mission Rally on the closing day of the conference, reached their height when Leonore Friesen was presented as the first missionary for this field. Miss Friesen, member of the First Church, Newton, Kansas, is a graduate of Bethel College, and the Biblical Seminary in New York, and has been teaching at Grace Bible Institute. Further active interest in this field was shown by the announcement that two churches had offered to provide financial support for a missionary to Japan.

The large number of veteran missionaries present at the Mission Rally on Wednesday evening was evidence of a genuine interest in witnessing which must result in personal action. After the reading of the opening scripture by Kenneth Bauman, chairman of the YPU, short talks on various mission fields were given by several of the missionaries present. Howard G. Nyce, member of the mission board presided. Special selections of song were presented by a mixed college choir, under the direction of Marvin Dirks.

Arthur Friesen, missionary to the Arapahoe Indians told the group that 79 years ago this project was begun as the first conference mission field. They are now in need of workers to help with the Bible schools, boarding schools, retreats and hospital work.

Anna Berg, missionary to the Hopi Indians, pled for support to start a much-needed mission school. Would we be willing to contribute five cents a year—just another cup of coffee?

Alfred Habegger, missionary to the Indians in Montana, expressed his thanks for the help of voluntary service workers, prayers of interested people, and the grace of God. Many changes have taken place since 100 years ago when the Indians were still on the warpath.

Missionary Brown challenged us to renewed efforts in China. Although some sections are officially closed to new personnel, many opportunities for evangelism still exist in China.

George B. Neufeld, who, with his wife, was the first General Conference worker sent to the Belgian Congo, eight years ago, reported that many natives are accepting Christ, and asked for more help to minister to these converts. The African is hungry, and we must feed him something of spiritual value.

Gerald Stucky, missionary to Colombia pled for special intercession on behalf of the 3000 baptized Christians, who are being severely persecuted by the Roman Catholic Church. A bloody chapter, similar to Reformation times, is being written in the history of Colombia. An intercessory prayer was offered by Sam Goering for Mr. and Mrs. Stucky who are now returning to their work with leprous children and the task of evangelism.

W. C. Voth, missionary to China, reported on the possibilities for mission work which he noted in his month's visit to Japan. Despite the long occupation, the Japanese are a peace loving people. Although the Japanese were very militaristic, the total defeat seems to have changed them a great deal. However, we must remember, Mr. Voth suggests, that almost every Japanese man between the ages of 15 and 50 has been in uniform. The Japanese differs from the Chinese in his quick temper and rigid determination when decided. Many of the Japanese expected death to follow the U. S. invasion; thanks to General MacArthur the invasion has been a relatively good one.

The common people in Japan want war no longer. Japan is looking forward to something new and different. Communism is making a bid for youth's interest in a new way of life. A new combination of Shintoism and Budhism is also bidding for acceptance. Above all, Christianity must be offered as the only Way to these seeking people. The tremendous possibilities in this country were shown by an illustration of a young man in Tokyo who began a small Sunday School. This group continued to grow until it totaled some 250 students, who were at the time raising money to build a church. The church in Japan is alive, but they need help from other Christian groups—especially young pastors and leaders.

A. E. Kreider, Chairman of the Foreign Mission Board led the group in a period of consecration to climax the conference session. The need in the world had been continually depicted—men is without Christ—

Pioneer Hall at Freeman Junior College was filled for every session of Conference; for great mass meetings additional hundreds gathered in the basement and outside to hear programs through amplifying facilities.

9416

All the way from Pennsylvania came Frank Kellar and Emil Godshall representing with twenty-two others the Zion Church, Souderton. "Where do we register?"

9417

Almost 1,400 delegates and guests made their way through this line to register, get their identification badges (blue for delegates, white for guests), and their lodging assignments; while waiting in line they observed elaborate displays of various Conference activities.

without Christ men is lost—this is a lost generation. Our purpose is to proclaim the one who so loved us that he gave his life for us. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."

Bring Evangelism Into Education

BOARD OF EDUCATION

THE Board of Education reports were climaxed Tuesday evening in a soul-stirring challenge to unite the Christian education movement of the 20th century with the evangelism movement which preceded it. Speaking on "Current Trends in Christian Education," Ronald von Riesen stated that "both the Christian educators and the evangelist have begun to see that they need each other," and that the world is large enough for both. After education has done its part the central need is for a decision to follow Christ. All Christian education should be evangelism and all evangelism should be education. The speaker suggested that we must live and teach as though we would be here a thousand years, yet we must have a warm evangelism as though we would be here only a little longer.

Upon the absence of Chairman Edmund G. Kaufman who has recently left for Egypt, A. S. Rosenberger, a senior member of the Board, introduced the work of Christian education.

With a total of 1,794 students enrolled in General Conference schools, and a Sunday School enrollment of 37,400, the work of Christian education is certainly a major concern of our organization. The Board of Christian education places special emphasis on the two areas suggested above—education in the schools and in the churches. The fact that 1,021 Sunday School members united with the church during the last year indicates again that the Sunday School is the primary source of church membership. These and other statistics were reported by Ronald von Riesen, executive secretary employed by the board.

Educational work in the church consists largely in publishing teaching materials. Seventy-seven per cent of the churches reporting indicated that they were using some conference materials. A large majority of the 107 churches conducting Summer Bible Schools—with an enrollment of 5,845 children—used the Conference edition of Herald Press materials. The Curriculum Committee has continued to evaluate and choose writers and editors for the Sunday School quarterlies, The Junior Messenger, and special publications; projects to be completed during the next few years are the Junior Hymnal and the Catechism Handbook.

The Young Peoples Union, and other Young People's organizations are also promoted by the Board of Education. Other projects carried on for the churches have been the Ministers' Retreat, Visual Education Service, and the Christian Education Emphasis Period.

In the realm of our Conference Schools, the Board of Education has taken direct action in promoting such programs as the Foreign Student Exchange, C. P. S. rehabilitation, Nursing Education, and the Teachers' Consecration Service. During the period from 1946 to 1950 approximately 75 students from Europe, Puerto Rico and South America have been in our conference schools. Some 155 C. P. S. men have been aided by payment of tuition, involving a total expense of some $50,000. A total of 94 students were enrolled in 42 institutions for the training of nurses. This includes 24 at the Bethel Deaconness Hospital, Newton, Kansas.

Reports of the various colleges seem to indicate a declining enrollment on one hand, but definite progress in the improvement of physical plants and faculty preparation on the other. The academies report that an increasing number of our young people are availing themselves of the opportunity to attend church schools. One new school has been added to the conference during the interim period, with the opening of the Officers elected to the new Board of Education and Publication are D. C. Wedel '59, George G. Dick '59, Don E. Smucker '59, Paul Shelly '59, and Edmund J. Miller '53 (filling an unexpired term). Members that will continue their positions from the former Board of Education are L. L. Ramseyer '53, I. I. Friesen '56, and Erland Waltner '56. Those continuing from the Board of Publication are H. J. Andres '53, Harold Gross '56, J. G. Rempel '53, and O. J. Sommer '56.—Elmer Neufeld.

C. O. -- Symbol of Religious Liberty

PEACE COMMITTEE

DELEGATES attending the 32nd triennial conference of the General Conference Mennonites reaffirmed their faith in Christian nonresistance and nonparticipation in military service in resolutions adopted by the Conference delegates.

One of the resolutions urged ministers "to help our people come to a clear understanding of the Will of God as revealed by Christ regarding the sinfulness of war, so that our people will be constrained by the love of God not to participate in war and war-making efforts, but that they will hold to the spirit of love and of non-violence in all relationships."

Under the Selective Service Act, Mennonite young men are among the conscientious objectors exempt from military service by reason of their religious views. Although the Mennonites had one of the largest bodies of objectors in World War II, the delegates were told that increasing numbers of objectors are coming from the large denominations such as Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, and Disciples of Christ.

The Conference was told that conscientious objectors stand as the most visible symbol of religious liberty in America. In no other area of national life has Congress taken such care to protect religious beliefs.

In another resolution the Conference called upon members to "hold themselves clear of the pressure and emotions of a war situation, and . . . to hold attitudes and opinions in keeping with the highest Christian principles."

The Conference gave full support to the Voluntary Service Program operated by the church primarily for young people who give a period of three months to a year or more.

In a resolution originally offered from the floor the Conference pledged moral and spiritual support "to those who because of Christian conscience encounter imprisonment and other difficulties." Several young Mennonites in the U. S. and abroad have suffered imprisonment for refusing military service.—Paul L. Goering

Oratorio at Conference

THE oratorio, Elijah, by Felix Mendelssohn, was presented Sunday evening by the Freeman Community Conference Chorus for the inspiration and appreciation of conference guests and delegates. The 80-voice chorus was under the direction of Elvera Voth, instructor in music at Freeman Junior College.

Soloists were Warren Erickson, Baritone; Gertrude Dyck, Contralto; and Christine Miller, Soprano. The chorus was accompanied by Janis Krehbiel, playing the new pipe organ recently installed in Pioneer Hall.

Rupert Hohman playing the violin, accompanied by Randolin Hohman, furnished music for the audience between the first and second part of the oratorio.

A presentation of the Elijah on Monday, August 21, was intended to attract local people and thus provide possibility for greater attendance of guests and delegates on Sunday evening. However, the Hall was again crowded to capacity for this second rendition.—Elmer Neufeld.

THE CHURCH OF THE BRETHREN has reversed the technique of misions in at least one area. Instead of sending missionaries to Europe they are inviting high school boys and girls from Europe to spend one year in a Brethren home in this country. This gives an opportunity for such an individual to feel not only the impression of words as spoken by a missionary but the full impact of a Christian home and community incarnating those precious words. The Mennonite Central Committee has a somewhat similar program in bringing agricultural trainees for work on American farms. One has the impression that both of these methods will make it possible for our homes here to enter into the missionary task more directly as well as help these individuals go back to their own groups much better equipped to serve in their communities than most people we might send there.

Resolutions and D

A LIST OF MAJOR ITEMS OF BUSINESS DECIDED AT THE GENERAL CONFERENCE MEETING AT FREEMAN, SOUTH DAKOTA NOT APPEARING IN THE PRINTED REPORTS

(UNOFFICIAL REPORT)

New Churches Unite

1. The following churches were accepted into the Conference: Bethel Mennonite Church, Enid, Oklahoma; Bethel Mennonite Church, Marion, South Dakota; Faith Mennonite Church, Greensburg, Kansas; First Mennonite Church, Glendive, Montana; Mennoniten Gemeinde, Neuland. Chaco, Paraguay. The Volendam Church to be formally accepted by the Executive Committee after appropriate application.

2. Resolution presented by resolution committee: that in response to the presentation of the challenge of our present hour for evangelism given by our guest speaker, Carl F. H. Henry, and our President, J. N. Smucker, we would urge upon all our delegates and churches of our conference a serious consideration of the urgency given, leading to a releasing and promoting of the spirit of Evangelism, through an active and continuous program of spreading the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, under the power of the Holy Spirit.

4. It was resolved that the matter of sending a representative to Europe for the purpose of augmenting the materials of the Historical Committee be studied by the committee and a plan of procedure be submitted to the Council of Boards Meeting at its next annual session following this conference session for decision and action.

Landmark

5. Resolution presented by resolution committee: that in view of the heritage we have as Mennonites, and in view of the importance of the Germantown Mennonite Church in this heritage, and in view of the need of preserving and spreading this faithfully, we resolve that the Conference take immediate steps through the Historical Committee, to work with the local congregation and the Eastern District Conference, in establishing said place as a lasting tangible manifestation of our faith, promoting it as an historic shrine of general public interest through the various channels available.

6. In recognition of the enormous amount of work on the part of the coordination committee in the preparation of the proposed constitution be it resolved that the appreciation of the Conference be hereby officially expressed.

7. A number of resolutions were adopted making provision for the transition from the old constitution to the revised constitution.

8. Resolved that the Executive Committee appoint the members of the Co-ordinating Committee.

9. Resolved that the Conference send Christian greetings with Dr. and Mrs. Ernst Crous to their homeland and friends. (Germany.)

10. Resolved that the Conference send its greetings to France with Andrew Goll.

Universal Subscription

11. Recommendation of the Board of Publication regarding universal subscription plan: recognizing, that in order to achieve the objectives of our Conference we must have increasingly closer communiction between and among our member churches, we authorize the distribution of THE MENNONITE and/or DER BOTE in the homes of our Conference as follows:

(a) Each church is asked to submit a list of addresses covering every home in the church.

(b) Each church is asked to contribute a nominal subscription price, $1.00 per home per year being suggested.

(c) Any difference between the total funds thus received through contributions and the total publication expense is to be distributed to the other boards of our Conference on some equitable basis, as approved by the Executive Committee.

(d) The selection of the papers which are to be sent to any individual home shall be optional either with the church or the individual home.

(e) The election of the editor of either church paper shall be confirmed by the Executive Committee of our Conference.

12. It was resolved that the Conference express a vote of thanks to the Board of Publication for their excellent work with limited financial support, and that we give increased loyalty to this important phase of our Conference program.

13. It was resolved that, included in a vigorous program of stewardship education, our leaders encouarge, promote and solicit those who are able to do so to invest largely in our Mennonite enterprises and institutions in annuities and wills.

The Greatest Power

In a time when our country is again in a state of war, although there has been no official declaration of war, we urge our people to hold fast to their convictions. We believe that the power of God is the greatest power in the world, and that this power is Love as personified in Jesus Christ. The ideal of love as taught and lived by Christ is not a vague theory to be believed in peacetime and cast aside in time of stress and war when it is most needed; it is the most durable power in the world. The Apostle Paul says that "now abide faith, hope, and love, but the greatest of these is love." The primary question is not whether we succeed or whether we fail, but that we keep ourselves in the love of God, and leave all consequences to Him. We may lose our lives by holding true to the principles of love, but so did our Master. Our Peace Committee therefore has these recommendations to the Conference: (Introduction to No. 14-19)

14. That our Conference re-affirm its position relative to peace, war, and military service adopted at Souderton in 1941 as that which continues to be our official position.

15. That we urge our ministers to help our people come to a clear understanding of the Will of God as revealed by Christ regarding the sinfulness of war, so that our people will be constrained by the love of God not to participate in war and war-making efforts, but that they will hold to the spirit of love and of nonviolence in all relationships.

ns of Conference

In order to implement such a prevailing attitude, we urge the following:

a) vigorous preaching on the sinfulness of war and violence.

b) an integrated and an effective teaching program of this Way of Life through: Institutes, Young People's meetings, study conferences; through the regularly established organizations of the church, S. S., C. E., etc. and that good literature is made available for the study of these peace principles.

16. That we urge our people to hold themselves clear of the pressures and emotions of a war situation, and that they endeavor to hold to attitudes and opinions in keeping with the highest Christian principles.

Encourage Voluntary Service

17. That our Conference go on record encouraging the Voluntary Service Program:

a) That we give it the needed financial support so that the program can be built up to become more and more inviting and challenging.

b) That we endorse this type of program as that which we would like to see for our young people in case they are being drafted. There is evidence of the government officials recognizing the importance of Relief and Voluntary Service work, and we should now prepare to make this our sphere of activity to give a positive witness.

18. That we encourage our young people to think through the problem carefully and prayerfully as to what position a young person can take in relation to military training and service, and that they be given the kind of understanding help which they now need. Also, that they arrange their program for the next several years in such a manner that a significant period of time be given in unselfish service for the Kingdom.

19. That we stand ready to cooperate with other Christ-centered peace movements which are seeking to clarify, to understand, and to implement the peace witness.

Call to the President

20. Recommendation of Resolution Committee: Whereas the world once more has been plunged into war, and whereas war is a direct consequence of sin; be it resolved that the General Conference, through its secretary, call upon the president of the United States to designate a day of national prayer and repentance, pledging the full support of the conference in such a move. Be it further resolved that copies of this be sent to the governors and national representatives of the various States involved in our General Conference.

21. Recommendation of Resolution Committee: whereas the period of Conference sessions is not only a time for business, but also a time for inspiration and instruction, the efforts of the Business Committee to secure a guest speaker be commended. Be it further resolved therefore that the Conference hereby express its appreciation to the Business Committee, and that said committee be encouraged to extend invitations to leading protestant churchmen, either within or outside the Conference, to appear in future sessions.

22. Be it resolved that a sequence of some, or all, board reports at the General Conference be established by the Executive Committee, and that this order be used in rotation by the Business Committee for the trienniel sessions of General Conference.

23. Resolved that in arranging for the program for succeeding Conference sessions, effort be made to stay within an hour and a half limit for all evening programs inclusive of all introductions and announcements.

24. Resolved that the Business Committee, in cooperation with the Executive Committee, study ways to present reports at the Conference sessions with the view of providing adequate coverage of reports, and yet consistent with the best use of the time available—with special reference to degree of the reading of reports.

25. Recommendation from the Board of Trustees and Finance: Resolved that the General Conference authorize the Board of Trustees and Finance to loan Conference Funds to other Conference boards where such loans, in the opinion of the Trustees, are adequately secured by physical inventories or other securities sufficient to protect the interests of the Conference, and safeguard the wishes of the original donors.

26. Resolved that our Conference express a spirit of genuine gratitude to our heavenly Father for granting us a Conference of rich spiritual fellowship, hearty and aggressive action in an atmosphere of peace. Further, be it resolved that we express our appreciation to all in the local community who labored so diligently for our comfort: the City of Freeman, the Freeman Junior College, the Churches of the area, the committees and individuals who so efficiently and kindly facilitated the meeting of all our needs.

Japan

27. Resolved that the Board of Missions be encouraged to open Mission work in Japan.

28. Recommended by Resolutions Committee: Recommended that Conference extend greetings to the Hutterite brethren of this community and that particular thanks be given to the colonies which extended such a cordial welcome to the groups which visited there.

29. Recommended by Resolutions Committee: Resolved that the Conference give its sincere moral and spiritual support to those who because of Christian conscience encounter imprisonment and other difficulties.

30. Recommended by Resolutions Committee: Resolved that the Christian Service Board of our General Conference give special attention to the study of implications of the application of our Biblical, historic peace principles to our present life, with the view of leading to a systematic dissemination of information leading to increased conviction on the part of all our people.

31. Resolved that we accept the invitation of the Pacific District Conference to have the next session of the General Conference at Jennings Lodge, Oregon.

STATISTICAL SUMMARY: Number of churches 230; churches represented 192, or 84 per cent; votes represented 1467; delegates 577; guests 744; total delegates and guests, 1321.

MCC News Notes

Relief in Palestine

A new M.C.C. project of rehabilitation and welfare, with material aid distribution as needed, is to begin about September 15, among Arab refugees who have been displaced through the formation of the State of Israel. Jericho, with normal population of 1200 in summer and 2500 in winter, has now within the village and within three miles of the center of the village, a total of about 45,000 people. Jericho seems to be a good central point from which help can also be given to other refugee groups in the larger Jordan area. This refugee situation in the Jordan area represents desperate and extensive need, probably as desperate as any need with which M.C.C. workers are in touch now. The unit has during the past few months laid plans and developed good working relations with other agencies concerned in the problem.

The Aftermath of War

One of the workers in Berlin recently commented on the grim reality of the aftermath of war, as observed there:

"The ruined homes and business blocks are seen at first glance. Gradually one learns to know what it has meant in the lives of the people. One neighborhood (M.C.C. Center) visitor told me recently that she does not know one single man who was of military age during the war years who today has normal health. Many families are without husbands and fathers, many having fallen during the war years, many died in prison and concentration camps, many are still missing, no one knowing whether living or dead. Some who do return are not willing to assume the responsibilities of family life and so desert them. Many mothers have had to take over the entire care of the family. Those who are Christian find it difficult to provide a wholesome environment surrounded as they are by this breakdown of moral and religious restraints. It is in such an environment that we are working."

Story on Paraguayan Mennonites

A very worthwhile account of life and work among the Mennonite colonies in Paraguay is Paraguayan Interlude, by Willard and Verna Smith, who served in South America during 1944 and 1945 under MCC appointment. This book, just off the press, is accurate in fact and interpretation, and is also particularly rich in human interest. It is a fascinating story of observations and experiences while enroute and while in service in the Paraguay Mennonite settlements, and gives an intimate picture of the life and problems of these pioneers for conscience sake. Available for $2.25 from the publisher, the Mennonite Publishing House, Scottdale, Pennsylvania.

Essential Personnel

Consecrated people are as essential as material gifts and funds, in making relief and other services possible. Likewise, workers at the home base are needed just as are the workers on foreign fields.

The M.C.C. now has immediate openings for several secretaries, an accountant, a maintenance man, and other workers. Staff workers for Brook Lane Farm and Kings View Homes, (M.C.C. Mental Hospitals) are also needed, including nurses, attendants, cooks, laundry and maintenance workers. These may be on Voluntary Service or regular allowance scale. Persons available and called to this work should write to the Personnel Office, M.C.C., Akron, Pa. Pray that the Lord may call forth those whom He would use in this work.

Voluntary Service Notes

A number of young people have taken part in M.C.C. Summer Service Units for four consecutive summers and thus have given the equivalent of one year. They are Jean Wismer, Loretta Zehr. Doris Moyer, Susan Sensenig, Mary Ann Hostetler, and Amanda Bartel.

Two young men are needed immediately to assist in the Ephrata, Pa., and Waterloo, Ontario, M.C.C. centers, respectively, in packing Christmas Bundles, clothing and other related relief materials.

Paul Holdeman of Denver, Colorado has assumed leadership of the Gulfport Service Unit in Mississippi, replacing Orlo Kaufman, who is to assist at the Akron office in directing the Voluntary Service Program.

Students and the Draft

Students within the draft age, who hold conscientious objection to combatant and noncombatant military service, should receive classification in Class IV-E, in the same manner as non-student COs. The Class IV-E is at present a deferred class, and attending school in no way conflicts with the deferment.

(Students other than COs are granted postponement of induction, until high school graduation or until reaching 20 years of age, whichever is first; or until the end of the college academic year in which they are enrolled.)

Young men deferred for reasons of conscientious objection, whether students or otherwise, should consider the possibility of giving a special period in voluntary service. However, those students enrolled in preparation for Christian service in the field to which they have felt called, should not leave such field of study and service for another, without prayerful consideration.

Mennonite Physician Testifies

Speaking for the Mennonite Medical Association, H. Clair Amstutz, M.D., Secretary of this group, testified on August 22 before the Senate Armed Services Committee. The testimony was given in the public hearings on S. 4029, a bill dealing with proposed draft of doctors and dentists. The language of the bill did not seem fully clear in provision for CO doctors. He cited not only the Scriptural basis for non-resistance, but also pointed out that the commitment which doctors make to save and heal rather than destroy life, seems contrary to participation in the armed forces.

European Bible School

A new project made possible through the interest of the German, Swiss, and French Mennonite churches, with the assistance of the M.C.C., is the Bible School which is to be held November 12 to December 10. Classes are to be held at Basel, Switzerland, in both the French and German languages. Samuel Gerber of Switzerland, who visited many churches in Canada and the United States last year, is president of the school, and Hans Nussbaumer of France is business manager. Among the teachers are Pierre Widmer of France, Christian Schnebele of Germany, and several from the MCC worker staff in Europe.

Crous to Return

Ernst Crous, Mennonite leader from Germany, who has spent the past year in the United States under the auspices of the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges, teaching at Goshen, Bluffton and Bethel Colleges, and visiting many Mennonite churches and communities, is scheduled to return to Europe on September 5.

Jottings

—First Mennonite Church, Sugarcreek, Ohio: The ladies of the Church prepared and shipped three large boxes of home-made soap for Relief. Fourteen Christmas bundles were also sent to the MCC headquarters during the past week. Sunday evening, August 20, our Young People sponsored a musical program at the Church climaxing their campaign for the Camp-Fund Drive. They have pledged themselves to finance one cabin.—Wiley McDowell, Corr.

—First Church, Caldwell, Idaho: On June 11, we had baptismal services. On August 6, one couple of our church celebrated their silver wedding anniversary. Their children had prepared a very nice program. The men of our church have organized a laymen's organization. Abe Huebert was elected president and S. D. Ulrich is secretary. They are planning many things for the coming year.—Mrs. Leonard Schmidt, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Winton, California: On Sunday, June 4, a service was held in the afternoon dedicating the beautiful Hammond electric organ which was presented to the church by Herbert Heppner in memory of his wife who passed away in February. Mrs. Phil Barlow, accomplished musician, was guest organist. The church has voted to take over the evening program in one of the migrant camps about 30 miles from Winton. This work was started by the MCC Voluntary Service Unit in cooperation with the Home Missions Council. Midweek services have been continued through the summer months with good attendance. The children find prayer meeting more interesting since the Happy Bible Class was started for them during the service.—Corr.

—Calvary Church, Barlow, Oregon: Our church entertained the newly organized Women's Fellowship Society of the General Conference Group on July 27. Around seventy were in attendance, and the day was spent in making garments for foreign relief. A program and business meeting was held in the afternoon. John Franz of Salem was with us on Sunday, August 20 and 27, during the absence of Paul Roth, our pastor, who attended the Ministers' Retreat at St. Peter, Minnesota, before going on to the General Conference at Freeman, South Dakota.—Mrs. Ivan Learfield, Corr.

—Calvary Church, Barlow, Orgeon: Frank Hostetler, choir director, is ill and has been in the Good Samaritan Hospital at Portland for several weeks. A group of around eighty young folks gathered at Island Park on the Molalla River near Canby the evening of August 18 for a social meeting. Our Sunday school sent four Christmas bundles to Akron, Pennsylvania.—Mrs. Ivan Learfield, Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: The annual Bluffton College Reunion for northeastern Ohio held at Oak Grove Church, Smithville, was well attended with ninety present for the bountiful picnic supper August 13. With Miss Edna Ramseyer presiding, a varied program of talks and music was given. Professor Russell Lantz directed the singing of some numbers from the "Messiah" in the afternoon and also group singing and a vesper choir for the evening program. Coach Burcky, head of the athletic department, gave a talk and then introduced the new Assistant Coach Mast. The members of the volunteer unit at the Cleveland Mental Hospital were introduced and Richard Rosenberger gave talks about their work. Wilbur Berkey of Boys' Village gave brief commendatory remarks for the volunteer unit serving at Boys' Village this summer. Pastor Irvin Richert and wife were hosts to the Christian Endeavor in a social evening August 17 on their lawn with Rev. Richert's parents from California and the volunteer service unit from Smithville's Boys' Village as special guests.—Mrs. Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

—Gospel Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: August 16 we had a "Church Fellowship" meeting, at which time some business matters concerning the church were discussed. On August 19, the Sunday School had its annual Children's Day program and Misison Festival, at which time misionaries Miss Anna Baerg from Arizona, and Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Neufeld from our mission field in Africa spoke. Our pastor and his family were granted a six weeks vacation after a heavy and full Church program through the past year. We are happy for their return and that they had an enjoyable and blessed time.—Corr.

—Emmaus Church, Whitewater, Kansas: The cry for the gospel from those in heathen darkness and the need of consecrated lives to bring this message was a challenge presented anew to us at our annual Christian Endeavor Rally with Ivan E. Olsen of North Plate, Nebraska, as the speaker. Having come to us from Germany to find new life in America are Mrs. Anna Friesen and Mrs. Gertrude Friesen and her four children. August 14, our pastor, Walter H. Dyck, was united in marriage to Mrs. Martha Suderman of Newton. They will live in our recently completed parsonage near the church.—

—First Church, Paso Robles, California: Our church has been ministered to by several servants of God and we were blessed. Among them were Abe Schultz of tht East Swamp Church in Penn. and Lester Wutherich, returned missionary from China. M. J. Galle has accepted the call from this church as its Pastor and all mail should be addressed to him at 736 - 24th Street, Paso Robles, Cal. Three young people attended the Mennonite Retreat held at Lake Sequoia up in the mountains. This correspondent had the privilege of helping with the cooking there. God bless this retreat and several souls were won for him and others dedicated their lives to the service of the Lord.—Mrs. Edwin Schroeder, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Burns, Kansas: On August 6, Brother Edwin Stucky conducted our morning worship. Meetings have been held the past several weeks for men of the draft age. August 20, we received two new members into the church, which makes our church membership 91. A basket dinner at noon on August 20, was planned; the occasion was a farewell for our pastor Henry W. Goossen and family. A love offering was given them. A spirit-filled C. E. program centering around God's batyre was enjoyed in the evening.—Mrs. Dave Stucky, Corr.

—First Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: On August 16, our Sunday School picnic at Rittman Central Park was well attended including visitors from Comton, California, and Youngstown, Ohio. On August 18, at a beautiful candle light service in our church, Marilyn Sue Daniels and John L. Hostetler were married, the service being read by Pastor Neuenschwander. On August 19, at the pasonage, Leonard Shelly and Merle Cartwright were united in marriage by our pastor.—Geo. McBride, Corr.

Into the Beyond

JACOB LINSCHEID, Butterfield, South Dakota, a farmer, was born at Neuhof, Galicia, Austria, on March 2, 1869, and died July 20, 1950. He was the father of L. H. Linscheid, minister and instructor at Freeman Junior College.

MRS. PETER J. KRAUSE, Newton, Kans., born Mar. 12, 1860, a minister's wife, member of the Lehigh Mennonite Church, husband was first minister of Lehigh Church, died July 25, 1950.

Mennonite Youth

"A United Mennonite Youth in Christ"

Sponsored by the Young People's Union of the General Conference. Editor, Esko Loewen. Topeka, Indiana

Fifty-three young people gathered at St. Peter, August 18-23, for five days of work, fellowship and play together. Out of this Workshop have come great new friendships, rich spiritual experiences on the hilltop of Gustavus Adolphus college, and a plan for youth work in the local congregation which in future years should mean much for the youth of our churches. The General Assembly of the Y.P.U. held at General Conference at Freeman, South Dakota, confirmed the findings of the Workshop and gives approval for the Y.P.U. to carry out this new program. We present in this issue some of the experiences and findings of the Workshop as well as some of the decisions of the General Assembly.

Where Workshop Members Were From

by Maurine Voth

ONE OF THE most enjoyable aspects of the Workshop was the wide representation of young people from all over the conference. This provided an opportunity for a comparison and exchange of ideas, which was more possible here than in the District Retreats. When the registration was broken up into districts we found that the Western District topped the list with eighteen. Canada ranked second with ten. May I add here that we certainly appreciated the presence of our Canadian brothers and sisters. Their spirit of service and mission was contagious and helped us to apply our Christian ideals to our youth work.

Next in number was the Central District with nine young people. They, in turn, were followed by the Middle, Northern, and Eastern Districts with six, five, and four, respectively. The Pacific District added one more to make a total of fifty-three.

The states represented were California, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Nebraska, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and South Dakota. Nine of the Canadians came from Manitoba and one from Saskatchewan. The age range included eighth grade through college and seminary graduates. Offhand I would say that the majority of young people from the States were of high school age and the Canadians averaged the college age level.

Although our group was different in many respects we found that we had very much in common. Now comes the task of returning to all the scattered communities and filling others with the enthusiasm which we received at our first and very successful Workshop.

The Gustavus Adolphus Campus

by Lauria Ann Weiss

AS YOU APPROACH St. Peter, Minnesota by the Main Street the direction of Gustavous Adolpus College is indicated by a large sign post. If you follow in that direction the first thing you see is the tower of the main building way out above the trees.

This is the place where the Mennonite Young People held their "Workshop." We certainly should extend our "Thanks" for the privilege of using the Campus of Gustavous Adolphus College. It was so adequate for our needs.

The layout of the Campus was an ideal setting. We felt as though we were on a hilltop of religious fellowship. The Campus was situated on a hilltop also with a beautiful view overlooking the valley. The grounds were very well kept with a lawn surrounding all the buildings and a sloping hillside.

The young people stayed in well kept dormitories. We had the privilege of using the recreational facilities. These included swimming, tennis, volley ball, basket ball, table tennis. There was a book store on the Campus which was used by some. The new dormitory for girls was an inspiration to many. But the greatest privilege was that of seeing the new Library just dedicated in memory of "Count Folke Bernadotle." It is a very modern and adequate building including a museum of Swedish Lutheran Customs.

The meetings were held in a small building with class rooms and an auditorium. We held our morning Bible Study with those attending the Ministers' retreat. These were held in the Chapel in charge of Dr. Kuist of Princeton Seminary.

Where We Are in Local Church Youth Activity

WHEN YOU go around from church to church, or if you go to a Conference or a Workshop and talk about youth work in the churches, you gain the impression of a most varied youth program among General Conference churches. One District officer says that the youth activity in his District has seriously deteriorated. Where ten and twenty years ago there was an active C.E. program with large groups and regular Sunday evening meetings of Junior, Intermediate and Senor C.E. groups, today, this informant stated, they did well to get ten young people out for a Sunday evening meeting in their largest District church.

In other churches we are told that a topic program is given with the young people responsible for the program. The whole church is invited to attend. The attendance is small and the programs are not very inspiring. Those responsible for the topics read their material without putting much thought into preparation for them. They do it because they are asked to rather than because of a real interest in the topic assigned.

Another church reports that their young people come out for meetings only when they are not on the program. If they are asked to participate and are given a topic, they fail to be present for that program. Still other churches report that their C.E. organization is composed of middle aged people and the elders of the church and the programs they give are composed mainly of adults speaking to the youth of the church.

There seems to be a dissatisfaction on the part of many in regard to the topic program type of youth activity. In churches where this is the pattern, there is evident a desire for something more and better than that which they have.

The picture so far presented is not complete, however. There are churches of the Conference in which there is a vital youth organization and vital youth activity. A number of these churches could be picked out. They are located in the various districts of the Conference. Where other churches feel frustrated and unhappy about their youth work, these churches are successfully creating among the youth a sense of devotion to Christ and his church which is a beacon light of our Conference youth activity.

For instance, one church holds regular Monday evening meetings for its youth. They have divided into groups of 1) Faith, 2) Fellowship, 3) Service, 4) Stewardship. By making this four-fold division, they seek to have a balanced program for the youth covering all areas of Christian experience and living. They have regular worship services. They meet once a month for a party, this being on Saturday evening. They meet once a month for service activity, also on Saturday evening. The result of this has been a very vital youth program with young people finding ever new ways of serving the church and their Lord.

Another church has a very active program in which the youth participate in their own worship, they are busy in service and they each year have projects which raise hundreds of dollars for missions. They have Lord's Acre and Lord's Hour projects in which funds are raised by collecting paper, raising potatoes, baby sitting, laying aside certain wages earned for a day's work, all of this for the cause of the year.

If one were to summarize the situation of youth activity in our churches, the following points would need to be included:

1) There are those churches in which for one reason or another, the youth activity is sluggish and it fails to inspire.

2) There are those churches in which there is no real youth program.

3) There are those churches in which, because of its traditional nature, there is some type of youth activity usually of a C.E. pattern. The purpose and vision for the program is more traditional than forward looking.

4) There are churches in which the C.E. type of program is functioning successfully and vitally.

5) There are churches in which new concepts of youth work have entered and a new surge of vitality and enthusiasm has resulted in a program conducted for youth, by youth.

What then are the causes of this varied picture in our Conference? Why is it that our situation today is so varied and spotty so far as a vital ongoing youth program is concerned? Again this could be caused by a number of reasons. We list a few of them.

1) The General Conference youth organization, the Y.P.U., has not been an organization concerning itself with local youth organization and work. It has been essentially a project-sponsoring agency for the Conference.

2) Because of this, there has been no real planning or leadership in the area of local youth work and local leaders have had to find ideas wherever they may chance upon them for their work. The C.E. has mainly been used as such a source.

3) Each local congregation has had its own peculiar problems. In some churches, there are few young people which makes a youth program at best difficult. In other churches there exists a tension between old and young which makes it difficult to appeal to and inspire youth. Some churches are in cities in which many interests and attractions draw youth from the church. Such situations suggest the greatly varied local situation.

4) Some churches are lacking in leadership both of young people and older advisers which has made work with youth drag.

5) There is a lack of over-all concept or understanding of just what local youth work really is. The general aim of winning youth for Christ and the church is understood, but how to realize that aim requires careful leadership, thought, and understanding along with the consecration of the leader.

Because of this being our condition, this being where we are, the Y.P.U. has been at work seeking to provide a plan and means whereby local youth organizations can better carry out their program. The Y.P.U. Workshop at St. Peter, Minnesota, held from August 18 to 23 was a workshop on this very problem.

Christian Faith and Life

by Gordon Dyck

AND WE HAVE known and believed the love that God hath to us, God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him. I John 4:16.

Here is shown to us in a few words a basis for "believing and dwelling" or Christian Faith and Life.

The Young Peoples Union since its beginning a few years ago has been "in the woods" as has been expressed by some of the leaders. The purpose of the organization has been vague; the type of organization itself has been uncertain. The aim in the past has been that of large projects undertaken by the Y.P.U. of the General Conference and supported by the small local youth organization. Now the emphasis is making a complete change. Y.P.U. is concerned about the local organization. Starting new youth organizations in communities where there are none, and making suggestions for improving those already started is the chief concern of the Y.P.U. Its chief drive this summer at the workshop at St. Peter was that of introducing a balanced youth program for the local youth organization. To promote this the Y.P.U. suggests that the program must have an equal balance of these three emphasis: Faith and Life, Fellowship, and Service.

In order to put this theory into practice we who were gathered at the Workshop worked together as though we were a local organization. We divided into three committees, actually three large groups, each planning the program as related to their group. The Faith and Life group planned the morning watch services. It also planned for the consecration service held on the last night of the Workshop. The group also discussed some of the problems of the local youth groups. Such as arousing interest, developing a sense of responsibility, age problems, and planning programs were discussed. We do not like to say that one phase of the threefold program is more important than another, but Faith and Life should be the foundation and care of the others.

Some of the aims of the Christian Faith and Life committee should be the aiding of each person in and out of their church to accept Jesus Christ and dedicate their lives to him. They should help young people to see that Christianity applies to all of life, not just on Sunday. They should help to teach and appreciate our Mennonite heritage and beliefs. Also to help in personal problems including the discerning of the will of God for the life of each young person. So that the goal of the Faith and Life committee be attained there should be meetings for worship, study, discussion, and expression.

Worship should be a part of all youth gatherings even though they are primarily for recreation or service. In order that the worship service be of value to those who participate there must be a definite aim or purpose for the meeting. Varied methods of worship and also other arrangements which focus attention on the central thought contribute to the underlying aim of the worship service.

Other meetings might be for the studying of beliefs, problems, books, people, chapters, and verses of the Bible. We study hard and seriously in high school and college, so we should all the more study in church where we deal directly with right and wrong, life and death. This should also be presented in a manner so that we will want to understand and listen. Such methods as short talks, moving pictures, or a series of classes for a course could be used.

It is through discussion that many youth come to a decision. It is used best when thinking through a problem. Also expressional meetings might be used. A young person is strengthened in his faith when he is given a chance to give his own testimony. Another way of building our faith and life is by going as groups on educational trips to visit hospitals, missions, and other institutions.

There are tremendous possibilities in deepening our knowledge and faith through a young peoples' organization and consequently being able to live a life that will be of a greater service to the Lord.

Christian Fellowship

by Katherine Klippenstein

THE ULTIMATE goal of a young people's program is to direct its members towards that which Christ called "a more abundant life." The needs of life are many. Therefore the phases of a well-balanced youth program must be extended to reach out into all areas in order to meet these needs.

The group of young people who attended the Workshop at St. Peter represented all districts of America as well as all areas of thought. Although our past experiences with young people has been varied and unique, yet we agreed upon basic matters. In the entire program it is of greatest importance that young people unite for workshop, meditation and devotion because Christ must be the foundation upon which we build.

In the past some of us had experienced that our youth work had amounted only to a meeting group. To be a fellowship means that young people must become knit together as a circle of genuine friends. To do this they must get together in various types of activities frequently. There must be an air of naturalness in a spirit of Christian understanding and sharing. They must have much in common.

There is no consistency in the Christianity of the group who reverently goes to church Sunday morning but who cannot invite Christ to attend its social on Monday night. Spiritual living and secular living can not be divided. They must be united, sanctified and together they will contribute to the "abundant Life."

Christian fellowship is a part of complete Christian living. This truth was realized and practiced at the workshop. Those who led the devotions could also lead the recreational activity. The soft-ball game played against the ministers was a means of wholesome fellowship; the get-acquainted social was carried on in a Christian attitude of love so that the recreational activities gradually lead into the closing period of worship. In a like manner, we found that there was opportunity for group games during the last evening when we had gathered for a fireside consecration service. All activity can and should be Christ-centered.

We found that those who hesitated to respond during a discussion, mixed freely during the recreational period. Does that not prove that recreation, or fellowship, is of vital importance in learning to understand and share with one another? If the group has the feeling of being knit together during play, they will also experience the same feeling during worship and devotion.

The joys and blessings of the workshop days will not be of temporary value. What we have learned there we wish to apply in our local youth groups. If we include recreation, leisure-time activities, fellowship with youth of other denominations, relations with other races, and other items into our youth program, our group will grow in interest, experience, and in number. To be a Christian fellowship we must unashamedly have Christ in common in all of our activities.

Christian Service

by Hugo Hildebrand

AT THE Young People's Workshop, an effort was put forth to have a wholesome and complete youth program such as would be good for all local church youth groups to have. It was difficult to see just how to apply this in the field of Christian Service in a strange community where the group would be only a matter of a few days. Soon it was learned that a mental hospital was located a mile out of town with 2,400 patients. Two members of the Christian Service commission were sent to the hospital to make arrangements to sing to the patients. The hospital officials were very glad to have us come and were very interested in having a group come in from so many varied places as Manitoba, Pennsylvania, California and Kansas.

On Tuesday afternoon at one o'clock a caravan of eight cars drove to the hospital and fifty members of the workshop spent a memorable hour and a half going from ward to ward of the huge hospital singing to the patients. In each ward there were new situations to face with the patients on the disturbed ward quite demonstrative and some patients saying humerous things. However, for others the little gesture of service meant much and they expressed themselves in gratitude or silently wept as familiar hymns were sung to them. The Workshop group left the hospital thrilled to have been able to express themselves in service to the mentally ill.

This experience demonstrated this area of youth work possible in the home church. Surely, not every community has a mental hospital, but there are many fields of service right at home that are possible. By seeking them out, using one's imagination, the field of Christian Service becomes rich with possibilities right at home.

There are several areas in which such service is possible. First, comes service in the home church. This includes Sunday School work, helping beautify the church grounds and the interior of the church, going out to sing to the shut-ins and people in the home for the aged, giving programs and holding jail services, helping the pastor in his special work, singing in the choir, and many other services of a similiar type. Fund raising projects for missions and other causes is a vital form of Christian Service.

There is, secondly, community service possible. This includes assisting in social work such as helping the needy, finding ways of preventing delinquency, sewing in the homes for the aged, seeking to reach across racial barriers, etc.

A third field of service is to participate in fund-raising projects for church and conference causes. Funds for missions, the district youth camp, the college, student education, local church endeavors all are important forms of fund-raising work.

A fourth and large area is service outside the local community. A wide range of activities are possible for young people through General Conference and M.C.C. projects. This includes foreign service in Europe, Paraguay, Uruguay, Colombia. Mental hospital work, migrant camp work, homes for children, delinquents, the aged, work in the south among the negroes and whites, and service among our own missions and churches are some of the possibilities for youth. This large area of work should strengthen local service and local service should strengthen voluntary service.

It is the concern of the division of Christian Service to keep before youth organizations all of these possibilities.

Recommendations of the Y.P.U. General Assembly

We Recommend:

1. that the General Assembly accept the recommendation of the YPU Council "...we recommend three areas of emphasis for a balanced youth program in the local congregation: a) Christian Faith and Life; b) Christian Fellowship; c) Christian Service. These could form the basis for committees in the local church and in the YPU Executive Committee or they could serve as a basis for evaluating the existing programs."
2. that the Christian Youth Organizations of our Mennonite colleges (SCA) consider organizing their program according to these 3 areas.
3. that the YPU Executive Committee plan for future all-conference workshops and encourage district workshops.
4. that work be continued on a YPU Manual with the aim of publishing it in the near future.
5. that the YPU constitution be studied in the light of the Fellowship Program with changes to be presented at the next General Assembly.
6. that, in view of the critical and complex

Beyond Our Own

MORE than five thousand delegates from sixty-two countries participated in the thirteenth World Convention on Christian Education at Toronto, Canada, August 10-16. All of the evening sessions but the one on Sunday were held in the large Coliseum at the National Exhibition Grounds. Toyohiko Kagawa was the speaker on Tuesday evening. During the day time the delegates chose one of four divisions—general, children, young people, and adults—in which they could discuss issues in greater detail. One of the thrilling occasions of the convention was the Youth Service of Witness on Sunday evening when fifteen thousand people thronged the Maple Leaf Gardens. C. W. Li of China was the principal speaker at this meeting. The climax of the convention was reached on the final evening at the service of consecration at which Bishop Stephen Neill of England spoke on the meaning of the cross and the delegates and visitors responded with the words: "I will ever serve my Teacher and Lord."

ITALY—Italian Waldensian, Baptist and Methodist youth organization have launched a fund-raising campaign among the estimated 60,000 Protestants of Italy to aid the youth of the Evangelical churches in Spain.

Recently the "Time Magazine" carried an article which was entitled "Failure." It was referring to the failure of Protestant Christians to respond to the plea which General MacArthur made in calling for 1,000 Christian workers to hurry the job of Christianizing Japan. According to figures published by the Religious News Service, the Roman Catholic Church responded very well. In Japan there are now 1,120 Catholic, compared to 24 Protestant missionaries.

"The Christian Century," a Protestant publication, indignantly responded with a verbal lashing to shame Protestants into action and to stimulate thinking on their missionary responsibiliy. "Nothing could reveal more clearly than these figures how appalling is the Protestant failure to rise to the opportunity presented by postwar Japan.... American Protestant Christianity is utterly failing to rise to the mandate which the Great Commission lays upon us. We deserve the verdict which history will pass upon us. Can there be any doubt what it will be?"—Gospel Herold.

HARTFORD, CONN.—A bill which would have permitted religious, veterans and civic organizations to conduct games of chance failed to get through a special session of the Connecticut Legislature, which has now adjourned.

NEW YORK.—A five-year program to raise $1,000,000 for buildings and equipment at Vellore Christian Medical College and its affiliated hospital in South India was approved here yesterday at the College's annual board meeting.

About a fourth of the amount, it is expected, will come from mission boards in this country and Canada which support the interdenominational enterprise. The remainder will be sought from individual contributors and foundations.

The building program, it was explained, will enable the medical center to meet requirements of Madras University, which has granted recognition to the College, and to provide greater service to the people of India.

A training center for Christian Doctors and nurses for about 900 missionary medical units in India, Vellore is supported by some 40 Protestant denominations in North America, Britain, and Australia.

The College is noted for its training in women's surgical and obstetrical care and for its pioneer work in leprosy research and treatment. It has done special research in pathology, radiology, and infectious diseases, and most recently added departments of neurology and thoracic surgery.

problems in the social, economic, and political spheres on both the national and international levels, be it recommended to the resolutions committee of the General Conference that a resolution be introduced to the current session of the General Conference calling on the Board of Christian Service to appoint a study group to study the relations and implications of Mennonite principles to such current problems as the Christian position on conscription, registration and cooperation with the draft, payment of war taxes, attitudes toward Communism, Socialism, and Capitalism, church-state relations, etc.

7. that district Youth organizations plan their projects in line with suggestions drawn up by the representative of the districts at the YPU Council.

8. that all local groups and districts systematically plan to contribute their share to the YPU General Fund which makes possible the YPU program materials, Prayer Calendar, Youth Section, workshops, and travel expenses, etc.

9. that the YPU Executive Committee continue its visitation program where it can be worked out.

10. that the YPU continue publishing its present publications with the Program Materials incorporating the three areas: Christian Faith and Life, Christian Fellowship, and Christian Service.

11. that the YPU Executive Committee give consideration to a full time or part time youth worker. In view of this, the place of the Advisory Committee should be evaluated.

12. that the YPU Council study the MEF situation and continue the program if possible, or propose a substitute program.

13. that our constitution be adjusted so that the Conference name therein be in conformity with the new Conference constitution name: "The General Conference Mennonite Church."

14. that the Executive Committee be authorized to seek ways of representing youth interests in Voluntary Service in a more vital way in regard to the organizational relationship with the Board of Christian Service.

"WITNESSING UNTO ALL MEN"

For several years our General Conference congregations have been urged to make two concerted efforts annually to win the non-Christian people of their respective communities to Christ—one effort in spring during Holy Week, and the other in fall, usually in November. In the fall effort the Sunday School leadership takes the initiative. This year the October Sunday School lessons lend themselves well to our purpose, and so the Evangelism Committee suggests that we use the October lessons as a contact point to make our witness this fall. The Evangelism Committee has prepared a folder which will go into the hands of all our Sunday School teachers to give guidance. These folders are sent to the Sunday School Superintendents with the request that they give them to their teachers, and if possible, meet with the teachers to plan together. When a church is active in witnessing, new life comes to her. Pastors will want to encourage and help the Sunday School leaders in this effort.

The Lincoln Bible Class of a church in Evansville, Indiana, has developed a code to which one hundred men desirous of becoming members have subscribed. It reads:

"As a Christian I will have as an objective in this life:

"To remain a Christian, faithful unto death.

"To pray and read the Bible daily.

"To give a part of my money, time, and talents to the upbuilding of the Kingdom.

"I will support at least one worthy boy through college.

"I will endeavor to win one or more of my fellow men to accept Christ.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT

During the busy days of the Freeman Conference, former acting editor of THE MENNONITE, Jacob J. Enz, kindly relieved the new editor by gathering and editing the material for the two issues of THE MENNONITE of September 5 and 12. Sincere appreciation is hereby expressed for this friendly service. Mr. Enz also headed up the active publicity department of the Conference and a number of news releases were sent to the leading news services.

Ray Unruh, the local Freeman photographer, also extended every courtesy in providing various photographs of the conference for our publications, and to him we express our gratitude.

THE FREEMAN CONFERENCE

IT would be interesting to know what history will reveal as the outstanding events of the late Freeman General Conference. Certainly a move of far-reaching consequences was the enthusiastic endorsement of the Mission Board's proposal to open mission work in Japan. That should open a door of tremendous responsibility and opportunity, through which may pass missionaries, much money and many prayers, in bringing the Gospel to Japan.

The adoption of a new constitution and the reorganization of the boards was a significant step. While it will take some time to smooth out all the implications of this change, it is hoped that it will make for better coordination and mutual cooperation between the different areas of Christian work. There is now also a slight change in the official name of our denomination. It has been somewhat simplified, and all members should now be able to give the exact name: "The General Conference Mennonite Church."

The continual emphasis on "witnessing," and the special plan of "lay-evangelism" could well mark a new undertaking for our churches as a whole. For too long we have been satisfied to be the "quiet in the land." Now it is urgent that the laity respond to the high task of witnessing unto all men—introducing them to Christ. This has such tremendous possibilities that no church should neglect it. It could change us from self-satisfied and exclusive people to active, witness-bearing, enthusiastic workers for Christ.

The decision to place our church papers into every home of the Conference opens great possibilities for information, unification and response. Now the various boards can bring their problems and appeals direct to the homes of all members of Conference. The various districts can learn to know each other better and to appreciate the work that is done in each. The great opportunities and needs of the Kingdom can be brought directly to all the people.

The Business Committee wisely planned for the special mission jubilee celebration at the end of the week's session. It brought the Conference to a fine climax and close. People stayed through the entire session and were greatly impressed by the deeply moving and inspirational mission emphasis.

More inspirational messages, both by our own men and those so ably presented by our guest speaker, Carl F. H. Henry of the Fuller Theological Seminary, were a real contribution in setting a high spiritual tone to the Conference.

Was it a historical conference? But does not that depend on our response now that conference is over? If we prayerfully follow through the plans and decisions there reached, if we are determined to be doers of the Word and not hearers only, it may have been a conference of such importance that great lasting good may result. "The meeting is over, now the service begins."

"IN REMEMBRANCE OF ME"

THE observance of World Communion Sunday on the first Sunday in October is becoming more and more familiar around the world. There is something deeply moving about the feeling that all over the world, Christians are coming to the Lord's table on the same day as a witness to the central fact of our Christian faith—the atoning death of Jesus Christ for the salvation of the world. In a world filled with uncertainty and fear, Christians dare to declare their faith in Jesus Christ as Lord and Saviour.

This year again, on October 1, around the world on land and sea, in cathedrals and small churches, in hospitals and detention camps, among people of every race and color and nation, we gather around the Lord's table in penitence and deep need, in memory of Him who gave His life for us. It is a time of deep soul-searching and renewed dedication to our Lord. May we not fail to accept the invitation of our Lord to come and dine with Him and accept His redeeming love through which all men are offered the forgiveness of sins and the assurance of God's transforming grace. "This do in remembrance of Me."

THE SUMMER SERVICE UNITS

A SPLENDID outlet for the religious activity of youth is the voluntary service program as administered by the Mennonite Central Committee and our own Conference. Reports from those who engage in this work is usually very enthusiastic. An article in this issue shows how much the work is appreciated by those benefitting from it. It is an expressional service which our youth needs. By such sacrificial service "in the name of Christ" they are witnessing to the love of God, whether in hospitals, among the underprivileged, on the mission fields, or among those of other races and color.

Such work is especially fitting in this time of crisis. Again young men are called into military service to prepare for war. We who believe in the way of peace should be more ready to go into such Christian service to declare and live the way of love.

When these young people return from their period of work they should have the privilege of sharing their experiences with others. This should make an interesting Sunday evening program in the churches. Others may be inspired to be volunteers for Christ.

IS THERE NO BALM IN GILEAD?

IT IS frequently noted how unhappy people look as they go about their tasks or walk the city streets. Even in a church service there does not seem to be the cheerful expression and the joyous light in the eyes of the worshippers that might be expected from those who possess the most joyous news in the world. Is there no remedy for this expression of sadness and fear that is stamped on the faces of so many?

At the recent Freeman Conference we listened to

The Folly of Self-seeking

by L. R. Amstutz

"And seekest thou great things for thyself? seek them not: for, behold, I will bring evil upon all flesh, saith the Lord: but thy life will I give unto thee for a prey in all places whither thou goest." Jer. 45:5

OUR text might well be put into the form of a "motto" to be hung over the life of each Christian. The motto should be framed by the evident purpose of our life and should read, "I Seek Not Great Things for Myself."

The words of our text were spoken by the prophet Jeremiah to his Scribe, Baruch. Much of the book of Jeremiah was dictated to Baruch who wrote the words as we have them. Baruch, who lived during the days of Jehoiakim, had joined himself earlier to the prophet Jeremiah and had identified himself with the cause that Jeremiah represented. That was back in the time of better days but now things had become worse to such an extent that Baruch was hiding for his life. (In order to see the historical setting the reader ought to read chapter 36 and connect chapter 45 with that chapter. Chapts. 45-52 are made up of miscellaneous writings and are not chronological.) As one may well imagine. Baruch was terribly discouraged. Thus the message of God comes to this great man, a message which finds its application to all of us.

Baruch was a man of great promise. He was not a man of ordinary ability. He might well have risen to the highest position of the state. Now that the people and the King had turned against both Jeremiah and himself, all such ambitions were to come to naught. Does God come to the scribe with pity? No, for God shows the folly of self-seeking by the message which is conveyed to him. The foolishness of self-seeking is seen in the following ways:

First, it is subject to self-pity. Within himself Baruch had said, "Woe is me now! for the Lord hath added grief to my sorrow; I fainted in my sighing, and I find no rest." (45:3) One can just hear the sobs and cries of Baruch in this verse. At the root of Baruch's feelings was self pity.

Interestingly, God uses the prophet Jeremiah to minister to the crest fallen scribe. God does not speak directly to Baruch. The prophet Jeremiah was eminently fitted for this task. Earlier in his own life Jeremiah had himself been afflicted with self pity as seen in Jer. 20:7-9. Jeremiah himself had been lifted from the slough of despondency and thus having experienced the grace of God is enabled to help his co-worker. This principle of operation is further illustrated by Paul when he states, "Who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God." (II-Cor. 1:4)

Ambition is not necessarily a bad thing. However, amibtion is subject to its own peculiar temptations and pit-falls. The psychologist tells us that there are certain "drives" which motivate us and one of these basic "drives" is the desire for social recognition. We all want to amount to something. We want to be recognized. Baruch was such a person and his great ability heightened such a desire. Now the opposite was true, for instead of recognition he was hiding for his life.

All of life's ambitions must be related to the will of God. Self-seeking may lead to frustration and discouragement and can never attain true joy. To be in the place where God wants us to be, even when it means the reproach of the world, is a proper test of our life. This will save us from self-pity. Instead of crying out, "Woe is me now!" we shall be satisfied in the will of God. To be yielded to the will of God will enable us to rise above circumstances and above self. We are told that when Beethoven became stone deaf, he learned that by clenching a stick in his teeth he could so hold it against the sounding-board of a piano as to detect faint sounds. What a tragedy had Beethoven given up to self-pity and moaned his fate.

In the second place, self-seeking is folly because it is blinded by self deception. God tells the scribe thru Jeremiah (45:4) that the whole land is to be broken down. The land was to go into captivity and then where would his ambitions be. Baruch mistook the nature of his surroundings and hence he was deceived.

Self-seeking always invests its efforts, time and money in this life. Man lives as though he would stay here upon this earth forever. Should God pity Baruch since the very things that had been denied him were to come to naught? What should be our attitude toward the things of the world? Are they not all to pass away? Instead of complaining we should stop and count our many blessings and mercies. Above all, we should be thankful that God has called us out of this world unto Himself. We should consider it a great privilege to confess Christ before men of this world who are indifferent to all vital godliness. It is ever true that the frowns of the world would not disquiet us if we did not so eagerly covet its smiles. How foolish to seek great things for ourselves here where everything is little and nothing certain.

Finally, self-seeking is foolish bcause it means self-glory. "Seekest thou great things for thyself?" God only promised to Baruch that his life would be spared, ". . . thy life will I give unto thee for a prey in all places whither thou goest." We should not minimize this promise. Of all the posessions that we have, life is the thing we cling to longest and hardest. When the burglar gives us the choice of our life or our goods, the decision is obvious. Baruch still had his life to invest in things eternal. When the invading army would sweep across the land, Baruch would be glad he was alive.

This, of course, would rob the scribe of any self-glory. To God would be the glory, and let not man glory in himself or in his might or in his riches. Let him glory in the fact that he knows God! Baruch complained that he found no rest in the world. God has not promised us rest in this world but He has promised us rest in Him.

In conclusion, I would like to illustrate the folly of

A Church Launches Out

by J. W. Fretz

Two years ago, I was invited to meet with a group of men from the Oak Grove Mennonite Church at Smithville, Ohio. They discussed a problem frequently raised in wide-awake churches throughout the country, namely, what to do about providing wholesome recreation for their young people.

The Oak Grove Mennonite Church is located in a beautiful grove of trees in the open country. A short distance from the church building is a rather deep but gently sloping ravine, a natural place for picnic and outdoor meetings. The members of the congregation long wondered what use they could make of this natural setting for the enjoyment of their people.

This past June, two years later, I was again invited to meet with the Oak Grove men and surprised to discover a completely erected and furnished Fellowship Hall. It is located to the rear of the meeting house. The building is a two story 36 by 60 foot structure. It was begun in April of 1949 and dedicated in October of the same year, thus demonstrating that the Oak Grove men are men of action as well as men of vision. The building is substantial, attractive, and does not in any way detract from the quiet and dignified atmosphere of worship which the meeting house reflects.

The building, which cost upward of $18,000, has proven a good investment. Hardly anyone who has seen the use which has been made of the Fellowship Center is willing to say anything to the contrary. In the basement is a completely equipped kitchen with running water, restrooms, a place for shuffle boards, two ping-pong tables, and a very spacious room for the pastor's study. Upstairs, which can be entered from the ground level because of the sharp incline on which the building was erected, is a large pine panneled room with moveable furniture and a large side fireplace. The building is used by all church groups; the Daily Vacation Bible School, the ladies sewing societies, chorus practice, the men's fellowship, and the young people's groups all finds the center a delightful place to meet. Outside in the ravine there are two substantially constructed fire places. Three additional acres have been purchased for outdoor picnic tables and twelve swings. Today, members of the congregation wonder how they could do without such a useful building.

The Fellowship Center idea began a number of years before it was erected. Perhaps one of its beginning points was the splendid leadership given to the church young people by Virgil Gerig, the grandson of the eighty-four year old Bishop J. S. Gerig. As a "native son," called back to be the pastor of his home congregation, the youthful Gerig met with his fifty or more young people in one of the late A. C. Ramseyer's potato barns, for want of a better place to hold midweek young peoles meetings. Thse young peoples' gatherings were especially popular during the fall and winter seasons. Out of these meetings grew the consciousness that church young people, if they were not to drive off to towns and cities for their fun, would have to have a place at home where they could play games and hold their meetings. The individual homes were not large enough and the church ordinarily was not suitable for many midweek young peoples' activities—thus, the desire for and the actual erection of the Oak Grove Fellowship Center. It is a good example of how Christians may again strive to make their churches the center of community life.

A visit to this place and an introduction to the splendid type of activities carried on would convince many congregations that they should go and do like wise because most congregations face relatively similar problems and many have similar opportunities.

In order to guard against activities being carried on that are unbecoming to Christian young people, the Oak Grove congregation adopted the following set of regulations governing the use of the Fellowship Center:

1. This building has been erected in order to provide a suitable location for the legitimate activities of Christian people. It is expected, therefore, that groups using these facilities shall abstain from such activities and practices as are generally considered objectionable by our church, e.g., dancing, card playing, smoking, etc.
2. Responsible adult leadership must be provided by all groups using the building. These leaders are expected to see that the activities of the group conform with the purpose of the building.
3. Groups using the building are expected to leave the building as clean and orderly as possible, and to store all kitchen and recreational equipment in its proper place before leaving.
4. Organizations and individuals using the kitchen and recreational equipment are expected to pay for any breakage, accidental or otherwise.
5. The above rules are for your convenience and for the convenience of others. Let us all cooperate to the fullest possible extent in utilizing this Fellowship Center to the glory of God.

READY FOR SERVICE

"A church that is good to itself, well organized, with an active minister and church societies that function, should realize that it is then but ready for service. The congregation should then know that it has a machine constructed for work. And service means going out and doing for others. If we boast of what we do for ourselves, we are just drawing a circle around our church, shutting ourselves in with no regard for the big things our General Assembly and our Synod (This would correspond to our General Conference and district conferences) have asked us to share. It is like running a beautiful piece of machinery for exhibition purpose only, with no thought of making it furnish power for good. Do not boast of what your church is doing until you look at your benevolent budget and can show that you are serving others as well as your own. This is God's plan. No church ever regretted its service to others. No church ever died as a result of this service."—Robert E. Speer.

From the Mission Front

Volunteers for Service

by David Habegger

AGAIN this year it has been the privilege of the Mennonite Mission to the Northern Cheyenne Indians to have three people who volunteered for service help the missionaries with the work on this field for a period of eight weeks. I am sure that such a period of service is an inspiration not only to the Indians that are reached by such service, but also to the Missionaries and the workers themselves.

The type of work that the volunteers are doing here is a real means of witnessing and is inspiring to the people among whom we work. I hope that it has meant much to the Indian children who attended the Bible Schools to know that there are people so interested in them that they are willing to take time to tell them about Christ. I do know that it has caused some men to think when they have found out that there are young men who are willing to work from early morning until dark for a mere pittance. It certainly must be obvious to them that such workers are not putting wealth first in their lives, but that they are seeking first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness. It is sometimes hard to think of building and repair work as work for the Kingdom, yet such work can also be done for the glory of God. If the manual labor that has been done were to be paid for in money, it would cost several hundred dollars. So these young people can practically say that they have each given a couple hundred dollars to missions this year. I wonder how many people have actually given that much to any cause this year.

To have such willing workers around is a real inspiration to the missionaries also. We enjoy having others labor with us and share in the problems and joys that we meet with day by day. To share a joy makes it twice as sweet and to share a problem makes it half as difficult to bear. Also, to share in the everyday work usually makes it more than twice as easy. So we are grateful for these volunteers. In the past the missionaries often had to hunt workers to help with the Bible School etc. by themselves. This was often not an easy task, so it helps out a lot to have an organization as the Young People's Union to serve as a center for locating and distributing the workers that are available for such work.

We also hope that assisting in such work will give added inspiration to those that have helped here. Now they can see the necessity for missions and they know by actual contact what has been done and what needs to be further accomplished. A person may describe a work ever so realistically, yet it can never equal the knowledge that a person gains from actual contact. Their own reports and testimonies will bear out what such a time of service as they have put in will mean to them.

But it is our hope that the inspiration that these volunteers have received will not stop with them. When they return to their homes, churches, and schools they can stir up the fire of interest that their home people have in missions by telling of their experiences. Thus we can say that the outflowing of love in Christian service is not limited in outreach, but that it blesses all with whom it comes in contact.

Opportunity Now

by S. T. Moyer

WHATEVER the condition of our own work and churches, we have been hearing repeatedly, by those in positions to know, reports quite similar to this one which appeared in April 1950 issue of The Evangelical Christian. I pass it on as an overall picture of things during the present year.

"The Bishop of Nasik says it is generally agreed that since August 5th, 1947, and more particularly since Gandhi's death, there has been a greater interest shown in Christianity, and in the life and death of Christ, by all types and kinds of people than ever before; and that the prestige of the Christian Church has never stood so high." He also points out reasons.

"First, with a frequency hither unknown, Christians are occupying leading positions in the government, and this at all levels—from the governor of a Province, to a road mender. Many people say that they are expecting India to turn to Christ within the next ten years, and as evidence points to the fact that whenever a politician makes an "uplift speech" he has always to couch it in Christian terms, speaking of the missionary spirit, of love and sacrifice, etc.

"Secondly, as a natural reaction to the tremendous difficulties of running what is virtually a new country, after a great and destructive war, and in the face of the mistakes that must inevitably be made, at such a time, people are looking back with a certain nostalgia to the times of British rule in India, and they are now beginning to associate that rule with the Christian religion and this especially in the sphere of honesty and a sense of vocation.

"Thirdly, in the political troubles and bloodshed that have occurred in this country, especially in the Punjab and in Hyderabad State, the witness of the Christian communities has been really tremendous. They have stood like rocks in a sea of political turmoil. It says a great deal, for example, that in the Surangabad District never before has the Christian community been so respected and well liked, both by Hindus and Moslems.

"Fourthly, we are now reaping the harvest of a hundred years of work done in Christian High Schools and Colleges. The Bishop concludes by saying that India is carrying on today, without a breakdown, because all over the country are thousands of government officials who have had their character formed in mission schools and colleges."

Let no one think that things in our Central Province India Mission are all rosy, or that the church has risen up in freshness and power and vision. Let everyone pray that this our church in India may become vibrantly alive, a testimony to Jesus Christ, of which none need be ashamed. We need revival in India.

Reasons for Thanksgiving and Prayer

by Alfred Wiebe

O give thanks unto the LORD, for he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever. Psalm 118:29.

In spite of many elements that tend to be discouraging we also have many reasons for thanksgiving. While Satan is using many means, religious and otherwise, to retain a firm hold on situations in the field, yet we thank the Lord for the evidences of the work of His Spirit in the hearts of people.

The three Bible schools at Longdale, Fonda and Cantonment were an encouragement to us. While all three schools were but small the attendance and interest was good. We were glad to have all the children, but three or four of those in the district at the time, to attend the Bible school at least part of the time.

The Young People's Retreat at Roman Nose Park near Watonga was a time of refreshing spiritually for young people and workers.

Another blessed time was the camp meeting that was held at Longdale for four days the first week of August. H. P. Fast, our guest speaker, brought very helpful messages. Though many were not there whom we would like to have had to attend, yet the attendance was encouraging.

Six people, two men and four girls, all from the Fonda district, had received baptismal instruction for some time previous and they asked that they might be baptized on Sunday, August sixth, the last day of the camp meeting, so their wish was fulfilled. One of the men had been baptized elsewhere as a small boy, but said he had not understood what he was doing at the time, so he desired to be baptized again. The other one had reecived his first impulse toward the step he was taking now when he, as a small boy, was taken to church regularly by his mother at Lame Deer, Montana. (She was baptized about 37 years ago, while we were stationed there.) One of the girls is the daughter of the man last mentioned. She accepted the Lord a number of months ago. The remaining three are sisters, two of them twins. Three of their sisters had joined the church some years ago. This was a joyous occasion, and our joy was increased when at the close of the service we were told that the father of the three girls also had "decided." And we are looking forward to the time when he and his wife will both accept baptism. The meal that followed the baptismal service and at which the entire audience took part, was furnished, in part, as an expression of joy and thanksgiving by the one whose husband and daughter both had now been added to the church.

Japan to Rise Again

Eearthquakes bring destruction,
Spring breezes, new buds.
These two forces are always present in Japan,
But on the latter I put my hopes.

Japan's doom did not come upon her overnight.
Like a rotten old willow tree
Felled by a hurricane because it was Standing on a river bank,
She was destined to be defeated.
Like the San Jose scale, militarism
Was eating out the heart of the decrepit trunk.

On the very spot where the old tree fell
We must replant God's pines that will live
For thousands of years to come.
Japan fell but to rise again!
Only by this disaster can she come to full maturity.
Only by the consuming fire can she be purified
From idol worship and hell-born licentiousness.

* * * *

If I fail to do my utmost
To reconstruct this defeated nation that I love
How can I make apology to God our Father—
Since I went about praying to him
As fervently as a madman
In the midst of those terrible air raids,
Showers of incendiary fire
And fearful war-bombing.

O Almighty God, graciously arouse Japan after her long stupor,
For the day of her resurrection is overdue.
Even the morning star at dawn is waiting
For Japan to awake! —Toyohiko Kagawa.

A Testimony

by a Japanese Girl

Before I was saved, I sought the truth concerning the universe. Its greatness was unfathomable because I did not know the Lord Jesus. I longed for something and by His grace I was saved in April of 1949. I believed that the Lord Jesus was God and received Him into my heart. For the first time I experienced true peace and joy. John 3:16-18 was the first passage of Scripture that was given me. I have the joy that cannot be compared with anything else. He has forgiven my sins and given me eternal life. I cannot measure His great love for me.

The idols I have worshipped became foolishness to me, and now I worship the only true living God. He hears and answers my prayers and I am greatly blessed.

At one time I sought intellectual culture, but now I want to follow Him and live to glorify Him. The things of the world mean nothing to me.

I am Saved! But when I see the world around me—idolators in utter darkness and despair—I cannot help but feel the responsibility of giving them His Word which is the only Truth.

Standards for Evaluating Sunday School Material

by Paul R. Shelly

The organization of the church exists in order to aid in the perpetuating of the principles for which the church stands. The Mennonite Church, together with all evangelical Christians, accepts the cardinal Christian truths. In addition, the Mennonite Church has also believed a number of other basic dogmas. It has adhered to these particular tenets not because Menno Simons taught them, but because it felt that these beliefs are an integral part of the total Christian Gospel. Certainly, other churches too accept some of these fundamental doctrines, but practically none of these churches have accepted all of them. The Mennonite Church has always believed in four convictions in addition to those taught by the Protestant Church as a whole—the authority of the Bible, a voluntary church with believer's baptism, the fact that a person who is a Christian must live in accordance with his Christian experience, and the way of love. Our Sunday schools, as well as all of our church organizations, exist in order that we may interpret all of these basic beliefs to the children, young people, and adults in our churches. As you look into your Sunday school it is well for you to examine the materials you are using to see whether they are in keeping with the above doctrines. Actually, as you view your Sunday school materials, a number of questions should be raised.

1. Do the materials that you use regard the Bible as the inspired Word of God and interpret it according to the life, death, and teachings of Jesus Christ? There are many materials on the market today that take other views to the Bible than this one. This approach to the Bible has always been the one that the Mennonites have followed. In reality, it is the attitude that Christ Himself took to the Scriptures. He said that He came to fulfill the law. He also spoke the following words: "Ye have heard it said . . . but I say unto you."

2. Do the materials that you use stress the total gospel, i.e. both the personal and social aspects of it? Jesus read from the writings of the prophet Isaiah when He spoke in the synagogue of Nazareth declaring that His mission was both to preach and to heal. Some materials stress the personal element of the gospel almost entirely. Other materials stress the social part of the gospel almost exclusively. The Mennonites have always emphasized both aspects of the one gospel. The materials that we use in our Sunday schools should accentuate both of these elements.

3. Do the materials that you use accept the basic Christian doctrines without emphasizing any particular fads? Again, not all materials fulfill this qualification. Certainly, some materials are sold that do not follow the cardinal Christian tenets. There are other materials that adhere to the fundamental Christian truths, but are constantly stressing certain fads or special emphases upon which evangelical Christians differ. The Mennonites throughout most of their history have accepted the basic Christian doctrines without reservation, but have not stressed the many tangents that have been a part of the outlook of some groups.

4. Do the materials that you use emphasize the distinctive Mennonite beliefs? The answer to this question suggests one of the weakest points of many of the materials that are being published today. This is especially true of materials that are printed by publishing houses with no denominational affiliation. Since their materials are not produced to perpetuate the beliefs of any one denomination, these publishers attempt to put out materials that will have the widest possible sale. These materials have certain basic beliefs, and yet they have not emphasized the distinctive truths that have always been a part of our Mennonite heritage. Not only do they not emphasize these particular issues, but when these unique principles are threatened in society as a whole, many times these materials tend to side with the opinion that is most pronounced at the moment.

5. Do the materials that you use adapt the Biblical material to the every day lives of the people who are being taught? Some materials emphasize Biblical content without sufficient application to life. Other materials stress practical applications almost to the exclusion of Biblical content. The materials that we use should accomplish both of these functions. Certainly we want people in our Sunday schools to learn to know the Bible, but we want them also to learn the meaning of the Bible for their lives so that they will become new creatures and be transformed and "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ."

6. Do the materials that you use fit the age group for which they are intended? Not all the materials that are printed do this equally well. Simply because a quarterly is labeled for a particular group does not mean that it fits this age group.

The issue of whether your materials fulfill these qualifications is an important one, for if your materials are not in keeping with these objectives, your Sunday school may actually be hindering the work of the church in its task of carrying out the mission of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ rather than helping it. It is well to examine the quarterlies that you are using in an attempt to see to what extent they fit these qualifications.

The quarterlies produced by the General Conference attempt to keep these qualifications in mind. It is because we believe in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, with all of its implications mentioned in the opening paragraph, that we as a General Conference produce our own materials. All of us need to see more clearly than we have in the past that to have Sunday schools in which we use materials which are contrary to our convictions does not help us to carry out our basic beliefs. As all of our Sunday schools secure this vision we will be able to produce an increasingly large amount of our own materials, since all of us will use our own productions, since they will help us in our mutual task of carrying out the commission of our Master.

MCC News Notes

Sewing Classes Continue in Japan

In the relief unit in Japan, a number of regular activities have been recessed during the hot season, although sewing classes have been continuing as usual. In the morning the MCC unit furnishes the materials for sewing; in the afternoon those come to use the facilities who have their own materials with which to sew garments.

Voluntary Service Notes

In the Espelkamp project in Germany a number of Mennonite young men have been assisting in construction and other services to help in converting a former war munitions depot into a Christian community for refugees. This service unit has been directed under MCC auspices, but now is to be assumed more directly in personnel, support and planning, by the Conservative Amish group. Among the services that have developed in this project in addition to construction are Bible classes, fellowship meetings, home visitation and Sunday School meetings.

Selma Bartel, R. N. of Hillsboro, Kansas, left recently for service in Mexico. Daniel Peters of Gretna, Manitoba, has taken a teaching assignment in the Santa Clara unit in Mexico.

Peace Section Notes

Following testimony given by H. Clair Amstutz, M.D., and others, the bill providing for a special registration of doctors, dentists and allied specialists up to 50 years of age, was amended to make its clear that the Selective Service provision for COs would apply to persons registered under this act. The bill requiring such registration provides also for their induction into the Armed Forces under a system of priority under which persons who obtained their training at government expense will be called first. The bill was passed by both the Senate and House of Representatives.

Further action on Universal Military Training has been postponed until after this session of Congress. The Senate Armed Services Committee, instead of reporting out a bill, appointed a sub-committee to give the matter further study and to report in January, 1951, or at the next of Congress.

A bill by Senator McCarran for Portection of the internal security of the United States, and directed particularly to the citizenship restrictions of persons connected with subversive activities, contained also a section which would amend the naturalization oath so as to require persons who would be naturalized to promise to do either combatant of noncombatant military service if required by law. Following representation made on this subject Senator McCarren agreed to introduce a qualifying amendment by which bona fide religious conscientious objectors to military service could be naturalized without promising to do military service. The bill is now under consideration in the Senate.

Tour to Europe and Holy Land

The Holy Land holds a deeply-rooted interest for Christians all over the world. Europe has a definite historical and Mennonite interest. Of interest also is the relief work carried on by the Mennonites in both of these areas. With this in mind, a tour has been planned that will include Beirut, Damascus, Jerusalem, Bethlehem, and Cairo. Bro. Orie O. Miller has just returned from a visit to Palestine in the interest of the relief work there, and has gained information that makes such a tour possible at this time.

The group will leave New York by ship on October 27, and arrive back in New Yok by ship on December 18, 1950. The tour both in Europe and Palestine will be by car. The travel to Palestine and Egypt will be by plane. The whole tour will be conducted by a European representative of Menno Travel Service. The trip will therefore lend itself well toward the participants obtaining a complete and composite picture of the areas visited. The group will be limited to 12 people, thereby making possible a fine fellowship throughout.

The complete, inclusive cost, including all travel and tour arrangements, meals and lodging, will be approximately $900.00.

To enable the making of the final ararngements it is necessary that the group membership be complete by September 22. For further information and for reservations write, telegraph, or call Menno Travel Service, Akron, Pennsylvania (Telephone Ephrata 3-2265).

Our Villages

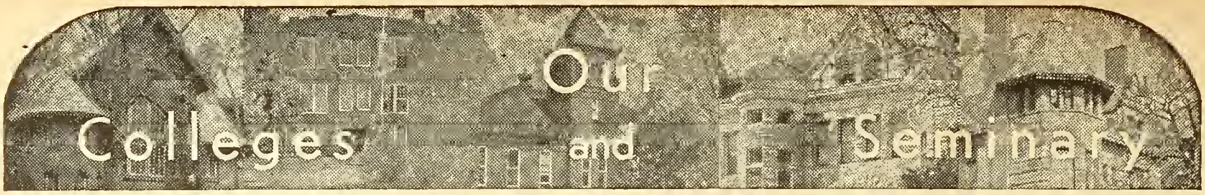
Not long ago someone made the statement that there are in the United States more than ten thousand villages and hamlets in which there is no Christian church. There may be a school, a post office, a garage and perhaps a bank, a theater, and a tavern. But no church. The people there may have practically everything that the average human being requires for his physical and material well-being. Yet they are utterly lacking in that for which the spirit of man longs. Athirst for God, man's soul finds nothing in these villages which can satisfy that thirst.

It is appalling to think that in these ten thousand communities children shall be reared without the slightest knowledge of God and his law, without ever knowing that there is a Savior who has died for them and who by his grace can deliver them from the troubles and evils of this present world.

It seems unbelievable that here in our own United States, land of education, of progress, of enlightenment, of social welfare, and endless religious activity, there still can be so many communities where men and women live out their lives without the knowledge and experience of the guiding hand of a loving heavenly Father and without the reassuring comfort of his Spirit, and, saddest of all, that finally they must cross over into eternity without the Light which alone can show the way.

Is it not strange that the Christian church and the missionary-minded people of America have not yet heard the cry of these villages, "Come over and help us!" Where in all the world do we face a more compelling call to teach and to preach the gospel to every creature?

O God, also toward the village, when the call comes to us, give us responsive hearts and willing hands.



OPENING WEEK

To set the tone for the experience of a year at Bethel College, freshmen met in the college chapel Tuesday morning, September 5, for a devotional period led by Acting President, D. C. Wedel. The group was then divided and each freshman was given standardized tests and physical examinations. In the evening the men met with their advisor, Harley J. Stucky, while the women met with Mrs. Eva G. Harshbarger. A fellowship hour later in the evening closed the day's activities.

On Wednesday the program of tests and examinations was continued. In the afternoon the freshmen were entertained with a tea sponsored by the Women's Association of Bethel College. The Student Christian Association was host at a reception given in the evening in the Student Union Room.

The process of registration and the selection of courses took place Thursday, September 7. On Friday they were introduced to the various student organizations and began actual class work. The annual Fall Mixer Friday evening in Memorial Hall for all students, faculty and staff members, was in charge of the Student Council.

A new feature of opening week at Bethel this year was an evening of campus life pictures Saturday evening in the Student Union Room.

Juniors and seniors reported for registration, Wednesday, September 6, while sophomores registered Friday morning. All classes participated in the evening social events.

Dr. Harder to speak

The formal opening of the new school year was conducted at 8:00 p.m., Sunday evening, September 10, in Memorial Hall. Dr. M. S. Harder, Associate Professor of Education, was the speaker.

Scholarship granted

The office of the dean announced the following scholarships which were recently granted: Lois De Dona Gering, of Mountain Lake, Minn., daughter of Rev. Walter Gering, was granted a music scholarship, and Norma Mae Neufeld, of Paso Robles, California, daughter of John C. Neufeld, was granted an honor scholarship.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Five members of the Bluffton College faculty attended General Conference in Freeman, South Dakota: Edna Ramseyer, J. S. Schultz, Paul Shelly, Carl Lehman, and L. L. Ramseyer.

The college staff is greatly strengthened this fall by the addition of new personnel. Instead are Luther Shetler, Goshen, Indiana, mathematics; Kenneth Mast, Sugarcreek, Ohio, physical education; Ada Lapp, Sterling, Illinois, elementary education; Richard Weaver, Goshen, Indiana, physics and chemistry; George Fadenrecht, Lawrence, Kansas, history; Delbert Gratz, Bluffton, Ohio, librarian; and George Bohrer, Normal, Illinois, in charge of buildings and grounds. All of these are members of some branch of the Mennonite church. Two are graduates of Goshen College, one of Tabor College, one of Heidelberg College, and three of Bluffton College.

In addition to the above Robert Kreider has accepted an invitation to join the college staff when his graduate work is completed, probably in the autumn of 1952.

Miss Edna Ramseyer will be on leave of absence this year to continue work toward her doctorate in home economics at Ohio State University. William Burbick will teach part time while working on his doctor's degree in speech at Ohio State.

The Teacher

Lord, who am I to teach the way
To little children day by day,
So prone myself to go astray?

I teach them knowledge, but I know
How faint they flicker and how low
The candles of my knowledge glow.

I teach them power to will and do,
But only now to learn anew
My own great weakness through and through.

I teach them love for all mankind
And all God's creatures, but I find
My love comes lagging far behind.

Lord, if their guide I still must be,
Oh, let the children see
Their teacher leaning hard on Thee.

A CLARION CALL!

In the notable book, The Educational Ideal in the Ministry, the author, Dr. W.H.P. Faunce, sounded out this clear, statesman-like call: "Here, then, is our national peril—that the supremely important task of our generation will fall between Church and State and be ignored by both. The Church may say 'Education is no longer in our hands'; the State may say, 'On all religious matters we are silent.' Thus millions may grow up—are actually growing up in America today—without any genuine religious training. It is time, therefore, for Church and School to cooperate in defense of our common country."

We have too many people who live without working; and we have altogether too many who work without living.

Jottings

PACIFIC DISTRICT

—Immanuel Church, Los Angeles, Calif.: Miss Dorothy Schroeder, missionary to Africa, has returned safely. Our Sunday School helps support her in her work. Our women's missionary society has contributed to the mental hospital in Reedley. John Whitaker, a former member here, passed away suddenly of a heart attack. Funeral services were held in the Upland Calif. Church.

—Glendale Church, Lynden, Washington: Our congregation, together with three neighboring churches, enjoyed an all-day joint song festival on August 27 at Ferndale. F. D. Koehn has been serving the church while our pastor, Dan Toevs, is attending the Conference at Freeman, South Dakota. The laymen have been busy putting in the church kitchen. Each of the classes in the junior department packed a Christmas bundle. September 10 is the date set for the annual harvest festival.—Mrs. Clarence Schmidt, Corr.

NORTHERN DISTRICT

—Friedensberg Church, Avon, South Dakota: On a recent Sunday the new pulpit and communion table were dedicated to the service of the Lord and the Church. With the installation of this furniture the complete rennovation of the interior of the church was finished. The old pulpit had been in use for 52 years. Many a heart-searching and challenging message has gone forth from it.—Anna Unruh, Corr.

—Butterfield Church, Butterfield, Minnesota: Jacob Linscheid Jr. and Waldo S. Linscheid, both members of our church, passed away recently. Mrs. Jacob F. Stoez passed away August 7. We have had a cool summer. Our crops have been very good, thanks to God.—Mrs. Ted Linscheid, Corr.

WESTERN DISTRICT

—First Church, Pretty Prairie, Kansas Mr. and Mrs. Harold Graber have been accepted as missionaries to Africa under the Congo Inland Mission Board. Our Sunday School classes have voted to support this project. Mr. Graber is a member of our congregation and Mrs. Graber is the former Glayds Djerdewick of Mt. Lake, Minnesota. An interesting and helpful discussion on the problems of Selective Service and conscientious objectors was presented to the fathers and young men of our congregation September 17, by Paul Goering of Washington, D. C.—Ralph Krehbiel, Corr.

—Burrton Church, Burrton, Kansas: Mr. and Mrs. Fred Unruh attended the General Conference in South Dakota and represented our church there. Mrs. Dan Penner is confined to her bed at home. A bridal shower was held for Elizabeth Ann Regier on August 22, in the church basement. The wedding of Jacka Lee Stephenson and Keith Penner took place Aug. 20, at the Christian Church. Keith is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Marcus Penner of Halstead. Jim Siemens spent the first week of this month at Camp Murdock with the Young People's Retreat. Dale Blandin has joined the Air Force and is stationed in San Antonia, Texas.

—Beatrice Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: On August 2, Valsis Penner and Alfred Claassen were united in marriage. Thirty-five Christmas Bundles were packed by families in our congregation. The Fellowship class has participated both in our Sunday Union Services held in our city park and have transcribed several programs for broadcasting over our local radio station. They climaxed their summer activities with a concert on August 16, at which time an offering for Bethel was held.—Corr.

—Eden Church, Inola, Oklahoma: Sunday, August 20, returned chaplain John Bergen brought the morning message, briefly touching his experience in Germany. The I. M. B. Church dismissed and came over for the occasion. Bro. Regier was at Medford Oklahoma for a Family Reunion. We are happy to report that he is willing to serve us three more years; also, Bro. W. R. Voth as Deacon.—Jacob Froese, Corr.

—Deer Creek Church, Deer Creek, Oklahoma: Work has begun on the basement of our new church. It was decided to build the new church near the parsonage so that the old church building can be used for worship services until the new building is completed. The three Deer Creek churches (Mennonite, Methodist, and Christian) are having union worship services during the summer months; a Union Youth Service precedes the regular service.—Mrs. Allen Moyer, Corr.

MIDDLE DISTRICT

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: A fourth adult Sunday School class has now organized and recently spent a social evening together. Our minister, Irvin Richert, and our deacon, Wilbur Gerber, represented our church at General Conference. Sunday evening, August 20, was spent in a complete program of song as given by various groups and individuals including a juvenile orchestra, marimba solo, vocal solo, duet, and quartet, ladies' chorus and a mixed choir with the Christian Endeavor chorister, Mrs. Lester Diller, chairman of the evening. August 27 was visitation Sunday.— Mrs. Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

—First Church, Bluffton, Ohio: Joanne Buhler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gerhard Buhler, and Leland Voth, son of missionary W. C. Voth's were united in marriage on the evening of Sept. 2. A son of the Buhler's, Samuel, and Inez Risser of Los Angeles, Calif. were married on August 26.

—Eicher Church, Wayland, Iowa: The Sunday school had a fellowship picnic at Saunder's Park in Mt. Pleasant on August 8. The church is taking on the support of a native evangelist in Formosa. Glenn Graber, a member here, is a relief worker in Formosa and has been working with the evangelist.—Mrs. Erwen Graber, Corr.

Into the Beyond

JACOB MUELLER, Halstead, Kansas, was born August 23, 1877, and died June 16, 1950. He loved flowers and supplied them for the church each Sunday.

Oklahoma Team Serves in Kansas and Oklahoma

The old saying, "A jack of all trades and a master of none" often expressed the sentiments of the three members of the Youth Team in their vagabonding of the past month. The many and varied experiences encountered have been unusually interesting and challenging.

A three day training and planning period at Bethel College preceded the actual work of the Youth Team. Miss Elaine Waltner and Mr. Bill Lampi met with Miss Bertha Fast, Rev. Victor Sawatzky, Rev. Erwin Goering, Rev. George Stoneback, and Rev. W. F. Unruh, June 15 and 16. Miss Evelyne Sawatzky joined the team after the first week in Wichita.

The team spent two weeks at the Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church in Wichita, Kansas, and one week each at Mennonite Churches in Hutchinson, Kansas, and Enid, Oklahoma, respectively. The work at the three churches was quite different, as one would expect. It was the purpose of the team to assist in anyway possible to meet the needs existing in the Churches. The following is a brief, running account of the main activities of the team.

Assisting in the regular Sunday morning Church service with musical numbers was the initial introduction of the group to the Wichita congregation. Monday, the two week Bible School began. Bill, in addition to making himself useful as general handyman, also helped provide planned and spontaneous recreation for church and neighborhood children. Sunday evening the young people enjoyed a fellowship hour. A musical program followed in which the team and Walter Jost participated. Approximately fifty homes in the immediate vicinity of the Church were contacted in an attempt to find prospective members for brownies and cub scouts to be organized at the Church.

At Hutchinson, two weeks later, the group visited several Sunday School classes and again took part in the worship service. Monday was set aside for visiting people who in the recent religious census in Hutchinson indicated Mennonite as their Church preference. This was an interesting study in ways of approaching people in regard to the Church. Tuesday, the fourth of July, was the unit's day of freedom. Wednesday evening the unit and Rev. Sawatzky engaged in a panel discussion in a Church Worker's Conference. Subjects discussed included Church visitation, Socials and Recreation in the Church, and Methods of Teaching in Sunday School. Thursday, a children's day camp complete with supervised games, picnic lunch, planned hikes, group worship service, and swimming was scheduled. Friday we went to the pastor's study to help organize and prepare clippings for filing. In the evening the team went to a weiner roast at a farm home for the young people of the church. Around the camp fire a discussion and worship service was held.

And then another Saturday dawned, and again the team was on the move. This time it was to Enid, Oklahoma. General information clerk and red-cap, Bill, performed his duties well on this, the team's longest jaunt. At five p.m. we arrived at Enid and were scarcely settled at H. T. Neufelds when Ernst Harder appeared. He was traveling in the interest of students for Bethel. On Sunday, we attended the services and had a church fellowship dinner following. In the afternoon, we had a hearty spontaneous sing with the young people of the Church, accompanied by many musical instruments.

We also scouted the neighborhood for recruits for the colored Bible School. The response indicated that at least thirty would be out. Eight negro children arrived Monday morning. The following day our number doubled. On Wednesday there were twenty, and that was the peak of attendance. Altogether there were twenty-seven different youngsters attending with an average attendance of fourteen.

In addition to visiting church members's homes, which was the custom in the two other churches as well, two evening programs were given by the team. Monday evening the theme was "Voluntary Service" and Wednesday evening it was "Worshipping God Through Music." Liberal use was made of the Handbook to the Mennonite Hymnary in the last service.

The regular evening service was preceded by a children's meeting at seven o'clock. A picnic and a program for and by the colored children was given on Friday.

That was the last Friday, Saturday found all three of the team going their separate ways, happy to have had the opportunity to serve voluntarily, in a vital, realistic way and to live the message of love Christ proclaimed.

A UNIVERSITY PRESIDENT ON COLLEGES

"I am in no way untrue to state institutions when I say that in our day a boy might become a bachelor or master in almost any one of the best of them and be as ignorant of the Bible, the moral and spiritual truth which it represents and the fundamental principles of religion, their nature and value to society, as if he had been educated in a non-Christian country. Who is to supply this lack if not the Christian college?" —W. O. Thompson, Ohio State University.

What Think Ye of Christ?

(Matt. 22:42)

by Don Steer

As Jesus puts this question to the Pharisees it was probably not meant as a searching question. But, in a more searching manner I now ask you, "What think ye of Christ?" Have you ever stopped to consider just what Christ means to you? Or what you think of as Christ's office?

I am assuming that the reader is a professing Christian, or, if not, at least deeply interested in Christianity. The few paragraphs which follow are directed toward the professing Christian.

Primarily, you should think of Christ as your redeemer and spiritual guide. Your redemption from sin was made possible by His death on the cross. He redeemed you by paying the supreme price. You are therefore a debtor beyond all calculable value. As your redeemer, you owe him everything that you are or ever will be. And having given his life for you, it is only natural that He should have a great interest in you. He has great plans for you, and His every wish should be your command. As your spiritual guide, you should give Him full reign. He knows what is best for you, and by following Him, your life will be much richer and fuller. Christ should be very real to you as a saviour and a spiritual guide.

You should think of Christ as a teacher, too. His many teachings given to us through the New Testament are great truths, and sound advice for today's world. His most common teaching device, the parable, is commonly recognized as an excellent method of teaching. His own life exemplified his teachings, so you may take his life as an example and illustration of his teachings. His teaching of love might be used to advantage in today's international situation.

You ought also to think of Christ as your God. As a member of the Trinity, He deserves the adoration, devotion, and other service which you render to your God. As your God, He is to be feared, if you transgress his will. Greater than this fear should be your love for Him. His great love and compassion for you merits all your devotion.

You should also consider Christ as a man. "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us." He chose to put on a cloak of flesh and go through the common experiences of the human race, "For He was tempted in all points like as we, yet without sin." His earthly life is a challenge to you to follow the example which He set. His meekness and humility, his love for his fellowman, His entire life can be taken as an example.

You might consider Christ as a leader of men. His tactful, yet firm manner of dealing with men was remarkable. His leadership ability, together with the message of redemption which He brought to the world, enabled Him to gather a great number of disciples about Him and found a church which encompassed the globe.

Speaking more spiritually again, Christ should be your comfort in times of sorrow, the one to whom you can go in times of need. He is the friend who will never forsake you. The only way that your fellowship can be broken is through your own volition. He should be your source of strength in trying times. These services are his compensation for your devotion to Him.

These have been a few random thoughts based on my own experience. There is more that I could add. Perhaps I have already said too much. However, you will have some additional or differing views, depending upon your picture of Christ. No two views are exactly the same. With plenty of room for reflection, the question stands: "What think ye of Christ?"

WOULD CHRIST HAVE PRESSED THE BUTTON?

John Ferguson, lecturer in classics in the University of Durham, England, places the issue of participation in war squarely before Christian youth in a leaflet with the above title. The following is quoted from that leaflet:

On Aug. 6, 1945, a man in an airplane pressed a button, and more than 80,000 human lives were extinguished. Saints and sinners, martyrs and murderers, innocent and guilty, those on the threshold of life and those on the threshold of death, soldiers, munition workers, doctors, nurses, fire service, ambulance service, civil defence, were all swallowed up in a single holocaust. It is well that we should be clear at the outset as to the nature of modern war. Because of this you must ask yourself with a new urgency whether it can ever be right to take part in those things, and whether the nature of war today does not demand from the Christian that he shall utterly renounce it.

. . . The question which faces the Christian in all its stark simplicity is this—would Christ have pressed the button which released the atomic destruction upon Hiroshima? We pray that Christ may dwell in our hearts; if that action could not be his, then it cannot be ours if we are true to our calling as his disciples. Modern war is utterly alien to the mind of Christ, and we as Christians can play no part in waging it.

Few things are more terrifying than the way events can drag us down to their level. In 1940 a Christian leader wrote: "If war degenerates into wilful slaughter of the innocent, Christians must either become pacifists or give up their religion." In 1949, after the bombing of Hamburg and Hiroshima, the writer is still opposing pacifism.—Gospel Messenger

It is not a question how much a man knows, but what use he makes of what he knows.

Old Fashioned Games Are Fun

by Jack Blaney

If you could jump back 50 years and peek in at a country party, you'd probably find something like this going on:

Chairs are placed in a circle with girls seated and a fellow standing behind each. One of the chairs is vacant. To remedy this, the boy behind the empty chair tries to lure away one of the fair maidens in the circle by slyly winking at her, whereupon she is obliged to bolt for the vacant chair—if she can! For if her partner is on his toes, he'll grab her by the shoulders, the instant she moves. However, he must observe a "hands off" policy until she is actually winked at. Later the boys and girls trade places.

It may be a bit hard on clothes, but everyone is having a hilarious time.

This rustic pastime is known as "Winkem," and it is only one of the many old-fashioned fun-makers that made pioneer American socials breathlessly successful.

It would be difficult to trace the origin of such hardy favorites as "Winkem," "Flying Dutchman," and "Three Deep." But there are sound reasons for their popularity. They had just about everything that present-day amusements lack.

For example "spectatoritis" was justified only by infirmity. When the cry rang out to "form a circle" or "number off" everyone automatically became a participant. These frontier frolics were only slightly less strenuous than a football game and twice as much fun!

The problem of cliques and couples was handled with a nicety which we would do well to note. While most of the games were patterned for twosomes, their progress kept reshuffling the partners, as in the case of "Three Deep" and "Winkem."

The end result was that these country socials were exactly what the name implied: they were group affairs, largely free from wall flowers and "couple isolation."

Along with vigorous exercise and an excellent boy-girl policy, these games offered fine opportunity for casual conversation. Since as a rule only two or three couples were in action at a time, the rest of the group watched with keen interest and offered frequent comments while waiting their turn. Even the most bashful adolescent could usually muster a remark or two to his partner of the moment.

Proper management of such games was also of utmost importance and it still is. Today, this can be accomplished by observing a few simple rules. Tell bashful people what to do instead of merely asking them to do something. Some will cooperate better if you appeal to them to help you. Time your efforts so that the shy person gets into things as part of a group, at a time when everyone will not be noticing him.

As for the show-off, you may gratify his ego by making him the fall guy for some "trick" game! Often, however, he to can best be reached by making him feel that his allegiance to your instructions is absolutely indispensable—that you are depending on him.

In addition, here are some important points to keep in mind:

(1) Be sure that you choose the opening games carefully. They should be simple, spontaneous, requiring little explanation and few instructions. This will enable you to get things rolling smoothly, without undue confusion. Be sure that the games are the type that latecomers can join in easily, without your having to stop everything and diagram what's going on.

An excellent example of this is "Flying Dutchman," which is so obvious that it can be comprehended at a glance. Tardy party-comers can join the circle without slowing down the game, and its boisterous activity sets a rollicking pace for your evening's fun.

(2) Always stop a game and start a new one before the group wants to. If they protest when you change games, it's a good sign. Almst everyone makes the mistake of letting a game run too long. Remember, you're supposed to be a leader. That doesn't mean that you should be dictatorial, but it does mean that the responsibility for running things is in your hands. Let the rest know that you expect their co-operation.

(3) Alternate the types of games. For instance, don't wear the players out by a long string of running games. Let them sit down once in a while. Put the more violent games early in the evening, and the "talking" games toward the end.

(4) Keep your facilities in mind when choosing games. Be sure that there are no accident hazards.

(5) As we mentioned earlier, it's up to you to see that everyone has a good time. Be tactful, but firm. Once you get a recalcitrant into the swing of things, chances are that he'll thoroughly enjoy himself.

(6) Be sure that the game period merges smoothly into what follows, whether it's refreshments, devotions, or what have you.

Why not give these time-tested favorites a try? Once you get your young people to forget themselves and plunge into one of the games with enthusiasm, they'll be sold.

To attempt to list and explain all of the interesting games available would occupy too much space, but you can find them, with instructions, in any good game book.

Or better yet, ask Grandma!

Okahoma Retreat Held at Hydro

by W. F. Unruh

It was a privilege to attend the Oklahoma Young People's Retreat as a guest. As I recall the experience there, certain impressions pesist. The atmosphere of the camp was one of love and devotion to Jesus Christ. He was central, and the joy of salvation the tone of the life of the camp. The retreat song, "Blessed Assurance" was sung at practically every gathering, not as a routine but as an expression of an inner joy and assurance it seemed.

Since the pastors of the Oklahoma churches are asked to attend the retreat with the young people, the life together at the retreat builds up a raport which will go far towards mutual understanding and appreciation. Discipline problems seemed at a minimum, and such things as came up were dealt with firmly and without distracting effects. Bible study had a large part on the program. Appreciation of church music was taught in a spirit that was both worshipful and enjoyable. The young people will be able to participate in worship through song more intelligently as a result of this study. The leaders encouraged and urged the young people to give their lives to the Master, but with no undue pressure, and the response was beautiful, The recreational life was fine. Outsiders commented that this was the finest bunch of young people they had ever had in the swimming pool. There was a hilarious spirit, but all the fun was above board and thoroughly enjoyed. In doing dishes and planting grass the young people worked together in a spirit that gives one the confidence that when these young people will in years to come meet together as delegates in conference, they will feel themselves united in Christ, and will know each other enough to overlook any slants that might seem a problem. As I think back it seems to me there was just one more thing that should have been done at this retreat which was not done. The young people should have been given some guidance in facing the draft situation, because this will be a great test for them in the near future. This young people's retreat accomplished something which will count for the Kingdom of God. I am sure that everyone who attended will be a better follower of Christ for having been present.

the impressive and suggestive musical number; "There is a balm in Gilead." There is our answer if we will apply it. There is a remedy to heal the sin-sick soul and make the wounded whole. To be truly joyous there must be inner conditions unaffected by outer circumstances. He has the balm of Gilead who accepts Christ and is in right relations with God. It is possible to enjoy happiness of soul and joy of heart if the soul and heart are at home in God.

self-seeking by an article appearing in a secular magazine. The article stated that a certain railroad discovered that the reason a passenger train rode so roughly was not due to the condition of the road-bed, but to the fact that the wheels on the coaches were no longer perfectly round. All the road grading in the world would not correct the defect. If our life is right at its diameter it will be evident before the world. We cannot always change the conditions of the world but we may live a life which seeks not its own. Such a life will make the rough places plain. "Seekest thou great things for thyself? Seek them not." This is God's message to us to-day! Let us seek great things for God!

Never let a man imagine he can pursue a good end by evil means, without sinning against his own soul.

There are others who have a longing for salvation, but who find it so hard to take the deciding step. Please, pray for them as well as for the newly baptized, and for all the Christians. Pray also that many more find their way to Christ. The fight is on, a battle between two spiritual powers. May it not be lost because we who are on the Lord's side neglect prayer.

Alfred Wiebe

On the bulletin board of the Toronto Baptist Seminary appears the following quotation:

WANTED: a young preacher—with the experience of a parrot, the sagacity of an owl,
the strength of an eagle,
the grace of a swan,
the gentleness of a dove,
the friendliness of a sparrow;
up with the lark,
at work with the hawk,
—and when they get him caged they expect him to live on the feed of a canary.

He dropped a quarter in the plate,
Then meekly raised his eyes;
Glad that his weekly rent was paid,
To mansions in the skies.

Beyond Our Own

UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING

1. Senator Millard E. Tydings introduced S. 4062, A Bill to Establish a Universal Training Program. This Bill had been drawn up by the Defense Department, and was forwarded to Mr. Tydings, Chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, and to Mr. Carl Vinson, Chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, with the request that they introduce this Bill into the Senate and House respectively. Concerning conscientious objectors, Section 134 of the bill contains the following language:

"Each registrant found not to be eligible for military training shall, subject to such quota limitations and standards of qualification as may be established by the Commission, be entitled to request and receive training in the non-military training program of his choice, and shall be classified therein by the local board: Provided, that any such person claiming exemption from combatant training, because of religious training and belief defined in Section 6 (j) of the Selective Service Act of 1948, as amended, and whose claim is sustained by the local board shall, when inducted or assigned under this title, be required to elect training in such other training program of his choice provided herein subject to such quotas and standards as may be established."

Please enclose this label when writing.

Upon consideration of a number of matters which required further study and following a direct request of the President in conference with Mr. Tydings, and Mr. Vinson, the Senate Armed Services Committee decided against reporting out a UMT bill this session. A sub-committee was appointed to give the matter further study and to report in January, 1951, or at the next session of Congress.

BUS COMPANY GIVES FREE RIDES TO CHURCH

For 90 days at least, residents of Jacksonville, Fla., may ride to and from church and Sunday school free of charge, Wiley L. Moore, president of the Jacksonville Coach Company, announced.

All they have to do is tell the driver "I'm going to church," or "I have been to church," Mr. Moore told a luncheon meeting of local ministers. The free rides started July 30.

"The church is the backbone of the nation," he said, "and if the churches fall by the wayside, we are finished."—Gospel Messenger

GRAHAM'S PORTLAND REVIVAL

Evangelist Billy Graham talked to more people in six days in Portland, Oregon, than in his first week's appearance in any other city in the United States. Some 83,000 persons visited the specially-built tabernacle to hear the evangelist urge them to renounce sin and accept Jesus Christ. The 12,000-seat structure was filled or overflowed every night. From 150 to 250 converts were made each night.—Gospel Messenger

Only thirteen of the present members of Congress are without church connections. The rest are proud of their faith. Seventeen denominations are represented. The Methodists stand first, the Catholics second.—Covenant Weekly

It is only eighty years ago that Christianity was first introduced to Japan, yet the gospel has gained a firm hold in the minds and hearts of her people. The progress is all the more remarkable, inasmuch as the total gifts for missionary work in Japan, from all American denominations, in all these eighty years, is equal to the cost of only one battleship!—Covenant Weekly

Book Notes . . . . CIVILIAN PUBLIC SERVICE

SERVICE FOR PEACE, by Melvin Gingerich, Akron, Pennsylvania, Mennonite Central Committee, 1949. 508 pp. $3.00.

A "million days, a million dollars" almost fits the story of Civilian Public Service. Mennonite CPS during 1941-47 actually involved more than two million days work and contributions from home churches totalling more than three million dollars. These figures may help us to realize that the story of CPS is the record of the biggest organized undertaking of Mennonite history. In this were involved the huge finances, the large number of members in service, the long-term and immediate contribution to human needs, the widespread lay witness to our Christian principles, and the unmatched educational experience of the church. Any undertaking of our church which involves so much deserves a careful recording; SERVICE FOR PEACE deserves to be in the hands of those who participatd on the "home front" and the "front lines."

How should peace-loving Christians deal with mistreatment of others, and sometimes themselves? For a challenging answer one can read the story of work in the run-down Virginia mental hospital. Some men worked for seven months before they had a day off duty!—The California experience with a chronic hater of "C.O.'s" and the caroling at his home on Christmas eve makes meaningful the scriptural words, "marvel not my brethren if the world hate you." SERVICE FOR PEACE gives us glimpses of real life experiences faced by Christians under testing situations.

It is not intended that everyone will read the book page by page. Rather, many will want to leaf through it to see the pictures, to read some of the personal and unit experiences or some special phase such as the feeding of this "five thousand" by our home community canning programs. Many will want to have SERVICE FOR PEACE on their shelves available so their youth may browse in it and be stimulated to think on what it means to be a C. O. Ministers and others by selective reading will find illustrations helpful for teaching non-resistant living. Melvin Gingerich, former teacher of history at Bethel College, has written this story in a careful, simple, and humble manner. At this time when men are again actually being drafted for killing, SERVICE FOR PEACE has a special immediate significance.—Elmer M. Ediger

Thank You Note

On May 15, 1950 we again received clothing contributions and since it is impossible for each one to write a thank-you letter personally, the Gnadental, Neuland, Chaco, Paraguay, village congregation has decided to write a thank-you letter to the M.C.C., to be made public, to express their heartfelt gratitude and a God Bless You to the donors for the clothing received.

Dear brethren in North America, we have so often experienced in our religious life that the words of our Saviour are true, when he said: "To give is more blessed than to receive."

To be able to receive moves our hearts to tears since we are able to receive again and again what kind hearts are sending to us. Many a person in our midst would today not be able to wear such a nice dress or the men such fine suits to church as they are now wearing if we had not received the clothes on the ship and again here on the land several times. The sweat and the burning sun take good clothing from our backs within a very short time. We know, however, that the love that compels you over there to give, is the love of Jesus Christ, and that this love brings all the world to the point where they are brothers and sisters. We thank you from the bottom of our hearts for the love that you have shown toward us.

We would like to remind you of the words found in Matthew 25:34-36 and verse 40. "Whatsoever ye do unto one of the least of these my brethren, that also have ye done unto me." We, too, believe in the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ and believe that we will be saved. Then we will meet there before his face and see each other personally, those that have shown so much love toward us.

We, the Gnadental village congregation, thank you brethren once more for all the fine articles of clothing and remember you with thanksgiving in our prayers. We also pray to the Lord of the harvests that he may bless your fields and your handiwork so that you may experience that the Lord rewards deeds of love here on earth and will also do so in eternity.

May God through his grace grant that we will all remain true to Him Crown of Life, and hear the words spoken by him: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter into the joy of thy Lord." Matt. 25:21.

With greetings of love, signed at the request of the village congregation at Gnadental, the brethren,

MENNONITE MINISTER REACHES CENTURY MARK

Jonathan B. Hartzler, probably the oldest living Mennonite minister, reached the century mark on August 30. He was ordained into the Old Mennonite Church over seventy years ago, and at present resides in Orrville, Ohio. His father was a minister, and so is also one of his sons. He is still active and alert of mind. He was born in Ohio, but lived for a time in Indiana. There are six children, 39 grandchildren and 84 great grandchildren.

GROWING NEW WOOD

By now the children are back in school, the colleges are running on schedule and teachers and students are at work.

It is pathetic to think of the many who cease growing mentally as soon as they are out of school. How much do we know about the starry heavens above, or the Fall flowers, or God's laws of nature? How much do we know about the conditions under which people live in other parts of the world? How familiar are we with the plan of God for our own lives? How well do we know the greatest Book in the world?

There is so much to learn and so little time in which to do it. Can we not arrange some plan for ourselves whereby we may learn something new each day? Someone expressed surprise to one of our great American poets that he could keep on producing fine poetry in his old age. He looked out of the window to a blossoming cherry tree. He called attention to the fact that the tree could produce flowers and fruit because each year it grew a little new wood just beneath the bark through which flowed the vitality needed. He said, he too, aimed to grow a little new wood each year.

"Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." We can all keep on being students of the marvelous things of God and His wondrous ways. We can grow a little new wood each year.

RALLY DAY

Many Sunday Schools make much of Rally Day. Summer attendance may have had a tendency to slump, but with the return from vacations, the opening of school, and the more regulated life of the children, renewed interest in the Sunday School is anticipated.

There are various ways by which regular attendance and interest may be stimulated. But there is no substitute for a personal interest and love on the part of the teachers, as well as of the parents and the pastor. For a teacher to keep in personal contact with each pupil, with a visit in the home when there is an absence, is far better than to adopt artificial methods of stimulating interest in a spurt of unnatural attendance. Teachers are to be fishers of men and as such need to go where the fish are and win them one by one. It was Jesus' method and cannot be improved.

THE YEAR'S CROWN

Thou crownest the year with thy goodness," said the Psalmist. What a beautiful crown it is. We see the beauties of Fall all about us: the abundant harvests, the gathering of fruits, the flowers making a last glorious appearance before being defeated by the cold blasts of the frost. There is a richness and mellowness about the Fall days that brings one the feeling of maturity. The year is crowned by the goodness of God.

Old age is often likened to the Fall of the year. The seed has been sown, the life bears its fruit. There is a richness and serenity of peace that should come to the aging Christian. The beauty of a fine Christian character should be his crown. "At evening-time it shall be light."

Someone said to a saintly woman, whose very expression shown with a spiritual glow, "Why you are beautiful"! Unflattered, she humbly replied, "I ought to be, I'm seventy years old."

SMOTHERING THE LIGHT

Why so much darkness in the world when there are Christians scattered about everywhere? For a candle throws its beam far beyond itself. Only a tiny point of light can dispel a roomfull of darkness. Might it be that we are smothering our light beneath some bushel of selfishness, or inconsistency or even our own pleasure?

Christ said we are to be the light of the world. It was His plan that our faith and love be made known. But as long as we are more interested in the methods of war than we are in peace, in alcohol than in religion, in worldly pleasures than in sacrificial sharing, our lights will be so smothered that they cannot drive out the deep darkness. It is tragic to think of the world being plunged in such darkness because the Christians themselves have not been more faithful in sending out the light of the Gospel. We may be witnessing the consequences of having smothered the light of love and peace under the bushels of selfishness, indifference and unfaithfulness. It is time to get the candle back on the candlestick.

THAT END SEAT

What a common experience to come to a church service and find that end seat closely hugged by the one who came just a little earlier. There seems to be plenty of space in the center of the pew, so now comes the awkard trick of trying to wedge our way past the "end-seater" toward the open space, or else standing in the aisle with the hope that he will move over. Or perhaps it will take an usher to frantically wave him over toward the center.

Why do we insist on having that end seat? True, occasionally one needs to leave before the service is over, but that is an exception. The majority intend to stay through the service, but also seem bent on staying at the end of the pew. Is it mere thoughtlessness or selfishness, or are we too tired to walk a few steps further to the center? May it be a left-over from Indian days when each one wanted to be near the aisle so he could dash out at the first war-whoop?

But whatever the cause, does it not seem undignified, disorderly, and especially disrespectful and discouraging to visitors? Why not make ours a

by Elbert Koontz

THE fourth annual minister's retreat is history. It was held at Gustavus Adolphus College at St. Peter, Minnesota from August 18 to 23. There was a fine representation of the ministers and other workers of the Conference attending this retreat.

The facilities of the College were very excellent for such a retreat. All were received there with a hearty welcome. It was very much appreciated that they turned over the facilities of their school to us to such an extent that we felt everything there belonged to us, who were the retreaters. The facilities for fellowship in play could not be surpassed. There were facilities for ball playing, swimming, fishing, and anything else that both young and old desired. The retreaters felt that they were treated with the utmost consideration. Sleeping facilities were excellent, the meals were supurb, and very reasonable. All of this was appreciated but this was not the most important part of the retreat.

Each day the morning watch service set the tone for the rest of the day. This was a half-hour period for meditation and prayer before breakfast. After the breakfast all went to the inspirational and challenging study of the book of Hebrews with Howard Tillman Kuist as the leader of the study. These were hours that all looked forward to with great anticipation and we were not disappointed. His ability to inspire and reveal new truth made those present conscious of their need of further study and meditation upon this great book of the Bible. The message of the book unfolded before our eyes and brought new hope and challenge in a day of despair.

We were also led into a greater understanding and appreciation of the book of Jeremiah in the evening meetings with Kuist as the speaker. This prophet of Ananthos became alive again and began to walk and to speak today as we listened to the unfolding of the message of this great book of this ancient and yet modern prophet. Those who were there will be inspired to study further these two almost forgotten books of the Bible and find them the source of great inspiration and help in the days that lie ahead.

Time was also given for other matters of importance for the work of the church and the conference. The discussion periods on various aspects of the work of the church were helpful and informative in many ways. One of particular interest to ministers was a paper given by Erland Waltner on the relation of the minister to his family and the ministers family to the rest of the community. This is a problem that is vital to all ministers. The presentation was very helpful and stimulating. It was suggested that this paper could well be published for distribution.

The panel discussions were of interest to all and were stimulating. One of the most interesting was that of the possibility of extending our mission work. The

General Conference Uniform Series

by Paul Shelly

BEGINNING with October, 1950, the General Conference is inaugurating a uniform lesson series for all age groups from the primary through the adult departments providing some materials produced by its own writers and some produced in cooperation with the Old Mennonites.

This uniform series is actually the result of a development in the area of Sunday School materials which had its roots back more than a hundred years ago when John H. Oberholzer published a book for use in his children's instruction meetings or Sunday school in 1859. This Sunday school, in the Swamp Mennonite Church, near Quarkertown, Pennsylvania, was started in 1847. The first venture of the Conference as a whole in the field of Sunday School materials was the printing of a German quarterly in 1888. The initial step in the production of English lesson helps was taken when the Eastern District Conference published a series of lessons on home training, conversion, the church, missions, and peace and brotherhood in 1917.

The Conference began its work in producing English materials in 1926, when it published the Adult Quarterly which has been meeting the needs of our people for almost a quarter of a century. The Conference felt that provision should be made for other age groups as well, and thus an intermediate quarterly was offered to the churches from 1938 to 1943. In 1943, the Junior Quarterly was substituted for the Intermediate Quarterly and has been serving the Sunday Schools since that time. Both a pupil's and a teacher's quarterly are printed for this age group. The latest quarterly to make its appearance in the uniform series is the Young People's Quarterly which was started in 1948.

Beginning with October, 1950, the General Conference is providing even a more complete service to its churches and is making available an entire uniform series for all ages from the primary through the adult. The Conference will continue to offer the same materials of its own as it has been printing.

The new uniform series includes two products which it prepares in cooperation with the Old Mennonites in addition to the materials produced by the Conference alone. The first is the revised Intermediate Pupil's Quarterly which will be appreciated by the churches of the General Conference. The second is the General Conference edition of the Herald Teacher which makes its initial appearance beginning with the fourth quarter of 1950. It is also strongly urged that the churches that use the uniform series in the primary age group avail themselves of the Old Mennonite pupil's and teacher's quarterlies in order to complete the uniform series. A number of the churches of the General Conference have utilized the primary materials and have appreciated them.

It is with a sense of gratitude that the General Conference edition of the Herald Teacher is offered to the churches, for this publication will fill a long-felt need of our people for a teacher's quarterly. The Curriculum Committee has discussed the need for a teacher's quarterly for some time. It has examined many of the existing teacher's helps but found none that were completely satisfactory. It also discussed the possibility of producing its own but this did not seem to be feasible at the present time. It then examined the preliminary draft of the Herald Teacher of the Old Mennonites and felt that this production would meet the needs of our churches. The Old Mennonites printed a pilot edition of the Herald Teacher for January, 1950. A number of the General Conference churches used this material and without exception urged that it be made available for our churches in a General Conference edition. The present plan is to have the General Conference have one general article in each edition and to have the privilege of editing the material. Any suggestions or questions on any of our General Conference materials are always appreciated.

unique church where the early comers walk straight to the center of the pew and always fill it from the center out. How much easier for those coming a little later! How much more orderly and kindly and Christian! You may surprise your pastor, but you may expect better sermons for it. "Let everything be done in decency and in order."

EDUCATION versus CHARACTER

"The educated man who lacks character labors under a heavier handicap than the uneducated man who has integrity."—Theodore P. Shonts.

problem presented was whether we should intensify or extend our work. There are things to be said for both phases of the work. The need for the extension of the work is very pressing and evident. But the difficulty is that we have not yet fulfilled our present obligations and met our responsibilities already assumed. The discussion as to the possibilities of raising more funds was discussed rather fervently.

In all of the retreat those present felt that they were enriched and prepared to live closer to Christ and serve him more efficiently because they had come apart awhile into the quiet place and learned of Christ and of His ways for all men.

Current Trends In Christian Education

by Ronald von Riesen

WHEN Horace Bushnell wrote his famous book on Christian Nurture, a little over a century ago, a new era in the sphere of Christian education was begun. This famous Hartford clergyman lived during the time of the great revivals spreading throughout the United States and Britain, which formed a background for much of his discussion. Bushnell was also a firm believer in the home and church as the foremost institutions in developing Christian character. While he did not oppose revivals, he did attack certain "crudities and excesses" which often went with them and the tendency amongst their exponents to make them the whole of Christianity and their assumption that no good could come from any other method. His judgment was that we had been expecting to thrive too much by conquest and therefore urges that more room be given to the place of growth, particularly in relation to families.

About thirty years later, with the tremendous progress made in the scientific movement, the Religious Education Association made its appearance in America. Its purpose was to "inspire the religious forces of our country with the educational ideal; and to inspire the educational forces of our country with the religious ideal." Their program included the application of scientific method in religious education, the stimulation and construction of more adequate building facilities for Sunday and weekday programs, the standardization of Bible departments in colleges, encouragement of the use of the Bible in accredited high schools and making of various kinds of surveys in the field of religious education. The Association did a tremendous piece of work. It was convinced that with the proper environment, training, materials and a wholesome attitude on the part of teachers, we could produce a generation of Christians. Their assumption being that Christ-like character could be produced by mere stimulus and response.

That was the beginning of the twentieth century. After fifty years of its existence, during which time they believed tremendous strides would be made in the "moral and religious" education of our nation, they had seen two world wars and a major depression sweep across the continent. Recently, a leading theologian in one of our largest universities, which only a decade ago was in the very heart of the movement, stated that the "essence of Christianity was beyond technical control." What had happened to this great movement which at the beginning had had such far reaching designs in teaching people the precepts of Christianity? Was it that they were entirely wrong and the early exponents of "revivals" and "conversions" entirely right? Like the early church at Corinth, there were those who had reacted against Paul and wanted to follow Apollos, and their were those who were devoted followers of the Apostle. To this situation Paul wrote: "For while there is jealousy and strife among you, are you not of the flesh, and behaving like ordinary men? For when one says, 'I belong to Paul,' and another, 'I belong to Apollos,' are you not merely men? . . .I planted, Apollos watered, but God gave the growth. So neither he who plants nor he who waters is anything, but only God who gives the growth. He who plants and he who waters are equal, and each shall receive his wages according to his labor. For we are fellow workmen for God; you are God's field, God's building. . . .Let each man take care how he builds." (I Cor. 3:3-10—R.S.V.)

Like the Christians at Corinth, we were not able to see that both emphases were needed. The religious educators were wrong in believing that environment alone could produce Christian character. The exponents of the revivalist movement were not able to see that much of their success was dependent upon the generations of religious training that had been carried on in the public school. Spiritual convictions were lying dormant in the minds of Youth and when the great revivalists spoke with stirring appeal and enthusiasm, literally thousands accepted Christ and committed their lives to Christian service. But now secularization, with its very ignorance of the Christian faith, has advanced so far, that in addressing a non-church going audience, it is not possible to count in advance on any emotional associations with the traditional Christian phraseology, or any immediate response to it.

Today, we stand on the threshold of a new era. Both the Christian educator and the evangelist have begun to see that they need each other, and no longer can we each go our own way. Neither he who plants or he who waters is anything by himself, GOD gives the increase and it is thru the divine initiative that Christians are born. In the light of the foregoing, let us consider several trends that have taken place in the field of Christian education.

1. Christian Education is giving far more attention to theology than it did several decades ago. We are beginning to see that is is important to know what we are trying to teach. How does man respond? What is the place of the Bible in Christian education? Dr. Homerighausen of Princeton Theological Seminary, in an article appearing in the spring number of Religion in Life, states that "it is high time that Religious Education become Christian. . . and that it is not enough to know man psychologically, historically and sociologically, for we need to know him Christianly and Biblically, or as he really is."

Modern psychology has opened the way for a Biblical view of man. "All have sinned and have come short of the glory of God" is not only Paul speaking but we know from our own bitter experience that that is profoundly true. Who of us cannot from our own experience say with Paul, "I do not understand my own actions. For I do not do what I want, but I do the very thing I hate. . .So I find it to be a law that when I want to do right, evil lies close at hand. For I delight in the law of God, in my inmost self, but I see in my members another law at war with the law of my mind and making me captive to the law of sin which dwells in my members. Wretched man that I am! Who will deliver me from this body of death? Thanks be to God through Jesus Christ our Lord!. . .There is therefore now no condemnation for those who are in Christ Jesus." (Romans 7:15, 21-25; 8:1—R.S.V.)

As a Christian church of the Anabaptist vision we have given considerable emphasis to the place of the Sermon on the Mount and the ethical implications of the gospel. We have always believed that a Christian should take seriously the standards of righteousness set forth by Jesus. We have not always been aware that to do so creates a tremendous potential for guilt feelings on the part of Christian people. To maintain a high ethical standard involves a responsibility on the part of the church to adequately deal with the problem of guilt and sin. To neglect this is to pave the way for a variety of mental problems. If we would have a high view of the ethical implications of the Christian gospel we should equally maintain a high view of redemption,—one that adequately deals with the problem of sin in a person's life.

Theology, of course, is not everything, but it is necessary for guidance, for clarity, and for the evaluation of false doctrines which may disintegrate life. What we believe will inevitably determine what we do.

2. The second trend has been the relation of the Bible to Christian education.

There was a time when the Bible was taught in mere rote fashion and its verses and passages were taken as truth in themselves and memorized as such. Often this resulted in their being taken out of their context and their meaning distorted. Then it shifted to the life situation approach and the Bible was used only as parts related to specific problems. Today the emphasis is to study the Bible as a whole or book by book. The first method tended to be superficial, while the latter tended to be moralistic with the supreme emphasis upon the application of Christian principles, often to the neglect of the underlying roots.

Today the Bible is increasingly being regarded as the book from which we learn the origin and nature of man, his redemption and destiny in life. The best in historical and linguistic methods are being used, yet GOD STILL SPEAKES THROUGH ITS PAGES. It is the Book of Life, The Word of God, the indispensible textbook of Christian education.

We have come to see further that if we would continue to make meaningful such words as God, Jesus Christ, salvation, redemption, grace, sin, that we will need to be more urgent in making these pages known to the people. A rapidly growing secular generation is being trained in a frame of reference entirely foreign to the Biblical tradition,

The Christian Outlook in Japan

IF Crisis means "perilous opportunity," the Christian movement in Japan is in a crisis of classic proportions. Never have the nation and the Church faced such a precarious existence; but never have the doors opening out to a rebirth swung wider on their hinges than today. All churches are crowded, many of them refraining from making announcements of services so that the scanty space may not be entirely occupied by inquirers, thus depriving the members of needed spiritual nourishment. All Christian schools are overflowing, with long waiting lists of entrants.

On the whole the Japanese people have met defeat and calamity with a positive reaction of courage and integrity. Where people are essentially sound, God is able to make these harsh disciplines contribute to their spiritual growth. He did so with the Hebrews in exile, and he is doing so in Japan today. During the feverish years of expansion and of empire, a fanatical sense of mission seized the people and with it a degree of pride and hardness. Now that is gone. The fever has subsided, the grandiose dreams of world hegemony have faded, the cruel demands of the war years have eased away. The people are back "at scratch;" they are humbled, but teachable. Hysteria has given way to sanity. Since 1945, living, many of them, in ruins, with starvation stalking them, business and industry demolished, travel and communications disrupted, foreign trade and contacts cut off and the indignity of defeat with military occupation ever present, they have nevertheless kept their self-respect, and with incredible resourcefulness have managed to live.

To an unbelievable degree the ordinary Japanese has opened his heart to the westerners in the Occupation, whether military or civilian. And equally incredible is the prevailing friendliness of the occupation personnel toward Japan and her people. This attitude of understanding regard begins with General MacArthur and thus far has carried through most of the departments, and has actuated most of the decisions of policy made by the Allied Command.

Such a climate is extremely favorable to Christianity, both Protestant and Roman Catholic, and both today are sunning in the fair weather of good-will, on the one side of the Occupation administration, and on the other of the Japanese government, while favoring breezes blow the common people to their doorsteps. Imagine a situation where Professor Hiyane of the Japan Theological Seminary could write and have published in the Tokyo Asahi with over a million circulation a series of articles commending Christian conversion to the Emperor. He wrote: "Our Ruler has now by his own declaration made himself a son of man; he is now free to bow in obeisance to the Son of God. How fitting it would be if he were to become a Christian and lead his people into the way of discipleship!" Indeed, the Empress and several of the princes are faithfully maintaining weekly Bible study under Christian ministers.

There are hopeful elements of strength within the Christian movement. The unification of the majority of the Protestant denominations in one, single Church of Christ is proving itself a source of power in cooperative Christian effort.

Yet there are serious deterrents to an adequate meeting of these unprecedented challenges of opportunity. For one thing, foreign missionaries are desperately needed and eagerly sought for, but their numbers are sadly insufficient, and in the middle age group there are almost none. Japanese Christian leadership, too, is sorely strained and overburdened. Eight years of war left a lost generation. The persons carrying the responsible loads today are few in number, unfit physically, exhausted in spirit, and often baffled by the new problems confronting Christianity in their land. They are beyond the age of maximum efficiency, and decades separate them from the potential leaders of tomorrow, who are as yet without experience.

The Church, in face, reflects the over-all situation in Japan. The stubborn will to survive has brought them through, but actual reconstruction has woefully lagged. The past two years have seen encouraging beginnings, and every month shows improvement, but the goal of a normal society with its essential institutions reconstructed and functioning is still far off.

A military occupation is no sort of political framework in which to develop national recovery. Ultimately Japan is at the mercy of her conquerors, and no matter how much mutual consideration there may be, that fact cuts the nerve of free effort or democratic action. Yet, if the occupation were to be removed, as persistent rumors say it soon may be, Japan's plight would be tragic indeed. Even the most extreme high-pressure farming cannot provide a food supply for her eighty millions. Capital is needed to restore industry and maintain a currency already inflated. A merchant marine must be rebuilt, and foreign trade renewed if the people are to live. At home, social disorder is always just around the corner, and there must be firm controls by a fairly strong political administration.

If the worst comes and the world continues to polarize around the two world concentrations of power, Japan will be in America's orbit, and may be again a battlefield. That prospect is frightening enough. But if, happily, this does not come about, still Japan will be in the path of the revolutionary typhoon in Asia. Traditionally Japan's fear of Communism has amounted to an obsession. Now her nearest neighbors one by one are going under the flood. What will her fate be? Already party organizers are said to be on every college campus in the country, the labor movement is shot through with the teachings and techniques, the newspapers reflect left-wing sentiment and points of view.

and as such is not at home with these sacred terms and symbols which the Christian church has always cherished. To approach a secular mind with the question, "Are you saved?" may evoke little response. We will need to be more earnest in teaching the Bible in our churches and public school system.

3. A third trend has been the emphasis upon the Christian home.

Physicians, psychologists and educators alike are beginning to emphasize anew that the Christian home is central in Christian nurture, and that what one will be in terms of personality is pretty largely determined sometime between the ages of one and three.

More than two decades ago, Sonquist and Kerr, aided by Harthshorne and May, in their work on character education, conducted a study among 1100 children in grades 5-9, and almost conclusively established reason to believe that knowledge of right and wrong is definitely related to that of their parents. At least as far as these investigators could determine, the influence of parents ranked well-above that of children's friends, club leaders, public and Sunday school teachers.

This trend has made itself felt in several areas. One is the development of a home-church curriculum, rather than merely a church-curriculum. The Presbyterian church recently launched a new curriculum which places the parents on equal par with the teacher. Materials are not only provided for the pupil and the teacher but also for the parents. Another is the introduction of many new parent classes. Here they have opportunity to discuss with each other some of their common problems. But this is not enough. We need to provide our young people with pre-maritial counseling and materials that will give them a solid preparation for marriage and the responsibilities that are theirs. One also hears much about family churches, family nights with their emphasis upon the total family. The family is no longer broken up into different age groups but is being considered as a total unit. As a Mennonite church it will not be difficult for us to capitalize on this new emphasis and make of our homes citadels of Christian nurture.

4. The fourth trend has been the introduction of evangelism into education.

The term "evangelism" will probably never be defined to the satisfaction of everybody, but for our purposes a definition by Robert E. Speer may serve: "Evangelism is the presentation of the truth and life of Christianity by word and deed with a view to persuading men to accept it and to believe in Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior, and in God through Him, and to give their lives to His service."

The close connection between education and evangelism is evident at once, for when anyone accepts Jesus Christ as his Lord and Savior, it presupposes that he knows who Jesus is, and what he is being saved from and to. He may have received such knowledge from his home, Sunday school, through preaching, or through some other means of education, but he must have some background before he can intelligently accept Christ as his Savior and Lord. This is not to say that because a child is taught something of the Bible, of God and Jesus that he will inevitably become a Christian, but the point is that some basic knowledge and understanding is a prerequisite to evangelism.

Educators of a generation ago, worked on the assumption that if a person really knew what was right, he would act upon it. But it would not be difficult to summon many witnesses to show that many of us know better than we act. In all our churches there are people who are called "good Christian folk" who still do not seem to be living out the Christian gospel on such matters as stewardship, self-control, getting along with other people. There are many who hate other races and still pray "Our Father." They repeat the creed and they serve Mammon. They profess loyalty to the law of love, and they support the militarists. They see a hundred denials of the gospel and make no protest.

After education has done its part, the central point in becoming a Christian is a DECISION for Jesus Christ. The commitment may have a wide variation from a violent emotional crises to cases where the emotional element may be far less observed. Somewhere, however, there must be a decision that from this point on, life is committed to Christ and is becoming organized around a new center which is Jesus Christ.

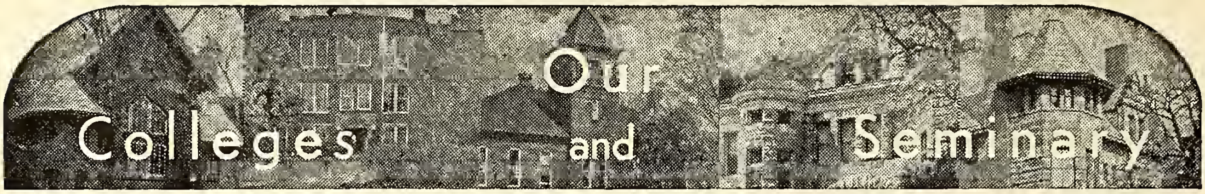
Perhaps there has never been a time when education and evangelism more urgently needed to be brought into harmony with each other. All Christian education should be evangelistic, and all evangelism should be educational. Both belong to the Church. Life is like that. It is a process of growth and it is also a series of great experiences which cannot be explained in terms of cause and effect.

Education prepares the way and supports evangelism. They must go forward hand in hand.

As a Mennonite church, we are committed to the TOTAL gospel of Jesus Christ. Like much of Christian truth, we are here confronted with another paradox. Education and evangelism are a part of the Great Commission given by Jesus. We are to teach and build foundations as though we were to live a thousand years, at the same time we are to be so urgent with a warm evangelistic appeal as if we would not be here tomorrow.

Evangelism without education leads to superstition and fanaticism. Education without the warmth of spiritual appeal, leads to formalism and skepticism. The two are united in the thought of God. To neglect either is to limit the usefulness and imperil the life of the church. "What God hath joined together, let no man put asunder."

Let a man think holy thoughts and he will be in a holy place.



MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

THE new school year has begun with a record enrollment of students and a stimulating series of opening activities.

The Orientation Program on Tuesday, September 5, was the first event here. At this time the new Seminary Handbook was distributed. This publication provides extensive facts about every aspect of Seminary life. Included with the Handbook was a map of the Chicago Transit System, a pamphlet on various Things to See in the City, and a Directory of Churches and Synagogues in Oakland-Kenwood and Hyde Park Districts of the City.

Incidentally, Chicago's 350,000 Jews ushered in Rosh Hashana, the Jewish New Year, at sundown this September 8. Ceremonies in the city's synagogues and temples marked the beginning of the year 5711 by the Jewish Calendar. The ten-day Jewish high holiday season ended with Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement, which began at sundown, September 20. One of the most exacting periods of the Jewish religious calender, Yom Kippur, is a day of fasting and repentance.

Various messages were given to the students this week. President Pannabecker in the orientation message urged the students to commit themselves completely to the will of God in order that the school may truly be a Christian Biblical Seminary once again. In another address in the chapel service he declared that a knowledge of scholarly issues in connection with the Bible in no way impares this Book as inspired by the Holy Spirit.

In his opening message, President Rufus Bowman, stressed the Kingdom of God as the grand theme of the Christian Gospel, and urged that the Kingdom be central in our thinking and in our living as a Christian brotherhood here in the City of Chicago. Calvert R. Ellis, president of Junaita College, delivered the convocation address in which he said that the two main centers of concern in a theological seminary are the Word and the world. The seminary teacher, he declared, must know both the Word and the world. He pointed out that it has been amazing to see seminary professors rediscover the Bible as the Word of God, stressed the importance of having a clear Biblical view of the world and that the Word of God must be related to the world in which we live.

In addition to a fine group of students from Canada, Mennonite Biblical Seminary is happy to welcome three other foreign students, Franco Cosco, a Waldensian student from Italy, Grace Liu from China, and Hanno Klassen from Germany. We are also happy to welcome Ernst and Ruth Harder from Paraguay. Both of the Harders attended the Seminary the first year it opened and have since served the MCC in Paraguay.

Thanks to the cooperation of Paul Boschman, Petaigen, Saskatchewan, one of our students during the past two years, Rev. Willard Wiebe of Lind, Washington, has been able to leave his church there temporarily to complete the third year of his Bachelor of Divinity course. Willard Wiebe had completed two years here at Mennonite Biblical Seminary before going to the church at Lind. Another one of our returning students is Arnold Nickel and family of Henderson, Nebraska. He, too, has had two years and will complete his course this year. A complete list of students will be released next week when all registrations have been completed.

FOR SUCH A TIME AS THIS

BLUFFTON College classes began September 14. Due to the large graduating class of last spring, disturbed international conditions, and small high school graduating classes the enrollment is somewhat below that of last year, although there is a larger group of new students than a year ago.

Sixteen Bluffton College graduates are beginning seminary work this year. Of this number seven are Mennonites. Included are Dale Dickey, Princeton Seminary; Donald Yaussy, Drew; Lawrence Cordrey, Garret; Claude Boyer, Stanley Hostetter, Howard Shelly, Margaret Chase, and Mr. and Mrs. Burt Yost, Mennonite Biblical; Darrell Sellers, Southern Presbyterian; Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Bauman, Biblical of New York; Angel Gutierrez, Evangelical of Puerto Rico; Bud Frank, Capital of Columbus, Ohio; Don Robinson, Colgate-Rochester; and Joseph Graham, Bonebrake. In addition, William Keeney hopes to return from relief work in Europe in time to enter Mennonite Biblical the second quarter, and several recent graduates are planning for seminary work next year.

President Ramseyer gave the first Chapel address Wednesday evening, September 13, speaking on the subject, "For Such a Time as This." He stressed the fact that if students are to render the best service in such a time as this they need educated and developed minds, complete consecration to Christ, standards of individual and group living consistent with Christian teaching, and the desire to spread the gospel.

Jottings

NORTHERN DISTRICT

—First Church, Madrid, Nebraska: Our congregation was privileged to have Marie J. Regier, returned missionary from China, with us for a few days, telling us of the work in China where she has labored for fifteen years. Our harvest and mission festival was held Sunday, September 24, with services every evening the following week, with Mr. and Mrs. George B. Neufeld, missionaries of the African Inland Mission as the speakers.

CANADIAN DISTRICT

—North Star, Drake, Saskatchawan: August 2 a joint birthday party of the three Sewing Societies was held on Hugo Bartels' farm. A program and lunch made up the evening. Our congregation packed and sent 33 Christmas bundles to Paraguay. August 27 the Bethany and Philadelphia Church choirs joined our choir in presenting a song festival. The mass choir was under the leadership of Alan Klassen, choir leader of the Philadelphia Church. —Mrs. Milton Ewert, Corr.

WESTERN DISTRICT

—Hoffnungsau Church, Inman, Kansas: Recently Missionary Harold Ratslaffs were in our midst and brought the morning message. Sixty-eight Christmas bundles were made by families as well as some Sunday School classes. Recently two of our older members, namely, H. J. Klassen and Mrs. David Gaeddert were laid to rest. Our church again took part in the Union Services held in Inman during the summer months. The annual Christian Endeavor picnic took place on August 27. The "Flour for Europe" project was again sponsored in the Buhler-Inman community.—Mrs. Ben M. Ediger, Corr.

—Hebron Church, Buhler, Kansas: Our pastor took a short vacation, attending the ministers retreat in St. Peter, Minnesota, later attending the General Conference in South Dakota. Owen Hershberger was minister in his absence. Our delegates have returned, also Mrs. A. M. Lorentz who was in Europe. H. J. Dyck from Elbing was guest speaker September 10. Brother Dyck and his wife returned recently from a year's service in Europe among the displaced people there. The total amount of donations given for the Flour for Europe project was $6524.84. Of this amount $867.66 was given by members of our church.

Change of address: Curt D. Boese, from Rt. 2, Ft. Cobb, Oklahoma, to Greensburg, Kansas.

—First Church, Lehigh, Kansas: The fiftieth anniversary of the founding of our church will be observed Sunday, October 1. Afternoon and evening services will commemorate the event. Open house will be held at the parsonage from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m. All former members and friends of the church are invited. Brother Goering, Mr. and Mrs. Duerksen and Mrs. G. F. Friesen attended the General Conference. Mrs. Pete Duerksen spoke to a joint meeting of the Women's group of her experiences in our Indian mission. Brother E. Zimmerman of the Northern Bible Society filled the pulpit September 10. Six layettes were sent to the Indian Mission at Hotevilla by the Y.M.M. Christmas bundles were sent to Akron. The church floor is being painted by members of the congregation and the exterior of the parsonage is receiving two coats of white paint.—Corr.

EASTERN DISTRICT

—Fairfield Church, Fairfield, Pennsylvania: September 3 Pastor B. F. Waas began his ministry with us. Following the tradition of simplicity neither Waas nor this group desired any formal ceremony of installation. However, in dedication with fervent spirit, we resolve that this church may be an evangel of the Kingdom of God in the community, a place of worship and fellowship.—Corr.

PACIFIC DISTRICT

—Immanuel Church, Los Angeles, California: What started out to be a pleasant Labor Day week-end trip to Cambria Pines, where the family Mennonite Retreat is held yearly, turned into tragedy for the Gust R. Linscheid family of Huntington Park. Their car was involved in a head-on collision which claimed the life of Mrs. Zelpha Linscheid. Other members of the party were hospitalized.

Into the Beyond

DIETRICH J. SIEBERT, Henderson, Nebraska, member of the Bethesda Mennonite Church, was born June 19, 1900, and died September 5, 1950.

JOHN WHITAKER, Upland, California, member of the First Mennonite Church in Upland, died August 22, 1950.

MRS. ABRAHAM BALZER, (Maria Funk) was born March 24, 1867, in South Russia, was a member of the Brudertal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas, passed away July 2, 1950.

Communism is, indeed, an alternative to the old ways, and one which to people in trouble offers a plausible and fascinating appeal. The quick Utopia which it promises is almost irresistible. So the same youth who are crowding the churches are also studying Communism, and between the two they are wavering, genuinely perplexed as to where their loyalties should go.

It is therefore, the hour of destiny for Japan and for the Christian Church in Japan. The nation needs Christ as never before. Under the banner, "Christ for Japan," the churches have just completed a nationwide three-year evangelistic campaign, with Dr. Kagawa as the spearhead. Now they have renewed the effort for another three years in what he calls "Desperation Evangelism." The handful of Japanese Christians and the overworked missionaries are pouring out their strength in commitment to bringing the living Christ to bear upon every aspect of the nation's life. Japan sorely needs Christ.

And another banner, "Japan for Christ," belongs alongside the first. The people of this erring, stricken land are a trophy well worth bringing to the feet of our Lord. They have peculiar gifts and skills, their own particular graces and loyalties which if dedicated to Him will add one more gem to His crown, and will enrich the common experience of His followers throughout the world.

The Youth Fellowship

When your officers of your young people's group meet to make plans, how do they think of the church's young people's program? Do they have some way to approach the program so that no single area will be neglected? Do they have a way of organizing the program so that they can constantly keep a check on the progress of the program to see that it is balanced and does not neglect any single area?

By now you have been hearing something new presented to you from the Young People's Workshop held at St. Peter, Minnesota, and by the Council meeting of the Young People's Union held at General Conference. You have been hearing of a three-fold program of youth work for the local church. You have been hearing of divisions called Christian Faith and Life, Christian Fellowship, and Christian Service.

It is the conviction of the Young People's Union oficers, those who attended the Workshop, and the official representatives of home churches at the Council meeting at Freeman, South Dakota that a church youth program based on this division covers all of youth's experience and life in the church. It is a total youth program. All youth activities can be fitted into these three categories.

In order to clarify what is meant by this, we present on these pages pictures illustrating what is meant by this three-fold division. A local society or youth group can check their own program to see whether it is balanced by seeing whether your program fits these three divisions and is not weighted in any single one.

The Young People's Union will publish a manual presenting in detailed form what is meant by a Youth Fellowship program. Remember that it is for the local group and is meant to be a practical and complete youth program for your own church.

The Christian Faith and Life division is the foundation on which all of the experience of a youth group is built. It is here that youth faces basic questions of faith, his own commitment to Christ, his attitudes toward his friends and those that are different from him. His worship experiences, study of Scripture, and those discussions as a group or friend with friend all have to do with this division of Christian Faith and Life.

In your local church, the Sunday School lesson in which young people study the Scripture fits into the division of Christian Faith and Life. The morning worship hour, and the evening programs all fit into this division. One's own private prayer and devotion also are a part of Christian Faith and Life.

Pictured on this page are illustrations suggesting this division of Christian Faith and Life. It is in public meetings of inspiration and instruction, in private devotion, worship and prayer, in study of the Bible and matters of faith, in seeking answers to questions about doctrine, about living out our relationships with one another in true faith to God, that we are able to demonstrate Christian Faith and Life. Your worship programs, your songs of praise, your discussions all fit into the division of Christian Faith and Life.

Christian Fellowship

Sometimes the church feels that its task has been done when it has led in public worship and dealt with matters of Christian faith. But, life goes on. We are urged to pray without ceasing. But, that does not mean that our lives should be completely devoted to an attitude of prayer and worship. Rather, it means that we are to live out the prayers that are in our hearts. We cannot be forever at the altar bowed before God. And we are not expected to do that.

For this reason, the church has a definite responsibility in ministering in all of life's experiences. Christian Fellowship is one such experience. It is here that we may enjoy one another's company. It is here that we can have social times, recreation, those friendships which we forever cherish. So often the social side of life is neglected and we look upon parties and recreation with fear that someone may do something that is out of place. So long as such an attitude exists, a genuine experience of Christian Fellowship is indeed most difficult.

The area of Christian Fellowship needs our most careful consideration. Too many communities fail to see their responsibilities in this area. They are quick to provide for Christian Faith and Life, but what about social times, recreational activity, games and parties? To adequately provide for all of youth's needs, this area needs careful work so that a regular program of recreation, handicrafts, athletics, trips, drama, sings and the hosts of other possibilities in Christian Fellowship may be used.

Pictured on this page are some suggestions of the possibilities in this area. Those picnics together are memorable occasions. That marshmallow roast around the camp fire will never be forgotten. Those friendships between the sexes which began in school were the bases for what later became a happy home. Those hikes far out across field and dale will always be a fond memory. Experiences such as these and a host of others all put together make Christian Fellowship a vital reality. When you grow older you will always hearken back to those times when you did these things. A church is essentially a Christian Fellowship. A part of its experiences are centered in these activities.

Much has been made of Christian Service in recent years. We have our voluntary service program and to it each year there go a host of young people eager to have new experiences of service. But, had you ever thought that there are many Christian services that your own group can perform? Why go far out away from home before you can start serving? No doubt at your own doorstep there are things which need doing, services which can be performed.

For instance, every community has those who are shut in and unable to get around. There are those who put in all the years of their lives serving the church. In their old age, they are no longer able to go out and enjoy the fellowship and the worship of the church. A group of young people who would make it their business to serve these people with songs, devotions, visiting and helping in whatever way they can would perform a great task of service.

Had you ever thought of your choir work as a service to your church? It indeed is. Helping keep the church grounds neat and beautiful, carrying on projects for funds for missions is a service. Or finding mission work to do at your own doorstep is a service that can be performed.

Pictured here is a church choir, and a group of young people gathered around the huge pile of shoes they collected for relief.

Your youth program is not complete until it includes some kind of service. Remember to have faith and life, fellowship, and service in your youth program!

Concerning the Draft

One of the most prevalent reasons for difficult cases under the draft is failure to be prompt in following the neecssary procedures.

We, therefore, strongly urge and warn men who are conscientiously opposed to military service, to lose no time in securing a clear status under the draft:

1. All men opposed to combatant and noncombatant service should be in Class IV-E (except IV-F for those physically impaired, and V-A for those 26 years old or older.)
2. All men who have asked for SSS Form 150 but never received this from the draft board, should by all means immediately take steps to secure this, complete it and return it to the board. It is the information supplied on this questionaire that is basic in securing recognition as a CO.
3. All men who now have Class I-A, I-A-O, I-D, II-A, II-C, III-A or IV-A and have not appealed for Class IV-E should do so without delay.

In all of the above, men should be respectful and courteous toward the local board, yet firm in their position.

Please enclose this label when writing.

In giving Class IV-E to a CO, the local board is not granting a special favor, but merely following the regulations that have been issued by the President.

Typhoon Strikes Japan

The MCC unit in Osaka, Japan, reported that a severe typhoon struck on Sept. 3, causing a temporary flood condition. Seven Americans and thirty-one Japanese fled from the rising water to the upper room of the MCC center, where they remained for sveral days until some could be removed by rafts. In this emergency the unit was assisted in various ways by officials and others in the community, and was likewise able to help other persons in need.

Shoe Contributions Needed

Recent needs for shoes for relief have exceeded the amounts being contributed by the churches. Especially in demand are shoes for men and for children. Quality should be such as to warrant distribution "In the Name of Christ".

Personnel Notes

Workers returning from the field are: Robert Smith from Okinawa on Aug. 19; Walter Adrian from Austria on Aug. 19; the Guy Hershbergers and son from Switzerland on Aug. 21; Rev. and Mrs. Cornelius Wall from Germany on Aug. 23; Daniel Amstutz from Java to his home in Switzerland on Aug. 25. Meryl Grasse transferred from Ethiopia to Java on Aug. 9.

New Center in France

A property near Belfort, France has been purchased through the joint interests of the French Mennonites and the M.C.C. It is planned that the Nancy Children's Home can be closed and the work carried on from the new center. The Weiler Children's Home is, however, to continue. The new center, called Valdoi, has facilities which make it adapted for use by the French Mennonite Churches for conferences and other group activities and interests.

For some reason August was a slack month. Most boards and committees show only a small gain. Wih only one-third of 1950 remaining, an average of one-half of the budget needs for 1950 still remains. We are confident that you will give your Conference your loyal support in an endeavor to help it reach its goal.

In behalf of all boards and committees we again sincerely thank each of you for your continued support of your Conference and pray that you may receive God's richest blessing through it.

Very sincerely,

A high-school boy yielded to the urging of some friends to go on a wild party and consequently wrecked his father's car. READER SAYS—

I have been reading with interest about the Universal Subscription Plan. I think it will be a good thing, but I hope it will include individual members who work or go to school during the week, away from home.

Some church secretaries may think that if these people come home once a week they can read The Mennonite when they come home. But chances are if they come home only on Sunday they will spend their time visiting and not reading magazines. I suppose the homes could pass on The Mennonite to absentee members after all those at home have read it, but sometimes this takes quite a bit of time and it is worth something to get a magazine soon after the day it is dated.

I hope the plan will include not only homes but also absentee members.

Sincerely yours,
Harold Peters

TOM PAINE WAS WRONG

It was in 1782 that the publication of the first American Bible was sanctioned and approved by Congress. About this time Thomas Paine declared, "In five years there will not be a Bible in all America." But Tom Paine was wrong! The American Bible Society alone, since its organization in 1816, has put into circulation 380 million copies of the Bible, in whole or in part.

—Evangelical Visitor

An American gentleman who was sailing from Korea to Nagasaki, found himself sharing a stateroom with an Oriental gentleman. He went to the purser and said, "I do not like the looks of that Jap in my stateroom. I want to put my valuables in your safe." "All right, sir," said the purser, "he brought his down about a half hour ago."

"LAY-EVANGELISM" FOR OUR CHURCHES

THE article on this important subject found in this issue should be carefully considered by every church and every minister. Here are possibilities which we have not begun to realize. The experience of churches which have been trying this method is practically all the same, in that both the laymen who went out and the people visited were blessed.

Too long have we kept ourselves aloof from others and tried to make ourselves believe we had little obligation to them. This may stem back into our former history. The Anabaptists and early Mennonites were a persecuted people. They were threatened and imprisoned for proclaiming their faith. This was true in Switzerland and Holland, and particularly in Rusia where one of the conditions of their coming was that they should do no mission work among the Russians. Were they right in conceding to these requests?

But we are dealing with the present. It is our obligation to go out and tell others about Christ. The early church did so and took the consequences: persecution, imprisonment, and death. But the Gospel went on and "the blood of the martyrs became the seed of the Church." The day is here when again we must take risks for the cause of Christ. We must tell people about His love. That love constrains us; we cannot and dare not keep silent. We must be witnessing unto all men.

Sometimes such witness-bearing is not done with tact and good taste. It may antagonize rather than draw. But the method of lay-evangelism is sound and scriptural and amazingly effective. Those going out two by two have met together in consultation and prayer. They go in the spirit and in the name of Christ. They are genuinely interested in the people they visit. They follow the leading of the Spirit. It is a hard-hearted person indeed, who does not warm to the love and personal consideration of such friends.

For the Fall planning, by all means harness the energies of the laymen in this great work and convince the community that yours is not a seclusive church but one that is deeply concerned about all within its orbit. Be a witnessing church. Follow the simple plan of Jesus and go forth in His name, and your church will take on new life and souls will be saved. The method is right; the need is great; the time is short. Go yo, therefore.

OUR OLDER PEOPLE

ONE of the interesting marks of progress in our communities is to note the provisions that are being made for our older people. Some communities are just completing homes for the aged, others are laying definite plans for such homes. It is a worthy cause. People live much longer than formerly, houses are built smaller, and families are more scattered.

This is not a means of getting rid of the old folks. We are not sending them off to the poorhouse. We want them to approach the evening of their lives with a feeling of peace and security. In these homes they have a place where they are well cared for, where they can associate with others of their age, and where the surroundings are pleasant and cheerful. They can be cared for much better in such homes than in state or county institutions or even in most private homes.

Here is a service we need to consider carefully. We will need more and more homes for the aged, and churches and communities had better plan accordingly. It is necessary; it is possible; and it is Christian. "He who does not care for those of his own household is worse than an unbeliever." Our older people deserve the best care it is possible to give them.

ARE ALL MEN EQUAL?

WE are in the habit of saying that no two people are alike, that we are all different, that God broke the mold when we were formed so that no one else could be exactly like us. We are individually fashioned, and intended to be different from anyone else. True, and to try to change from being what God intended us to be is to spoil God's intention and our own lives. All men are unequal.

But in another sense, how true it is that we are equal in so many ways. The great forces of life are at the disposal of everyone. The law of gravity operates for all alike. So do the psychological laws. God is available for all. Goodness, kindness, and love are possible for all alike. Prayer is a power that may be used by each one. Christ died for all of us. All are equal in the love of God.

Why then the great difference among men? Great men of God are great because they greatly availed themselves of God's gifts. Small men remain so because they make small use of God's blessings. "God made us capable; we make ourselves efficient."

WHAT IS OUR SHAKING POWER?

GEORGE Fox said, "One man, raised by God's power to stand and live in the same spirit the prophets and apostles were in, can shake the country ten miles around."

How far does our influence for God shake the community? Does the power of God transform our homes and operate in our business and daily work? Does the community for ten miles around feel the impact of our godly life? Is the little world in which we live and move becoming better for our being in it?

We are lights to be set on heights where we show forth the glory of God. The early followers were accused of turning the world upside down. How "upsetting" for the right are we? How far out does our shaking power reach?

"Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God"

Henry Hege *

THIS was Peter's answer to Christ's question; "Whom do ye say that I am?" It was the right answer, for Jesus says, "Blessed art thou Simon Bar-jona." Not only does Jesus call him blessed but he also gives him a different name. "Thou are Petros, and upon this rock I will build MY Church and the gates of Hell shall not prevail against it."

What was so important about Peter's testimony that Jesus calls it a rock and names it as the very foundation of His Church? Jesus came into this world to seek and to save; after He would be gone there should be an organization that would continue the work that Jesus had started, to go out and in the strength derived from the Master they were to seek and to save through the Gospel of Christ. There would be an organization of believers; Jesus calls it My Church; to them would come the call of the Master, to go into all the world.

But this organization had to have motivation; it had to have something that would give it life and force. It could not be left to man himself to go out; man could only be the tool in the hand of God. Therefore the very foundation of that organization was to be faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, as the Son of the Living God. That was to be its very foundation, its rock, its beginning and end; on that confession and faith it would rise or fall. And it was promised to rise. For the gates of Hell itself would not prevail against it.

What, then, is the Church of Jesus Christ? Nothing more or less than the body of believers who stand foursquare on the faith that Jesus is the Christ, the son of the living God. John in his letter goes a step farther and says that he who believes that Jesus is the Christ has eternal Life. Therefore whatever your belief, whatever your creed, whatever your affiliation, unless it is based on your faith and confession that Jesus, your Lord and Saviour, is the Son of God come into the world to seek and to save that which was lost, your faith is vain or of no avail. How simple a message; how humble it makes us; how definitely it points to the Father in heaven who so loved the world that He gave His all.

But it is not enough to profess this faith; it must be lived. Peter was not quite sure what he was saying because a short time later he attempts to thwart the very purpose of Christ. Peter had to learn a great deal before his confession became his very life. He had to know His Master much better, and above all he had to receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. Then Peter was able to live his confession.

So it must be with us. Our confession must be a living one. This Christ, this Son of God whom we have accepted as our personal Saviour from sin, He must be our Master, our Commandar. With our eyes on him we can walk life's road. Not what man says or does or demands, but the pattern of our life must be in tune with that of Christ. His love, his compassion, his desire to be of help, his willingness to love and to lift, that must be our desire and our plan of life. To many people this seems too simple and they want to add all sorts of man-made ideas that are to make the road more complicated and therefore, in their idea, more holy. The Pharisees at the time of Christ were of that type. Jesus condemns them for laying heavy burdens on the people and they themselves were not willing to help in bearing that burden. The very simplicity of Christ's message gives man his greatest hope. Have faith, my dear soul—not a blind faith but one that is based on a deep inner-experience; then let that faith guide you through life. It will never leave you nor forsake you. It will be there to love and to lift in the brightest days and in the darkest hours. Nothing else will suffice. Nothing else can ever take its place. It is heaven-born and a gift from God Almighty Himself.

There are people to-day, so-called Christians, who tell us that this faith in the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ as the only begotten son of God, is not enough. I had a minister (?) tell me that it is not enough to follow the example of Christ to find one's way to the eternal city. He would have man be surrounded by man-made rules and regulations. A left-over of the old idea that only a few mortals have the real insight into God's plan of redemption, and that all the others are to follow blindly their leading. It is surprising how many of that type there are in this land of ours, and we may not have very far to go to find some of them.

Out of our own experience, led by the Holy Spirit, in full surrender to the will of God, and completely in line with Peter's confession, Thou art the Christ the Son of the living God, comes the full realization that we are in tune with the infinite, that we are washed in the blood of the lamb,, that we have forgiveness of our sins and that "Peace like a river" descends on our heart and soul."

A Parable

EVERYBODY had heard that the great elephant was loose, and several families whose gardens he had wasted and on whose boys he had trampled were certain of it. There was great excitement, and the town held a meeting to decide what ought to be done. They did not want to exterminate him—in fact many of them did not believe that they could exterminate him, for he was a big elephant; and he was useful in his proper place—in shows, in India, and—in story books.

"Our best plan would be to try to regulate him," said an enthusiastic speaker. "Let us build tollgates all along the route he chooses to take; and we will make him pay every time he passes one."

"Yes, but that leaves him roaming around," cried an old woman, "and I don't want my boy killed."

Greetings from China

WE'VE had an August 20th Lord's Day, the like we had hardly dreamed was coming for us. It was possibly the hottest day of the summer and from morning till late the same evening we had meetings. Each one of us four missionaries here undoubtedly feels that each wishes to be the first to tell it. How we praise God for the morning Baptismal Service when thirty-two were baptized, the largest number yet in a class since we are here. Fifteen people were received by letter, and at the Lord's Supper there were 122 who partook. Sister Cheng, a Fukinese Christian and a well-trained woman in the things of God, also an Intervarsity leader, gave the morning message on the meaning of baptism, and the baptising fell to me in the absence of our dear brother, pastor Chang, who has been troubled for some time with high blood-pressure. He and I were coworkers at our first station in Tungming, Hopei, thirty years ago. This was the first regular worship service in the building in the west yard, a lately rented annex to this Ssu Dao Kai compound. The children's Sunday School and Junior Church had been held there for some time.

A simple lunch was served at noon so that the Christians would not need to go home. In the afternoon we held the church members' meeting and discussed forming a local church or two, one in the West Sub. and one here at Ssu Dao Kai. We had Bible reading and prayer. We much desire to lay this matter on many hearts that a living church may arise here. With Sunday Night, August 20, we also closed a two-weeks' Bible Conference meeting at two places. There are close to 500 children under Bible instruction for three weeks under about a dozen fine young people and two missionary leaders.

Our cable to the Conference has undergone a metamorphosis in the meantime, so that the newest form reads something like this, it may undergo a revision yet: "BROWN FREEMAN SOUTH DAKOTA GREETINGS TO CONFERENCE PRAISE GOD FOR SOWING AND REAPING OPPORTUNITIES HUNDREDS OF CHILDREN CROWD DVBS THIRTY TWO BAPTIZED SUNDAY URGE STRONG INTERCESSION ISAIAH 59, 19 FAVOR LARGE JAPAN UNIT . . . . CHINA QUARTET"

We of course mean that the church at home may take the present opportunity to send a well-equipped large group, say a dozen, to Japan, "While is is day, for the night cometh when no man can work." We should send a large unit at once, together with a doctor, nurse, evangelists, music teachers and maybe even radio or other mechanics.

Cannibalism Reversed

M Toews *

CANNIBALISM REVERSED

ACCORDING to Winston's Dictionary, a cannibal is "a human being who eats flesh." The Africans have long been accused of being cannibals and of being uncivilized. It is interesting to note that the African is getting something back at his more civilized brethren.

The African has been a keen observer of the numerous cans and cartons that the civilized peoples use. He took notice that the pictures on the exterior of these containers showed what was in the interior; even though he could not read what the label said, he could understand the pictures. Thus a can of salmon fish had a picture of a salmon on the outside. When the carton had the familiar picture of the "colored mammy," Aunt Jamima, why that meant that human flesh of a black person was in the carton. To further establish this claim, certain cooks had seen human finger nails and hair in the various kinds of meat that they had opened. To make the case more conclusive against the civilized world, it was observed that certain Africans taken to Tshikapa for hospitalization, were never seen again. The Africans never saw their corpses, so the white man must have eaten them. No, it was not the missionaries, but other white men. Tales of very sick folk who were isolated and kept from their relatives only added to this proof. In some sections near Mboi, the Africans were so afraid of white men that they hid in the tall grass when the cars went by.

However, it was not only at Mboi, but right in the school at Nyanga that some of the students had believed such reports. One of the missionaries took some time out to give explanations to some of these hidden secrets. These Africans are very gullible, and it takes much "grace and strength" to set them aright in their thinking.

Your workers need your prayers—These African Christians need your prayers.

Lay Evangelism in our Mennonite Churches

Ellis Graber *

THE call of this mid-century year of 1950 is a call of evangelism. Members of the Protestant Churches of America, whether they live in rural areas or cities, whether they be teachers, farmers, bankers or housewives, are called in this very hour for the United Evangelistic Advance of America. Already thousands upon thousands have this year united with the church of Christ because men and women and young people have gone out two by two heeding His call.

THE BASIS FOR EVANGELISM

This emphasis on evangelism is not something new but is as old as the gospel itself. It has its roots in the heart of God yearning for those who know him not, in the ministry of Jesus who came to seek and to save the lost, and in the Holy Scriptures, an infallible guide to eternal life. All we are doing in this United Evangelistic Advance and at this General Conference is striving to recapture the vision and faith and enthusiasm of the first century church founded by the Man of Galilee himself.

You remember the story of the Lost Sheep. There is nothing in that story to indicate that the lost sheep was worse than the others; that it was young or old, black or white, but the simple truth that somehow it became separated from the flock and the shepherd. It was lost. There is an urgency to go out and find that sheep rather than just to wait for its return.

Every page of the gospel story teems with the truth that Jesus went about doing good—a doing of good that went beyond the mere performance of good deeds. It reflected a vital concern for the souls of men. There were the lost who needed to find themselves and their Shepherd. His indeed was a ministry in which he was ever striving to have people reach up to God with one hand in allegiance and with the other hand out to mankind in love and service. So he sat with publicans and sinners. He said he came to call not the righteous but the sinners to repentance. He stated his mission in simple terms. He came to seek and to save the lost.

THE METHOD OF EVANGELISM

To accomplish this mission he sometimes spoke to the multitudes, and there is no doubt that some were moved. But his most effective method was that of personal interviews. As one studies the fourteen interviews of Jesus recorded in the gospels one notes that almost every person whose name is recorded as having been won by Christ made his commitment during or following a conversation with the Master. His disciples were chosen personally. Then he trained seventy persons, lay people, and sent them out two by two. According to Matthew 10 and Luke 10 they went from home to home preaching the gospel and announcing that the Kingdom of God had come. Where they were received they tarried, and where they were not received they turned and moved on to another place.

Now this method which Jesus himself instituted and which he worked out most effectively is the method of evangelism of which we are speaking today. It is a method in which people go out two by two into the highways and by-ways and compel them to come in.

EXPERIENCES IN LAY EVANGELISM

In the Eastern District we had a month of special emphasis on evangelism last fall in which each congregation carried out a program of Visitation Evangelism as it saw fitting. The procedure I outline is not only the one we used but that which is typical of many churches who have undertaken such a crusade.

First, the official church board gave its approval and support to the project. Then we set a date for the visitation a good many weeks in advance. We decided to have it on three consecutive evenings in October. Then followed the matter of securing decision cards, assignment cards, visitation manuals, and a host of other materials. Visitors had to be appointed and paired—not always such an easy matter. The prospect list had to be brought up-to-date. In revising ours we soon discovered that we had upwards of 100 places to be visited.

Finally came the first of three evenings in which we met at the church for a fellowship dinner at 6:30 o'clock. Each team of visitors was given an envelope in which were about seven cards, each listing the name and address and other information regarding a prospect. Each team was asked to visit as many prospects as it could between 7 and 9 o'clock that evening. By 6:50 we had finished the meal and were ready for scripture reading, final instructions and prayer. By 7 o'clock the visitors were ready to leave on their mission.

Various excuses may be expected. One can be sure that on some call someone will say, "There are some people outside the church just as good as those in the church." Unless a lay person is prepared for that he may not be ready to admit it as true and then hasten on to give his own testimony by saying, "Yes, I know that is true. But I also know that I would not be as good a person as I am if I did not have Christ as my Saviour."

One can also expect to come into homes where people like to argue. They may ask, "What about movies? What about dancing?" Unless the person is careful he will soon find himself in an argument. He must be warned that the important questions which must always be before him are, "What about Christ?" "What about your religious life?" "What is your relationship with God?" A visitor may win an argument but usually he will lose a prospect.

Then, too, a visitor must keep in mind that children are an important point of contact. Any normal parents will want to do what is best for their children. And what better thing can they do than become children of God?

*Pastor, Zion Church, Souderton, Pennsylvania.

Visitors are warned not to talk too much; not to stay too long; if someone begins to criticize the church saying, "The preacher is no good, and the Sunday School superintendent is no good," they give the simple, honest reply, "Yes, I know they are human. They make mistakes. But I am sure they are doing the best they know how."

You see, someone who goes out in such a Visitation Evangelism Crusade must have something to share. He must be a Christ-loving, church-loving, devoted Christian.

On that first night two visitors were walking toward the steps of a home making their first call. One turned to the other and said, "What will we say?" The second replied, "You do the talking. I'm scared." When the door was opened, they introduced themselves and were invited in. When they sat down the man of the house said,

> "Were so glad you came. You know we moved to Souderton twelve years ago. We've never attended church. And this is the first time anyone from any church ever came to see us about our religion."

Twelve years in Souderton with a Mennonite church two blocks from their home and no one had sought them out! Twelve years in a rural town with another Mennonite church, a General Conference church, six blocks away and no one ever came to speak to them about their faith! Yet Souderton prides itself on being a church town. We do not allow any Sunday movies! We do not allow Sunday ball games! . . .Twelve years and no one came!

Is there someone in your town, your township, or your county—a lost sheep—and you are waiting for his return instead of seeking him out and leading him to the Shepherd?

This man and his wife joined the church last November. They have been in regular attendance ever since.

May I tell you of another incident, with the permission of the one whom it involves. On my prospect list about two years ago was the name of a young man whom I had never seen. Several months ago this young man sat in my study for almost two hours and told his story. He attended Sunday School as a lad but then some boys in his class poked fun at him when he stuttered while reading the Scriptures and so he quit. He just didn't go to church anywhere. When people asked him to go he always found a handy excuse.

Later during the Visitation Evangelism Crusade two men came to visit him. They invited him to come to church. He tried to brush them off by saying, "Well, I'll think about it." "No," they said, "we want you to come this Sunday." That startled him a bit and he replied, "I'll try to come to Sunday School." "No," said the second man, "If you come we want you to come to both Sunday School and Morning Worship." It made him think. Turning to them he said, "Well. . .er. . .what good does your Christian religion do you anyhow. . .?" Then the men began to explain.

Over a period of months he became a Christian and joined the church. His life has been completely changed. "I used to work all day. I minded my business and the other men in the crew minded theirs," he said. "But now, all day long, I am always watching for ways in which I can help them. You should see how those men treat me now! We used to go home at the end of the day's work, stop at the hotel to have our drinks. But I don't do that anymore. I don't go inside—or if I do I take a coke. I used to smoke but I've quit that and I feel much better. I've never been as happy in my life as I am now." So went his story.

Just before I left for this conference this young man called on me for help in filling out his draft questionnaire. He said his uncle advised him to go non-combatant. In that way he could get his job back when he returned and would also be looked upon with favor in the community. We reviewed the entire matter after which he said, "Now if I go into the army I'll go against what we learned in Catechetical Class." "Yes," I replied. "And if I go into the army I'll go against what Christ taught." "Yes!" "If I go into the army I'll go against what our church stands for and against what you have been preaching." "Yes," I said, "but you must make the decision. You must make your choice on the basis of what you really believe." To this he replied, "At first I thought I'd go into the army but now I see that all I can do is to go IV-E." That is what evangelism leads up to!

These are but two incidents of many that could be related telling of what happens in an Evangelism Crusade. But of this you can be sure, whatever the experience, those who do the visiting and those who are visited will never be the same because of that visit. Lives will be enriched. To some degree, at least, those who are visited will be awakened and challenged as someone takes the time to come into their home to present the supreme invitation.

THE CHALLENGE OF EVANGELISM

Here in America we are living in a land in which approximately 50% of the people belong to the church. But many who have their names on the church rolls are not Christians, they are nominal curch members. Experience has shown that where Lay Evangelism is carried out, in the end almost 50% of the prospects became Christians. What would happen if the lay people of America would go out as evangelists? America could yet be won for Christ. Now!

There is another thought I can not escape. Coming from the Eastern District Conference I must remind myself again and again that the Mennonites came to the shores of America, to Philadelphia, in October of 1683, and then made their way northward along a narrow trail to Germantown. From there they spread throughout the surrounding regions. I can not drive along the beautiful countryside where once large Mennonite farms flourished, or go to Philadephia, the third largest city in America, without asking the question, "Where have we been these 267 years?" The population of our country has increased from thousands to millions. Yet some of our Mennonite churches have not been expanded. Where have we been? I have heard some of the explanations! Some say the Mennonite church has not grown because of war, because it hasn't had stronger ministers, or because of what the Mennonite church stands for. Are those reasons or are they excuses? Might it be that we have been too content to be labeled "die Stille im Lande" and have not had a real concern for the lost sheep? Might it be that we have lost the enthusiasm and the spirit of first century evangelism when people went out two by two?

We need to make a living. But that is not the final and supreme purpose in the life of a Christian. The supreme purpose of a Christian is to be an evangelist, to tell the good news of the gospel—what the Lord hath done—by word, by deed, and by thought. Farming, teaching, banking and housekeeping are means of evangelism. They are not ends in themselves.

Who ever invented the idea that missionaries and ministers are to do more sacrificing and witnessing than any other Christians? That is an invention of man! Certainly that thought ought not to be prevalent in a body that holds to the doctrine of the Priesthood of all Believers. In the Mennonite church everyone is a priest. We are all evangelists. There is a division of labor but not of purpose. In our faith every child of God who has experienced His salvation is not only endowed with the responsibility of witnessing but joyously will want to tell others of the real joy he has found. We must not shirk this duty or become weary in this responsibility.

There is not one who can bear our own personal witness. There was no one else who could accomplish the work Jesus came to do. If we fail in being an evangelist some soul will suffer in hell because we have not witnessed. "Go make disciples. . . ." that is the call and the challenge that comes to us in this hour of 1950.

A young couple says the greatest joy that has come into their home came when they set aside every Monday evening to visit people with the one purpose of witnessing for Christ.

Said one man, "I have discovered that I can make a living by working five days a week. The sixth day I will use to help others live a life."

Yes, there is power when we go out with words, and deeds and thoughts that we can share with our fellowmen. And if you do it I am sure you will also discover a new joy in your life.

Deal kindly with the erring.
Oh! do not thou forget,
However darkly stained by sin,
He is thy brother yet.
Forget not thou hast often sinned,
And sinful yet must be;
Deal kindly with the erring one,
As God has dealt with thee.

FOUR TYPES OF LAYMEN

There are the tired laymen, who always have some lawn mowing or furnace repairing to do on Sunday mornings, and are always too tired to come out for men's meetings on week nights.

There are the retired laymen, who once carried the burdens of church work, but are now weary with well-doing. They live on past recollections.

There are the tiresome laymen, who insist on heading all the committees and making all the speeches. They bore everybody but themselves.

There are the tireless laymen—the kind Paul meant when he wrote about those who were becoming saints—who can be counted on Sunday after Sunday, and all the days between. Their preachers rise up and call them blessed.

Book Notes

The Sacred Scriptures

LET'S READ THE BIBLE, by Kenneth Clinton. The Macmillan Company, New York. 1950. 149 pages. $2.00.

IN the past our church people have delighted in reading the Bible. They have held a high regard for the sacred Scriptures. The author states that today there is an appalling ignorance of Biblical content among all people, young and old alike. Throughout the book he earnestly contends for a return to the reading of this great book—the Bible.

Not only does the Bible contain great literature which is most dramatically discussed, but a power that is dynamic and spiritual. It is here that the needy turn for help, the lonely turn for comfort, the hungry and thirsty find their souls satisfied. The reader must not be confused with misinterpretations, but is to be a dramatist, using his imagination if he is to see man's search for God.

Much of the Biblical material is directly related to life. The O. T. stories are vivid in picture, homely, often in common life, yet always full of action. They open great windows upon the rich adventurous life of the Hebrew people. The Prophets are stirred deeply by the conditions of the times in which they live. The Psalms are rich in nature—prayer, suffering, virtue, comfort, security, and praise. The characters are men of action, heroes of faith and lovers of God.

Every subject dealt with in this book is beautifully illustrated with Scripture selections, thus making it very helpful for teaching purposes. It is a book for the home with many aids to family devotions. The simplicity in which this book is written makes it adaptable for use in Young People's meetings. Nearly every chapter is suitable and contains enough material for panel discussions.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

FIRST announcement of registration figures indicate that there are 35 full-time students and six part time students for a total of 41 students, the largest in the history of Mennonite Biblical Seminary.

The student list is a follows: Claude F. Boyer, Quarkertown, Pennsylvania; Edith Claassen, Whitewater, Kansas; Franco Cosco, Campobasso, Italy; Frieda Dirks, Chicago, Illinois; Helmuth Dyck, Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario; Elmer Ediger, Akron, Pennsylvania; Ferdinand Ediger, Drake, Saskatchewan; Viola Ediger, Inman, Kansas; Aaron J. Epp, Henderson, Nebraska; Marvin Ewert, Dolton, South Dakota; Bertha Fast, Mountain Lake, Minnesota; Frances Funk, Cleveland, Ohio; Melvin Funk, Hillsboro, Kansas; Edna Marie Goossen, Burns, Kansas; Henry W. Goossen, Burns, Kansas; O'Ray Graber, Marion, South Dakota; Lloyd W. Gundy, Bloomington, Illinois; Ernst Harder, Paraguay, South America; Leland Harder, North Newton, Kansas; Stanley Hofstetter, Orrville, Ohio; Rupert Hohmann, North Newton, Kansas; Donald Isaac, Mountain Lake, Minnesota; Hanno Klassen, Heidelberg, Germany; Levi Koehn, Meno, Oklahoma; Grace Liu, Hopei Province, China; Rudolph Martens, New Hamburg, Ontario; Leo Miller, Marion, South Dakota; Vernon Neufeld, Shafter, California; Arnold Nickel, Henderson, Nebraska; Agnes Poettcker, Ryley, Alberta; Henry Poettcker, Pincher Creek, Alberta; Marjorie Reimer, Reedly, California; Howard Shelly, East Greenville, Pennsylvania; Martin Schrag, McPherson, Kansas; Barbara C. Smucker, Newton, Kansas; Elaine Waltner, Marion, South Dakota; Harris Waltner, Marion, South Dakota; Lola Mae Wiebe, Lind, Washington; Willard Wiebe, Lind, Washington; Elnore Yost, Pendora, Ohio; Burton Yost, Lansdale, Pennsylvania.

BETHEL COLLEGE

IN his first chapel address of the new school year, Acting Pres. D. C. Wedel emphasized that Bethel College is built upon the foundation of Jesus Christ.

"Bethel College aims to build upon Jesus; its program is neither narrow nor broad, it is basic. Bethel is interested not only in tools, skills, knowledge, but above all in character, in moral values," the president stated in addressing the student body.

TOTAL enrollment for the school year 1950-51 has reached 362, it was announced by the registrar's office. This compares with 394 at this time a year ago. The freshman class is the largest with an enrollment of 117. The sophomores follow with 80, while the senior class has 75 enrolled and the junior class is the smallest with 64. Only in the freshman class do women outnumber the men. Of the total given above, 10 are extension students and 13 are unclassified. Foreign countries have the following representation in the student body: eleven from Canada, two from Germany, two from Liberia, one from India, one from Paraguay, one from Poland, one from Costa Rica, and one from Puerto Rico.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

THE enrollment of Freeman Junior College has reached 146 with 100 in the Academy and 46 College students. Included are two foreign students, Christa Hege of Reutlingen, Germany, and Mike Cardenas of Chihuahua, Chih, Mexico.

Among the out of state students are Lora Livingstone and Beatrice White Bird of Ashland, Montana, here for their first year of high school.

Community Series Announced

The following numbers have been chosen for the Community Series of Concerts and Lectures and are one of the finest to be offered in this area.

Oct. 24	Dimitry Markevitch—Cellist
Nov. 2, 3	The Mikado—Operatta by the College music department
Jan. 12, 1951	Griswold—Lecturer
March 30, 1951	Yi Kwei Sze—Baritone
April 15, 1951	Apollo Boys Choir

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

FORTY-FIVE regular and eighteen alternate members have been chosen to comprise the 1950-51 Vesper Choir. A large number of students tried out for this organization. Rehearsals of the College Choral Society began Tuesday, September 26, in preparation for the annual rendition of the Messiah in December.

Gospel teams held their first meeting of the year, a joint meeting, at the college cabin September 20. Inspirational talks were given and a candle light service was held. There seems to be considerable interest in membership in the Gospel Teams this year.

Homecoming will be held October 14. Sunday, October 15, will be Parents' Day. Parents of students are invited to attend this service. The main event of the day is the Vesper service in the college chapel. Rev. William Stauffer has been chosen as the speaker this year. He will use as his topic, "The Faith of Our Fathers."

President Ramseyer is to be a speaker on the Tiffin, Ohio, Council of Churches' University of Life series. He is to speak October 16 on the topic, "What Should be the Christian Attitude Toward Race and Minority Groups.'" The meetings are held on successive Monday evenings over a six week period.

Jottings

NORTHERN DISTRICT

—Gospel Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: Nine Christmas bundles were collected in our church for relief. Clothing for relief will also be collected in the near future. The King Co-workers Mission Society gave a shower for Miss Louise Loewen who will go to India as a missionary under the Alliance Mission Board in November. Mrs. Suderman has undergone a major operation, and is recovering nicely. At our mid-week Bible class we are studying the book of Hebrews.—Elizabeth Lohrenz, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: We have again started the regular Bible classes and midweek services. The Bethel Mission Society has as its project for the year, a donation of $1,000 towards the kitchen in "The New Home for the Aged." The dedication of this home was held August 6 in this church. Lunch was served in the city park to all visitors after the services. Many from this community attended the General Conference sessions held in Freeman. Don Smucker of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary of Chicago spoke here August 22. His message was on our historic peace position in relation to the draft status of our young men.—Mrs. George Eitzen, Corr.

WESTERN DISTRICT

—Brudertal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: The marriage of Delores Bartel and Donald Kerbs took place on July 16. Ruth Nickel and Winston O. Shook were united in marriage on August 26. Mr. and Mrs. Ray Funk and family left August 20 for Paraguay to serve under the M.C.C. August 6 Rev. Curt Baese, worker in the Western District Home Mission, and David Habbeger, missionary to the Cheyenne Indians, August 13, spoke to us on their mission fields.—Mrs. Waldo R. Nickel, Corr.

—Goessel Church, Goessel, Kansas: The ordination of our new pastor, Orlin Frey, took place Sunday, September 17. P. P. Buller and P. K. Regier officiated. Mr. and Mrs. Frey are living in the parsonage, not far from the church. The annual Gift Day celebration of the Bethesda Hospital and Home for the Aged was held September 14. A program was held both in the afternoon and evening. Eight members of our church were married within recent months. Formal opening of our high school took place September 3 in a special evening program; P. A. Wedel and P. P. Buller were the speakers. September 10 B. Goetze of Germany delivered the Sunday morning message and told of his experiences in working with refugees and others in Europe. The Mission Friends Circle has resumed activity after two months vacation.

EASTERN DISTRICT

—Deep Run Church, Bedminster, Pennsylvania: Our pastor, J. Herbert Fretz, spoke at a meeting of the Young People's Union at the General Conference, and Ervin Freed, a layman, spoke on Layman Visitation Evangelism. A congregational fellowship dinner was held after morning worship service September 10. Pastor Fretz has begun a series of seven sermons on "Seven Challenges to the Church at Deep Run" based on Revelation 2 and 3. An adult church membership class begins September 18 for four weekly meetings. The Womens Missionary Society will meet this week to begin their fall program. An organ recital was given September 17, by Paul Stevens of Doylestown, organist; Irene Frack, Doylestown, rendered vocal selections.—Corr.

MIDDLE DISTRICT

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sohar are parents of a baby boy, Jan Michael, born August 27. Norman Wayne is the name given to the baby son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Stevic, born August 18. John Albert, baby son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Flueckiger, arrived September 1.

Ralph Beechy, Mennonite teacher in Wooster High School, was guest leader for Christian Endeavor September 3, with a topic on education. Caleb Graber has enrolled at Bluffton College. Hazel Gerber is continuing her nurses training at Canton, Ohio. Stanley Hofstetter has enrolled at the Chicago Seminary for part-time study and work elsewhere while Mrs. Hofstetter is temporary dietician there. The September meeting of the Women's Missionary Society featured the Girls' Chorus and a panel discussion on the "Ministry of the Church," with Mrs. Harold Himes, chairman. Quilting was in progress all day and clothing was packed for relief.—Corr.

PACIFIC DISTRICT

—First Church, Reedley, California: The Ladies Worthwhile Circle held its first meeting for the year, September 11. After the potluck supper programs on "Christianizing Our Community" and a study of the near East were outlined. Current projects include making layettes and quilts, rolling bandages, and mending for the local relief center. —Mrs. Robert Harder, Corr.

—Country Church, Monroe, Washington: Our pastor, Abraham Unruh, is giving us a series of messages on "The Tabernacle." The Missionary Society is busy making quilts which they send to relief. Boxes of clothing have also been sent. Two of our young people, Melvin Unruh and Dorothy Schwartz, attended camp at Lake Samamish this summer. August 20, John Peters, one of our young men who graduated from Grace Bible Institute last June, gave the morning message, followed by a communion service. We invited the Monroe Town Church to be with us for the fellowship dinner and also for the ordination service in the afternoon at which time John Peters was ordained to the ministry. George Kopper gave the message and a mixed quartet from the Town Church sang. Abraham Unruh had the prayer of dedication. In the evening Brother Peters gave the message in the Town Church. He left that week, with his wife and son, for the Gospel Missionary Home in Kansas City where they will be for six months. They plan, the Lord willing, to serve on the foreign field.—Corr.

Reports from Summer Service

Voluntary Service - A Vision at Work

At some time the visions we get need to be put into action. We cannot forever be at the altar worshipping God nor can we forever speak of his love. There must be practical expression of the things we believe, the things we profess. Voluntary Service is the translation of lofty mountain top experiences into practical every day expression. It is timely that we think of this. In July when MCC officials spoke to government officials concerning our peace convictions, they were unanimous in their interest and enthusiasm for our service program of relief abroad and service at home. This service program may be the pattern for future service in case of war. For any and all who have been exempt from conscription due to their peace convictions, here is an alternative which can adequately express those convictions. Voluntary Service is of great importance for youth, for an expression of faith, for the needs of the world.

Utica Migrant Work,

Clinton, New York

The reception of the Voluntary Summer Service Unit residing in the Squires House for the second term of work among the migrants has been encouraging Even before the unit arrived many of the preliminary steps had been taken. The local migrant committee of the Council of Church women, with Dr. Thomas, professor of Sociology at Cornell University, as consultant, has done considerable planning during the spring and early summer. Mrs. Glenn McFarland who heads this committee kept the unit leader informed of all plans. Significantly, the committee made every effort to carry out the three recommendations made by the Service Unit at the close of the last summer term, namely: continuation of the religious and recreational work in the six camps; community should share with the growers the burden of setting up a child care center; that local persons who have a sympathetic interest in the migrants serve with the Home Missions Council group a sufficient number of times so that finally they could take over the program as their own responsibility. While the second one was not realized in full, much progress was made, particularly in gathering information concerning the procedure in instituting the child care centers.

On June 29, Mrs. McFarland had arranged a very profitable committee meeting in the form of a luncheon conference at her home for the purpose of clearing up the confusion that was caused concerning the various committees and titles of all the groups participating in the migrant program.

The following information was plainly given:

National Committee on Work among Migrants is one of the committees of the H.M.C. and is the administrative body responsible for the development of the nation wide program of Christian service in migrant camps.

State Church Committees on Migrant Work are at work in many states. They are usually made up of representatives of the Protestant churches, growers, canners and other interested groups within the state. They work in cooperation with the national committee and have as their major functions interpretation, promotion and the raising of funds for the program.

Local Church Committees on Migrant Work are organized along same general pattern as the national and state committees and help carry on specific local projects. They work with the H.M.C. representatives in laying plans.

Area or local committees decided the budget for the specific work that is planned in the community. In cases where special projects are planned by the national and state committees in addition to the local plans, expenses are borne by the national and state groups.

July 6 was another red letter day in the community migrant program. Church, social agency groups and civic minded individuals gathered in the Shenandoah club rooms for tea and to hear how various groups and government agencies are aiding the migrants.

Miss Sensenig introduced her group of workers and explained the joint sponsorship of the H.M.C. and the M.C.C. Mary Lois Detweiler, Marie Gingerich, James B. Miller and Maurice Kaufmann gave a short skit in which the material needs for the program were presented.

The Waterville committee on migrant work has planned for a similar meeting at the home of Mrs. Radley, Putnam Street, Waterville, on July 12 at 2:30 p.m., and the Utica Area Committee has set July 24 as the date for a meeting of the same kind in the First Presbyterian Church, New Hartford, at 7:30 p.m.

The above meetings are planned for the purpose of having the various groups meet the unit workers and to learn what type of aid can be given.

All these activities together with the cooperation and donations of the growers and owners of the camps have made excellent contributions to our work with the migrants.

Industrial Home School Annex

Washington, D. C.

THE Industrial Home School Annex is primarily a home for underprivileged children. This classification includes orphans, children with one parent living, children whose parents are separated or divorced, or those whose parents refuse them or who are unqualified to care for them.

The "Annex" is not set up as a permanent home for those who are admitted. The children remain here only until they can return to their own homes or until foster family care can be provided.

From the streets of the Capitol of a wealthy, health-conscious nation, they come—undernourished, undisciplined, and starved for affection, often bearing cruel scars of neglect or brutality. From a city of intelligent, educated, church-going people come the little sufferers of the sins of others.

It is not easy to clearly define our place in such an institution. On the surface, it is the task of dressing, bathing, cleaning, escorting to dinner, and of settling quarrels. But it is more—it is an attempt at solving problems reaching generations back, the surmounting of which seems impossible. But to those of us who believe that the Grace of God abounds proportionately where sin is, the answers come, day by day. It means speaking encouragingly as we pull a baby tooth, telling a story to take out the "hurt" as we comb snarled hair, exercising patience when a child purposely spills a can of paint on the floor, praying for wisdom when one refuses to be taught how to do a daily work assignment, or another decides to dance dangerously on one foot along a high stair railing.

The job is not always pleasant, but it is challenging, and brings compensation that cannot be found in other types of work. In our humanness, we are tempted to shrink away from its repulsive side; from our standing as adopted ones of the Shepherd of Love, we feel the burning love of Him who searched the hillsides for one, and the place of His heart as He carried the lost in His arms.

MENNONITE YOUTH

House of Mercy

Washington, D. C.

THE House of Mercy had its beginning in 1882, when the Women's Auxiliary of the Episcopal Church of the Washington Diocese searched for a means to help meet the spiritual and material needs of unwed mothers. In the works of Angus Dun, Bishop of Washington, we find the true purpose of this home: "The work of the House of Mercy is rooted in the faith and life of the Church. It is one expression of our Lord's mercy. The mercy we all need for our own failures and weaknesses. And we are all called by Him to join His in identifying ourselves with the hurt and failing."

The House of Mercy is established in a spacious, well-equipped building constructed in 1911, the gift of Mrs. Juliun James. Surrounding the building are the beautiful forested grounds of Rock Creek Park.

An unmarried mother may hear of the House of Mercy by various means, through her doctors, friends, or minister. After her decision to enter the home is made, the girl pays a fee which covers a fraction of her expenses while she is there. Then she steps into the quiet routine of the home and soon becomes a part of it. She soon learns that cooperation is the keynote there. Each individual shares certain responsibilities and duties. In the entire building, from the cheery dining room to the quiety beauty of the chapel, there is the atmosphere of calm, ordered living. With such surroundings, the girl is better able to meet the gigantic problem of unwed motherhood and all of the emotional difficulties it entails.

Whitfield Hospital

Mississippi

FOR almost all of us it was a pleasant surprise to see Whitfield in contrast to what we had anticipated. The buildings are almost new and the grounds are very beautiful. The buildings were built in the period from 1926 to 1935. At this later date the first patients were brought here. Although facilities are not what they might be in every respect they are certainly far from being deplorable. Mississippi being a Southern state practices segregation of its patients. We were very happy to know that every facility provided for white patients is again duplicated in the colored wards in another part of the hospital grounds. The latest addition is the Alcoholics and Narcotics building which is the largest in the United States. The irony of it comes when we are told that Mississippi is theoretically a dry state.

All of us realize that new, well kept buildings and beautiful grounds do not necessarily spell a good hospital. From what Dr. Jaquith told us in his orientation lecture we feel that Mississippi must belong to the most progressive states in their hospital administration program. In 1947 the administration of hospitals was removed from politics and placed under the supervision of a non-political board made up of doctors, lawyers, and clergymen. The directors of the various institutions are responsible to this board and not to the state legislature. Patients are admitted to the hospital upon signed statements of medical doctors and no longer by court order. A patient is not committed into Whitfield until the hospital staff can examine him and make its own diagnosis.

We are told that the most important person in any mental institution is the attendant, for it is he who spends most time with the patients. Even in this area the hospital maintains a high standard. We have been here long enough to realize that the hospital's policy to discharge any employee not complying with hospital regulations is not just an idle threat. Even though the salaries that this institution pays its attendants seem low, we are happy to note that there are attendants here who would do any hospital credit. However, Whitfield, like many other institutions of its type, is forced to take some of its employees from the "drifters" class of people.

In view of conditions as they are here the question of whether we are making any significant contribution to the hospital's program causes us real concern. —Pete

Boys' Village

Smithfield, Ohio

FOUR years ago, in the mind of a young minister, Clarence Kerr, Boys' Village was a dream and an ambition. Shortly after Reverend Kerr had been assigned to two small churches in Wayne County, Ohio, a prominent Mennonite, A. C. Ramseyer, famous for his potatoes, became interested in Reverend Kerr's ideas and his faith in delinquent and pre-delinquent boys.

With the help of other prominent citizens of the area, a plot of ground was purchased with a farmhouse and barn. The farm, occupied by ten boys, was the beginning of a new project patterned after the famous Boys' Town in Nebraska for those boys who never had a chance.

Four years, several hundred headaches and heartaches later, the Village has three cottages, one occupied, another ready for occupancy, and the original farmhouse. Each cottage is presided over by a housemother who has ten boys under her care and guidance.

127 acres of land make up the dairy farm which is operated by a farm manager who teaches the boys to do the farm work. From plowing in the spring to making hay, cultivating, and harvesting, the boys learn agriculture by doing the work themselves. Almost without exception the city boys, as well as those from smaller communities, quickly adapt themselves to the life on the farm and become enthusiastic pupils. The highest rated job is that of barn boy, those who do the farm chores such as milking and feeding. The competition for these responsible positions is intense.

Since Boys' Village is supported entirely through voluntary contributions, it is necessary that a small administrative force be maintained to tell the public of the work and purpose of Boys' Village and to thank those generous individuals who send in contributions.

The oft-quoted words of Reverend Kerr tell of his belief and his faith in boys, "All a boy needs is a home and a chance." The result is a haven for homeless, unwanted, pre-delinquent boys.

Boys between the ages of 12 and 16 are admitted to the Village, attend the Smithville Public Schools, and are taught through love and patient guidance that someone cares for them and is trying to help them to become good, respected citizens.

Through work and play they are encouraged to assume leadership and are given the opportunity for self-direction and self-development.

The Village is based upon the cottage plan or the family plan. It is one of the most important tools in developing sensitivity to the rights of others and in developing the sense of responsibility.

Boys take part in household chores—cleaning, washing dishes and the gardening. They have their own dining room and a library in each cottage. A shop is provided for those who wish to take part in metal and woodcraft.

The goal is to help each boy towards a good social adjustment so that he will be better able to meet the responsibilities of community life. Boys remain at the Village until their efforts and accomplishments indicate that these aims have been achieved.

Topeka Hospital

Kansas

RECENTLY I was talking to a friend of mine who was recuperating from the results of an attempt to commit suicide. We discussed a number of subjects ending with that of religion. It was at this point in our conversation that he made an interesting remark: "If one could only believe that there were something purposeful, worthwhile, or best of all, Divine." "What makes you think there isn't?" my mind inwardly retorted. It was evident that this man lived in a spirit of hopelessness. Suicide and self-destruction were, as he stated later, the only really decent philosophy.

Suicide is occuring in many different ways. The chronic forms, the subtle ways, are portrayed in the individual who is constantly sick; the man who constantly "dares" on the highways or at his work; the chronic "worrier" who suffers resultantly from ulcers, headaches, asthma, and many other illnesses; and there is also the person who persistently carries out various types of behavior against the advice of the physicians. Many are dying—slowly, painfully, destructively—demanding attention all about them.

Whether this wish to die is hostility directed against yourself or against those with whom you live is of little importance. The important thing is the unconscious wish that you have to die.

"Why will ye die?" GOD says to these. "Come unto Me and find life!" Look at how many times you find yourself among those who insist on dying! It is impossible that you thoroughly believe in God when you manifest such deeds.

The question that comes to me is: To what degree have we really decided to live? How converted are we from the sin of "destroying ourselves." I believe it would be correct to ask for real life by asking God to give it to us, and then to thoroughly believe in Him.

A PARABLE (The Liquor Traffic)

"Keep your boy away from him, that's your business. Why, madam, don't you know that an elephant's hide and tusks are valuable for mechanical and surgical purposes, and that he is useful in India? Besides, there is the toll he will pay. We shall by this means have money enough in the public treasury to build schools for a good many boys who are not trampled to death."

"That's the plan. Regulate him; regulate him!" shouted the crowd.

So they appointed a great many committees and drafted constitutions and by-laws, and circulated petitions, and, by the time the elephant had killed more boys and wasted more gardens, they had erected very comfortable toll-houses for the gatekeepers, and gates for the elephant; and they waited in great satisfaction to see the animal regulated.

Slowly the great feet trampled onward, slowly the great trunk appeared in view; and, with a sniff of contempt, the elephant lifted the gate off its hinges and walked off with it while the crowd stared after him in dismay.

"Well!" exclaimed the keeper, catching his breath, "we haven't made much money so far, but the regulation plan would have been first-rate—if the elephant hadn't been a little stronger than the obstruction!" —Everybody's Monthly

M C C Notes

Why is Relief Still Needed

This is the title of a small leaflet recently printed, a supply of which is being sent to the pastor of each congregation. It points out briefly the reasons for present day relief needs, the areas which are particularly needy, and what is essential for carrying on the work. Individuals or congregations desiring additional copies should write to Relief Section, Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pa.

New Center in France

The Valdoie property recently purchased by the French Mennonites with the assistance of the MCC, is soon to be ready for occupancy by the children formerly cared for at Nancy. A great deal of repair work and cleaning was necessay since the property was secured. Local Mennonites, and also a student work camp group assisted in this work, along with a number of regular relief workers. During the summer months children of this home have been taken out into the homes of French Mennonites of the area.

Please enclose this label when writing.

Service Among Migrants Opens

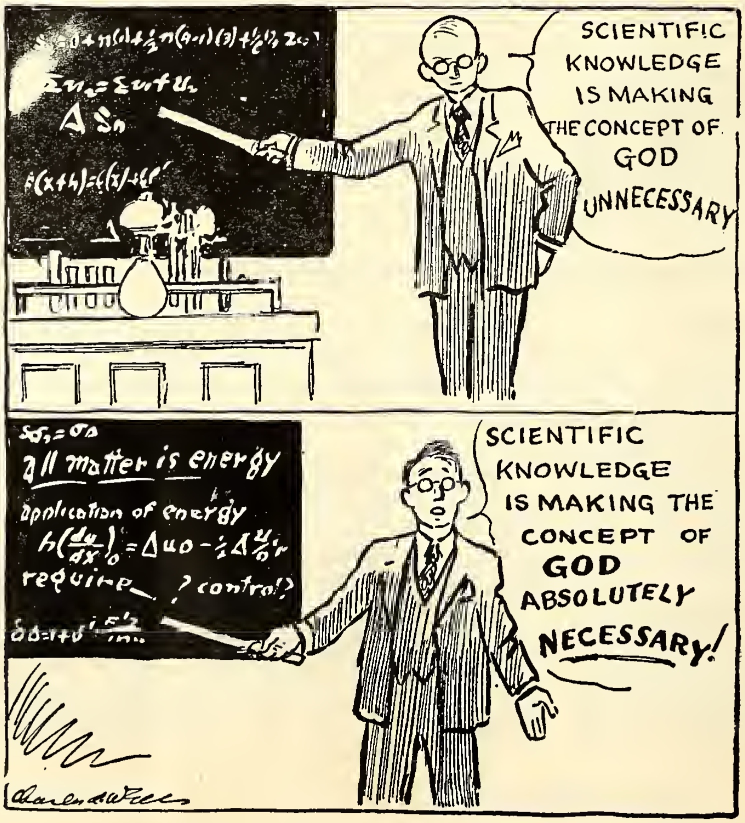
Six young people are preparing to bring a service to migrant laborers in Califonia beginning in October. The work will include family counselling, religious teaching and Bible study, craft lessons, recreation, wellfare, nursing, etc., reaching both children and adults. The unit members, including two nurses and a teacher, will follow a schedule in visiting regularly five migrant camps. Although the migrants in California move about in their specific place of work, they remain settled in the same general area the year around; and therefore this unit is challenged to bring a service to them for more than a temporary period. The work is sponsored through the cooperation of Mennonite churches in California, and financed partially by the growers for whom the migrants work.

New Service Doors Open

Through the contact of Summer Service units which were deeply appreciated, a number of institutions and agencies have requested Mennonite one-year volunteer workers. One of these is Boys' Village, a home for delinquent and pre-delinquent boys at Smithville, Ohio; others are the Governor Bacon Health Center in Delaware, an experimental health center for crippled and maladjusted children, epileptics and seniles; and the House of Mercy in Washington, D.C., for unfortunate girls. The Industrial Home School Annex in Washington also desires additional workers to help care for underprivileged children. These opportunities do not require special training or experience, but can be filled by young people desiring to become acquainted with needs of unfortunate people, and to help them "in the Name of Christ."

Changing Conclusions

Charles A. Wells



SCIENTIFIC KNOWLEDGE IS MAKING THE CONCEPT OF GOD UNNECESSARY
all matter is energy application of energy require ? control?
SCIENTIFIC KNOWLEDGE IS MAKING THE CONCEPT OF GOD ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY!
Charles A Wells

The relationship of religion to science has undergone a complete change in the past few years. Formerly the scientist might be respectful towards religion, but it had a very small place in his consideration if any at all. Science was leading man to such a fulfillment of his needs that poverty and physical inadequacies would soon be a thing of the past. Physical man would soon be supreme in a physical world. Government was a matter of planning and engineering. The extremes of human conduct could not be brought under control by the mastering of environment. Then the physical forces of life and the universe began to unfold under the microscope and telescope. Man had powers within his grasp that he had not dreamed of. No human skill or group engineering would encompass the need now. Great moral and spiritual laws have been recognized afresh that had formerly been considered pleasant appendixes to the physical structure of the universe. "God must now be brought into the picture or man will be forced out of the picture," is the verdict of science today.

A CORRECTION

In the September 12 issue of THE MENNONITE it was stated that the number of Protestant missionaries in Japan was 24. Somewhere the "0" was dropped as the number should have read 240. This number has probably been increased by now.

NOTICE

Students and families coming from Mennonite churches are cordially invited and urged to worship and fellowship with any of the three Mennonite churches located in Philadelphia. The churches are situated at Indiana and Franklin, Reese and Diamond, and Germantown Avenue. The pastors are especially interested in securing the names and addresses of students who are in the city for the winter. Parents, friends or others who can give this information, please contact Rev. Curtis Lehman, 2944 N. Franklin or Rev. C. C. Bedsworth, 5632 N. Fourth St.

Yours in Christ,
C. C. Bedsworth

Unruh, Hillsboro, Resigns

Rev. H. T. Unruh has resigned as pastor of the First Mennonite Church at Hillsboro, after serving the Church for eight years. He will continue to serve the Church until a new pastor has been called. After his release Reverend and Mrs. Unruh plan to move to North Newton and continue in some phase of church-work.

We are giving about one per cent of our total income to church and charity. This means a red penny for every silver dollar. The Bible suggests 10 per cent. Where are the nine?

WHEN PEOPLE ASK

just how THE MENNONITE is gotten out to include last-minute notices when the editor lives in Bluffton and the paper is printed in Kansas, here is our answer:

It takes the co-operation of all put together.

Assisting with the last minute work each week is Elmer Neufeld, a senior at Bethel College, who has agreed to assist with the final stages of proof reading, pasting up of the dummy, checking last-minute corrections, and to include any late news which may come in.

Everybody at the Headquarters Office, 722 Main, is on the alert for any significant news which may be of interest.

Any significant meetings this week? Surely: The Mission Board had a one-day meeting, with S. F. Pannabecker, A. E. Kreider, and Howard Nyce, visiting members.

Any new projects under way; surely: every Board has something. Visitors at Headquarters or at the print shop where the Conference Publications are printed will surely see many papers and records—each one representing a project of some stage of development. They all will get into print sooner or later.

KEEPING THE COLLEGE CHRISTIAN

THE spiritual immaturity of many college students is appalling. Tests show that in their knowledge of the Bible there are many "illiterates." It is an alarming discovery, but the problem starts farther back. The home and the Church must give young people a firm basis for religion so that when they come to college they have something to stand on.

The colleges can but use the material that is sent them. When Woodrow Wilson was president of Princeton University some parents complained of the conduct of the students. They asked him why the boys behaved as they did. Wilson very significantly replied, "because they are your boys."

If young people of high Christian character constitute the student body, we may expect a fine Christian college, granted, of course, that the faculty is also Christian. But if students come without adequate Christian training, how can the homes and churches expect the college to work a transformation? True, this does often happen, and many young people find their faith for the first time in college. But how much better if they had been genuine Christians before coming. We should be careful of being too critical of youth when they are our own product.

We should be much in prayer for our colleges, for the students, and for our homes from which future students will come.

THE MINISTER'S CALLING

WE hear a great deal about the call of the minister. More thought could well be given to the minister's calls. Read the article in this issue about this valuable form of service.

It is a common saying that the minister who is a strong pulpit man is weak in his pastoral work, while he who meets people easily is not very strong in the pulpit. There is an element of truth in this general statement, but the condition can be remedied. The minister who finds difficulty in meeting people can overcome this handicap, while the one who is a good social mixer can give special attention to his sermons, and by the grace of God, can become an effective preacher.

But the minister must never neglect his calling among his people. To meet them personally at the time when they most need his help has a great possibility for good. People like to be shown sympathetic personal interest, and the man of God should be able to lead them to God in their special hours of need. While occasionally there may be a minister who does too much calling among his people, the great majority should do more personal visitation.

Incidentally, this type of work is a great inspiration to the minister himself. His heart is warmed by a special blessing when he is of help to another. The material for better sermons is often born here. It is a service no minister dare slight if he wants to fulfill his real duty.

BURNING CRITICISMS

THE press recently carried the story of the Cuban artist who collected fifty of his paintings, a product of six years of work, gave a public exhibition of them and then burned them all. The reason given was that he did so because of the criticisms of other artists. This is one way to answer criticisms.

Destructive criticisms have crushed many hearts and added greatly to the world's grief. But there is a sympathetic criticism that may be genuinely helpful. Criticism is like a surgeon's knife; if wrongly or carelessly used it may do untold harm, but if used with understanding and skill it may save a life.

But we cannot escape criticisms. The important question is, what shall our reaction be. For it is not so much what others say about us as how we take it. Our critics may be "the unpaid watchmen of our souls."

ECLIPSE ON SCHEDULE

THE recent eclipse of the moon, which furnished such an interesting spectacle, is but another example of the dependability of God. Astronmers can calculate the exact time when such events shall occur. God's laws of the universe do no vary one minute. It is remarkable that man has learned to trace these laws so accurately and "to think God's thoughts after Him."

But God's spiritual laws are just as dependable. If we bring ourselves in line with these laws, and give them a chance to operate in our lives we are assured of certain fine results. But if we "kick against the pricks," we but hurt ourselves. God is dependable; whatsoever a man sows, that shall he also reap.

HOW SHALL WE STOP COMMUNISM?

THAT seems to be the major question before the world. But is not our solution greatly out-of-date? We have made great advancements in many ways, but we still think that physical force is the ultimate power. We train and send out killers to stop a movement of ideas. But a bullet will not stop the flow of ideas, and communism is an idea.

An idea is conquered by a stronger and better idea. Truth will overcome falsehood if given a proper chance. Christianity is so much better than communism in every way that if we could but get it before the world in its genuiness and sincerity it would undermine the foundation of communism. If we gave a proper demonstration to the world of the power of Christianity we would not need to engage in terrible wars. We spend millions for war and its preparation; how much do we spend for the way of peace? We need to become trained and skilled in the use of atomic love.

The Christian Hope; Cause of Rejoicing

W. Harley King*

THEREFORE, since we are justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. Through him we have obtained access to this grace in which we stand, and we rejoice in our hope of sharing the glory of God" (Romans 5:1,2 R.S.V.).

"Rejoice in your hope, be patient in tribulation, be constant in prayer" (Romans 12:12 R.S.V.)

"Rejoice in your hope, be patient in tribulation, be constant in prayer" (Romans 12:12 R.S.V.)

W. Harley King

Hope has been defined as "the desire to receive some future good, accompanied by faith that it will be realized." When man loses faith in God, faith in his fellowman, faith in himself, then hope dies and despair sets in. Sad indeed is the lot of those whose earthly hopes have been shattered and who have no heavenly hope to sustain them. To be without God and without hope is the greatest tragedy of tragedies. The apostle visualizes a life without hope beyond the present by saying, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable" (I Cor. 15:19).

Lord Tennyson, in his poem "Despair," pictures life without faith in God and consequently without hope in the future, and on the verge of despair. Hw true it is, that many have lost faith and hope, and to whom life is purposeless. But such is not the outlook of the Christian, for the Christians outlook is the most HOPEFUL one, it is the upward look. The majority of men and women can never be satisfied with the hopeless creed of materialism, as some would have us believe. Many believers, though tried as by fire because of persecution, found comfort in the living hope based on faith in the living Word of God, causing them to rejoice in God's faithfulness.

Hope plays a very important part in saving faith. "For in this hope we were saved" (Rom. 8:24). Christian hope, which means everything to the believer, is the version of a goal or blessedness that lies ahead; faith is the confidence that we shall get there." We read that "Faith is a well grounded assurance of that for which we hope, and a conviction of the reality of things which we do NOT see" (Heb. 11:1; Weymouth.) Faith is the inward certainty that what we hope for has a real existence. Hope is directed to the future and awaits with cheerful and confident expectancy the future inheritance which is yet invisible; because it is hid with Christ within the veil. "Hope, that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?" (Rom. 8:24). The fulfillment of that which God has promised in Christ Jesus by His resurrection from the dead is the ground of faith in regard to that which is yet hope and not yet realized. Christ, in whom and through whom our best hopes will be realized, is unseen to mortal vision, but says the apostle, "though new we see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory" (I Peter 1:8).

WHY WE CAN REJOICE IN CHRISTIAN HOPE

We can rejoice in Christian hope because it is "both sure and steadfast" (Heb. 6:19). It is built on a solid foundation, and there is no possibility of disappointment, as with earthly hopes. It is based on God's unchangeable truth: on the grace, the blood, the righteousness and the intercession of Christ, who by His resurrection from the dead is by attestation the Divine Son of God. All our hopes are founded on God's eternal Word, and made possible for the believer through the merits of our Saviour.

FOUR REASONS WHY THE CHRISTIAN HOPE IS CAUSE FOR REJOICING

1 The Christian hope is called "the hope of salvation" (I Thess. 5:8). Salvation is a present experience and possession. The plan of salvation conceived by the eternal God was carried out, executed in the death of Christ on the cross, thus making atonement for sin. Christ Jesus arose from the dead and ascended to the Father on high—thus salvation has been wrought. Christ paid the debt of sin, provided forgiveness, cleansing, righteousness and justification. To make it available it must be believed, it must be received, or rather the Lord Jesus Christ must be received, we must place our trust for salvation in Him—"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved" (Acts 16:31). Then it has become a present experience and possession. We are reconciled to God through the blood of Christ (Col. 1:20-21). We have passed from death unto life (John 5:24) by faith in Christ. But salvation will not be fully realized until we are finally delivered from this body of death, and from the power of satan. The hope of salvation points beyond the present attainment to the day of deliverance from all sin and the power of satan. The hope of salvation is therefore cause for rejoicing and for every true believer one which he yearns for realization.

2 Inasmuch as the resurrection means our deliverance from death and participation in the glories of heaven, hope looks forward to the resurrection, the second reason for rejoicing. (I Thess. 4:16,17) In these verses we have the direct promise of the raising of the dead in Christ. In Acts 23:6 the Apostle states that he is on trial for the hope of the promise, having in mind the resurrection of the believer. Christ's resurrection is the ground for the believer's hope in a resurrection, a source of real joy. In I Peter 1:13 we read that "we have been begotten anew unto a living hope through the resurrection of Christ."

3 Another reason for rejoicing is because it is the hope of righteousness. "For through the Spirit of faith, we wait for the hope of righteousness" Gal. 5:5 R.S.V.). It is on a righteousness not

A. J. Neuenschwander,

WORKERS RETURN

IN recent weeks, two families that have served among our Mennonite brethren in South America have returned. They are Rev. and Mrs. Ernst Harder and Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Nickel. The Harders and their little daughter served under the M.C.C. in Asuncion for a period of two years and then remained in work in the same city for a year and a half under the direction of the Home Mission Board. During the first part of their stay in Paraguay they were kept very busy taking care of the large Volendam group. There was a revolution going on up country and hence the majority of the Volendam group had to be cared for in Asuncion.

As workers under the Board of Home Missions, the Harders served as spiritual leaders of the Mennonite group. Under their leadership this group was organized, and at Easter the three groups observed Holy Communion together. May the Lord bless this noble effort. At present the Harders are attending Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago, Illinois.

The J. W. Nickels with their two small daughters left this country July, 1948, to visit all Mennonites in South America and to serve for two years in Paraguay. Nickel's two main tasks were to organize and carry on Bible Schools for adults on a larger scale than had been the case before. This was done with much success in two Colonies, Friesland and Volendam.

The second part of their assignment had been to carry on Evangelistic work in the Colonies. This was done and many reports have come back of the blessing the Lord added to these efforts, particularly in Neuland and Volendam. As a result many confessed Christ as their personal Savior and were received into the brotherhood. The Church in Neuland was received into the General Conference at Freeman, South Dakota.

Peter Klassen of Brazil

Rev. Peter Klassen, Curitiba, Brazil, representative from South America to the General Conference, attended the Canadian Conference the first week in July and after that he visited Mennonite churches and told the story of efforts made in Brazil and Paraguay to establish homes and churches. Many were amazed at the excellent report Brother Klassen presented to the General Conference in English. Since the General Conference he is again visiting churches in Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. From October 13 to November 20 he will visit as many churches in the States as possible. His messages here will be in the English language where the German is not understood.

FRESH ARTICLES FROM OUR FIELDS

A schedule has been worked out for several months that Home Mission Section workers will bring fresh, heart-stirring and uplifting reports from their field of labor. These articles will represent every section of our field and the articles are to come in the German and English language. In this way the Home Mission Section hopes to arouse more interest in this phase of the Lord's work.

WORKERS FOR MISSION CONFERENCES AVAILABLE

The Home Mission Section offers to furnish workers from our fields to assist in Mission Conferences held in individual or a group of churches or at Conference sessions. Your prayer-interest is solicited in our many needy fields.

THE CHRISTIAN HOPE

our own, that we base our hope of salvation, even "the righteousness which is of God by faith" Phil. 3:9). In Rom. 5:19 we read "For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the righteousness of one shall many be made righteous." In Romans the fourth chapter we read that this righteousness in Christ was imputed unto Abraham, by faith. But not unto him alone, for we read in verse 24 "but for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead" (Rom. 4:24). What marvel of the ages that His righteousness should be credited to our account, unworthy as we are.

4 Fnally the expectant believer looks for the "appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ" (Titus 2:13 R.V.). In considering the matter of the resurrection of the believing we noticed that it is connected with the coming of the Lord. We find in careful reading of I Thess. 4:13-18 that His coming will be for the believing dead and the living, the realization of the hope in Christ. Christ, the object of our hope (I Tim. 1:1) is a dear and present possession and His dwelling is the surety of our hope of eternal life and glory (Col. 1:27). It was the hope in the promise of an "inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away," (I Pet. 1:4) which inspired the early Christian Church. May this hope send us forth with rejoicing, let us keep the lamp of hope burning brightly, may it be "a blessed hope" and with the Psalmist may we say, "I will hope continually, and will yet praise thee more and more" (Ps. 71:14).

Relief Shipments

During August the following relief shipments from Canada and the United States, valued at a total of $8,625.76, left port:

To Paraguay, 45 tons agricultural machinery and other tools; To Germany 51 tons flour; To Ethiopia: 1½ tons hospital and other supplies; To Austria 414 pounds school supplies.

Our virtues become dearer to us, the more we have to suffer for them.

Why and Whither

O. O. Miller *

HOW did the M.C.C. begin? During the summer of 1920 the four Mennonite delegates from Russia visited our U. S. and Canadian communities, telling of suffering and need in the Ukraine. All of the American groups were stirred and ready to send help. To the representative group who met at Elkhart, it seemed only reasonable that this be sent thru one cooperative channel. Since then there have been a series of such occurences.

The M.C.C. is still the American channel of liaisonship and help to Mennonite brotherhood groups anywhere else. Since then migration and resettlement help to our refugee and D.P. brethren has been an added assignment. Out of this experience the large measure of common faith and position, due to our common Anabaptist faith, has become increasingly evident to us all. So, too, have the reasonableness and efficiencies and larger witness of using this cooperative channel in a growing area of concern and burden in world mission. Giving War and Emergency Relief and other foreign services, following thru at home and abroad the implications of our historic and scriptural position on Peace, War and Nonresistance, spelling out thru Voluntary and Mental Health Services something of concern for needs in our own country and of gratitude for blessings from God and country, and the establishing of coordinated services in travel, student exchange, etc. to our several groups and agencies are included in the present pattern of assignment.

"In the Name of Christ" has for some years seemed to many to symbolize best the intent of this channel of service and witness. Discipleship to Him promotes the giving, sharing, and going of this supplemental but integral arm of the church's Commissioned Mission. This place and purpose for the Committee has become generally accepted among us and its services used and appreciated.

What is the future of the M.C.C.? We are probably no better able to forsee and predict than we would have been in the '20s'. However, it does seem clear that we will need and want to share with our immigrant and resettled brethren for many years ahead, and be big brother materially and spiritually and to stand by as real Christian brothers to the younger as well as older brotherhood groups everywhere. We have come to know also that emergency physical distress and need is not limited to war, time and place, but that cold wars, too, result in heartless cruelty and innocent suffering and in critical tension areas affecting masses and that if we belong in any such we have concern in all. We are rightly becoming sensitive, too, to maladjustments in our own national culture and society and this drives to sharing of blessing and faith in continuingly new and wider patterned ways in the homeland.

This area of common concern of the Committee's governing groups is likely to continue to widen and so can the use and service of this cooperating agency. Such a channel if of world wide outlook, concern and awareness, sensitive to the inner spiritual heartbeat of this Christian family group's concerns, organized for mobility, flexibility, efficiency and with all its parts committed as "slaves" to Christ and servants to each other and to all is bound to be fully used. We pray that those serving Him through it in the coming generations may find joy and fulness in their service as has been the testimony of many in the generation past.

Executive-secretary, M.C.C.

Church-going Families

YES, there are Church-going families. Perhaps not as many as there were forty or fifty years ago. But enough so that the results may be observed.

Worshipping together inevitably draws the members of the family closer. It produces a sense of equality between parents and their children. They bow their heads and worship the same God. They unite in one confession and together seek God's mercy and forgiveness. The law of God applies equally to father and son, to mother and daughter. Need of the Savior is common to them all.

Humbled but encouraged, comforted and reassured, and perhaps, above all, mellowed and sobered, the family returns home. There is a bit less of selfishness, a little more kindness, considerably more patience on the part of the parents, and the children seem to find it a trifle less irksome to practice the obedience which they know God expects of them. All this makes for a happier home and family life. It is also true that the families that go to church together are the ones that most often have family worship in the home. Thus, the worshipping family is twice blessed.

A PRAYER

LORD, MAKE ME A CHANNEL OF THY PEACE
That where there is hatred I may bring love,
That where there is wrong I may bring the spirit of forgiveness,
That where there is discord I may bring harmony,
That where there is error I may bring truth,
That where there is doubt I may bring faith,
That where there is despair I may bring hope,
That where there are shadows I may bring light,
That where there is sadness I may bring joy.

LORD, GRANT THAT I MAY SEEK RATHER
To comfort than to be comforted,
To nnderstand than to be uderstood,
To love than to be loved;

FOR
It is by giving that one receives,
It is by self-forgetting that one finds,
It is by dying that one awakens to eternal life.

"Mennonites Don't Want Help?"

D. C. Wedel*

MENNONITES don't want help," said a minister. "What do you do when people refuse to let you help them?" Three ministers discussed this question till the wee hours of the morning. I resolved then to write this article for THE MENNOITE.

D. C. Wedel

Pastoral calling has not yet come into its rightful place in the Mennonite Church. It is not new by any means but because the salaried ministry is a recent development it has not yet found its rightful place in the Mennonite Church. There have been hesitations both on the part of the minister and his congregation to venture out into this new area. I am convinced, however, that for both the congregation and the minister this phase can become as fruitful as preaching and listening to sermons. Pastoral calling and counseling requires keen insight and understanding and many of the complicated personality problems should not be accepted by the minister. He is not trained sufficiently in the area of psychiatry to deal with some of these problems. On the other hand, he is trained to administer at least a dozen different calls. No one in any parish should hesitate to call the minister to make any one of these.

There is first of all the emergency call. Every pastor is prepared to hear the telephone ring at any hour of the night or day asking his help. I remember distinctly the first night call made in response to a request from a stranger in the hospital. Anxiety had taken possession of this patient and she "wanted a minister." The assurance of "the Lord is my Shepherd" relaxed the tensions and she dismissed me with saying she had just "wanted a minister." Every pastor is prepared to answer when someone calls and says, "we need you."

Every pastor is also prepared to make bereavement calls. Death is a part of the experience of life and the pastor is ready to counsel and comfort. He gives testimony to the truth that the spiritual realities cannot be destroyed even by death. Usually the funeral involves several visits in preparation for the service. Each visit furnishes an opportunity to help the family adjust to the new circumstances.

Hospital calls rate a high priority. The loneliness and strangeness of the hospital make a very significant ministry possible. In almost every illness the hospital patient has plenty of time to think and will welcome the spiritual ministry of the minister. This is especially true where he is far away from his loved ones. The average pastor is ready to work with the doctor, often in very close cooperation, laying the spiritual basis for healing.

Not only hospitalized patients need a pastoral ministry but also those who are ill in their homes. The pastor is also prepared to make sick calls in the home. In every case of illness the breakdown of normal routine calls for a ministry to special needs. Most ministers have seen almost miraculous changes in a patient's health due to prayer and what he firmly believes is the power of the Holy Spirit.

The minister is prepared to call on those who are shut in. Perhaps few look forward to the minister's visit as much as these people. They may be physically handicapped or weakened but they are usually hungry for a little interest and affection. The minister is prepared to help these people accept their lot and to help them find spiritual resources so that they may meet life with courage. He may also find a rare opportunity to help prepare the older members of the congregation for eternal life.

The problem call should probably be mentioned next. People have a wide variety of problems which usually demand immediate attention. Perhaps a young couple faces bankruptcy or someone has made a grave error in moral judgment and is faced with serious consquences. "Please help us; we are in serious trouble," is a familiar request to a hardworking minister. It is hardly necessary to point out that all confidential matters are kept sacred by the minister. He is one person who does not talk or gossip.

The pastor also makes organizational calls. He is head of a complex organization in most parishes. He is not only a preacher and pastor but promotes the organization of his church. He is ex-officio member of every committee. He must promote the current and benevolent funds. He must check on all the activities which are a part of his church program. Repeatedly he will need to make calls to the same homes of those who are leaders in the various activities of the church.

There is the promotional call. New people are continually moving into the community. Members of the congregation can be of great service here by not only informing the minister of the arrival of these people but also by visiting them and writing them to share in the blessings of the church. Here one would also place the call made on those who never confessed Christ and who become the object of personal work. This would include also work with the "backsliders."

The pastor is ready to make educational calls. He must often educate the parents. They may feel that Sunday is a picnic day when children can be brought to Sunday School or kept away, which-

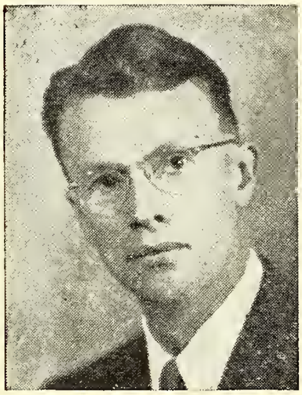
AND I BROUGHT YOUR FATHERS OUT OF EGYPT Joshua 24:6

A very effective means of instruction as used in Old Testament times lay in the constant reminder of Israel's rich heritage. Time and time again did the leaders as well as the great prophets refer to the experiences of their fathers. The covenant relationship with God as revealed by the Holy Scriptures served as a constant reminder of the high calling which was theirs. "And I brought your fathers out of Egypt," these were the words which Joshua emphasized in his parting message.



Arnold J. Regier

Our Mennonite heritage of the past four hundred years has much in common with that of Israel. God also has led our people through seas of persecution, wilderness of hardships and privation, yes, and by his goodness has graciously brought us into lands of milk and honey. Oftimes when we were blessed we did not remain true to God's calling and were in need of chastisement. As we look into the History of the Mennonites we become more and more conscious of the fact that God has had a hand in it all and that we too can see with Joshua, how that God brought your fathers out of Egypt.

Though we as a younger generation do not want to be critical of that heritage which is ours we do feel that we can learn much from the history and development of our church. We need to be alert in order that we might sense what God has in mind for us and that we see how our witness of the salvation in Christ might be given most effectively.

OUR HERITAGE OF FAITH

We are grateful to our fathers for a heritage of a simple faith. It is based on a literal interpretation of the Scriptures. When Jesus said that we are not to swear an oath, nor hate our enemy we are taught to accept these injunctions as a final authority. Our Mennonite faith is not circumscribed with many long manmade precepts. It is a simple acceptance of the Word of God in word and deed.

Our Mennonite faith is centered in the Person Jesus Christ. It is not church-centered. Each individual believer is encouraged to make his own decision for Christ. During the Reformation period when both the Catholic and the Protestant groups made such stringent demands of loyalty to the church we can appreciate the vision which our forebearers had in setting forth this cardinal principle of a personal faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. A study of our Mennonite history helps us to gain a fuller appreciation for this heritage of freedom.

OUR CULTURAL HERITAGE

Our more conservative brethren often do not make the distinction between the spiritual and cultural phases of life as we do. There is not that emphasis upon the segregation between the sacred and the secular as so often happens in our own thinking. Most of the customs of these brethren are governed by historic traditions and regulated by the church leaders in accordance to their interpretation of the Scriptures. It is possible that we, too, are beginning to raise questions as to whether we do not put too much emphasis on the distinction between the two.

It is, however, through the influence of our schools of higher learning that we have become aware of our cultural heritage (or heritages). It is not as unified as our heritage of faith. We have had to learn to understand the customs of fellow-church members who have come from different backgrounds and to appreciate their ways of life and thinking in order that we might work together more harmoniously. However, we have learned to esteem this heritage highly and believe that it is of great significance to us in our Christian life.

It is of a great concern to the writer that we learn to associate the cultural development among our people in America more closely to the heritage of faith. By this he would not say that we need to literally return to the ways of our fathers, but that we ask ourselves with further study and contemplation as to whether our daily lives express that which we profess with our mouths. Does it show the simplicity of our faith? Is it a witness to a Christ-centered life? One might raise other questions which would challenge us to greater consecration of life and resources.

A study of our Mennonite heritage need not be merely a reflection upon the past. In order that it be vital it must have a message for the present and the future. If we believe that God has raised our people for a purpose then we must seek to find it for our day. In an age when materialism, worldliness and militarism have such a strong hold upon people we can truly see that a Christian witness with the force of such a spiritual and cultural heritage behind it may be of great significance for our day. The great challenge before us is that we may see the opportunity for an effective testimony of God's redeeming love, power, and righteousness and that we see with Joshua's eyes of faith, "And I brought your fathers out of Egypt."

M C C News Notes

Study Korean Relief

The MCC has been represented in a number of meetings in New York and Washington, in which voluntary relief agencies have explored the possibility of relief work in Korea. It is certain that serious relief needs exist now in Korea, and will continue for some time, in view of the recent military operations, and the resultant destruction and displacement of refugees.

At present the emergency relief work is under the direction of the Unified High Command and the United Nations. Any relief effort by private agencies would consist only in providing materials which would be turned over to the government program, for distribution in coordination with the military occupation. The MCC, along with a number of other church agencies, follows the policy of undertaking relief only when the material can be followed by personal representation to the point of distribution to the needy people, in order that a spiritual witness is more clearly made. The MCC is keeping in touch with the efforts that are being made in finding a channel for relief in Korea on a basis that would be acceptable to the church agencies.

Medical Help Where Needed

The Mennonite Mobile Clinic Unit in Formosa recently reported a striking compilation of information regarding child mortality in one of the villages. Of 25 mothers who came to the clinic and were interviewed, the average number of children born to each was 6.6, while the average surviving was 2.9, or less than half. Lack of nourishment, medical care and sanitation are some of the reasons, although another reason that might be given is that those able to help alleviate these conditions have been slow in bringing such help.

Kings View Homes

Progress continues to be made in the building at Kings View Homes, the MCC Mental Hospital at Reedley, California, although the expected date of completion has been postponed for several months, probably till mid-January. Nearly all of the carpentry and exterior work is completed. The rate at which funds are made available will largely determine the time when the interior finishing of walls, plumbing, electrical installations, etc., can be completed and ready for use. Many of the furnishings for the hospital are provided for by specially designated gifts from women's groups of the West Coast congregatons, although some remain to be secured, particularly kitchen and laundry equipment.

CO Naturalization Recognized

The McCarran Bill, which was recently passed by Congress over the President's veto, in its orignal form contained provision that all applicants for naturalization would need to take oath of willingness to bear arms or serve in noncambatant capacity in the Armed Forces. Senator McCarran's office, and also the Senate Judiciary Committee were contacted by MCC and other representatives, pointing out the position of religious objectors to combatant and noncombatant service. As a result, provision was written into the bill, making it possible for bona fide religious objectors to make an alternate statement identical with that in the oath which had been used heretofore. In this the applicant promises to "support and defend the Constitution" a term which the Supreme Court has interpreted as not necessarily meaning military service. The officials contacted were cordial, and seemed willing to make ample provision for sincere religious conscientious objectors.

MCC Peace Conference to be Held

A Peace Conference to be attended by delegates from each of the MCC constituent groups is to be held on November 9 to 12, for the purpose of studying the nonresistant doctrine and its implications in this day. Specific subjects include "Nonresistance and the Gospel," "Nonresistance and the Social Order," "What about the Noncombatant Position," and "Nonresistance and Communism." To provide basis for consideration, a number of study papers on the above and other subjects are being written and circulated among the delegates in advance of the conference.

ever is convenient. James may want to enter the ministry but his parents object because he will not make any money in this profession. Jones insists that he will not attend church as long as Smith is superintendent of the Sunday School. Always there are areas in which the views of people need to be broadened or modified.

There is the sympathy call. I am sure that this designation is not entirely correct. This kind of call is made with the purpose of pouring oil on troubled waters. There is no church where someone does not feel neglected or has his feelings hurt, sooner or later. A significant contrbution has been made, a special talent dedicated, a good deed done publicly, yet no one has recognized it and someone is hurt. Misunderstanding may arise or thoughtless remarks may be dropped and people refuse to attend any longer. Increasingly this call must be made.

There is the call when the minister cultivates the individual. Perhaps the individual has always kept the minister at a distance because he is not acquainted with him. A young parishioner may be involved in a dangerous romance; how can the minister be heard? He must know his people and cultivate their confidence.

There is the purely social call. The minister needs fellowship. It would be well if occasionally the parishioner would stop for a short visit at the parsonage. The minister may visit a home with no other motive than to enjoy the atmosphere of that home and to find refreshment in fellowship.

Last but not least there is the call made with the specific purpose of recruiting workers for Christ and His Kingdom. No minister has fulfilled his mission in a parish without making this type of call. Parishioners should expect it and lend their assistance if possible. It is the fruit of this type of call which perpetuates and extends God's Kingdom.

The pastor's call may be a combination of a number of these types. You can make the call of the pastor easier and more fruitful if you will let him know your needs and grant him an opportunity to help you.

Our Colleges and Seminary

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Academy Dramatics

INTEREST in dramatics is keen with 34 students signed for participation in a production October 12 and 13. Because of limited time three one-act plays will be given instead of the customary three act plays. Those chosen are "The Bishops Candlesticks," a religious play; the trial scene from "Merchant of Venice" by Shakespeare, and "Rory Aforesaid," a humorous character sketch set in colorful Scotch locale.

Corporation Meeting

The Freeman Junior College Corporation met Friday, September 22, in the College Chapel. Missionary John Thiessen brought a timely message entitled "Healthy Thinking" and showed that as the body and soul must be kept healthy so also with the mind. The chief concern in healthy thinking, Thiessen showed, was to "constantly think Christ's thoughts after him."

New faculty members were introduced by President Miller and responded briefly. In the business meeting I. P. Tieszen, Jake T. Gross and Christ Preheim were elected to three year terms on the Board of Trustees. The president's report and the financial report were received favorably. It was pointed out, however, that Pioneer Hall still has a $7,000 debt and needs considerable work to be completed.

On the recommendation of Yankton College, 400 volumes from the estate of Reverend Waite of Marietta, Minnesota, were donated to the library. The late Mr. Waite was the congregational minister of Marietta and had a good library, largely of books in History, Theology and English Classics. Carl Miller and Russel Mast went for the books in Carl Miller's truck.

Mrs. N. W. Mongrain, also of Marietta and a close friend of Mr. Waite, added a six volume set of religious history books to the gift.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

SUNDAY evening, September 24, James Reusser and Maurice Kaufman discussed their summer service work experiences for College Church. On the following Sunday evening the Bauman sisters, daughters of Drs. Harvey and Ella Bauman, discussed India. College church meets each Sunday evening at an hour sufficiently early so that students are still free to attend worship services in the churches.

Faculty prayer services are held each Monday before classes, at 7:45 in the morning. Someone reads a scripture and directs the thought in a few minutes of presentation, then the group joins in a season of prayer.

Monday evening, October 2, the Faculty Club joined in a potluck supper, after which the spiritual life of the students was discussed. In order to serve the students spiritually it is necessary to know something of their present spiritual life. In the meeting an attempt was made to evaluate this spiritual life so that faculty members might render better service to students.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

THE major event of this week took place Wednesday evening when the entire Seminary Fellowship voted unanimously to establish a regular church here at this place beginning with the opening service, Sunday, October 8. This step climaxed a series of discussions starting last year when it appeared that a regular church organization was an important next step in the life of our Fellowship.

From the very beginning of the school, the late Dr. A. Warkentin started a weekly prayer meeting. The next step was a Sunday school organization followed by a Daily Vacation Bible School program in the summer and various other activities. Finally, the Fellowship has taken this important last step to arrange for an established congregation. A temporary church council is serving, composed of the Religious Life Committee, Officers of the Sunday school, the President of the Seminary and two individuals from potential members outside of these categories. A temporary pastor will be secured from some individual already in our group.

The Seminary Women's Fellowship had its opening meeting Friday, September 22, with a message from Frances Funk who worked as a Welfare Worker in Chicago last year, and this year is enrolled in the Seminary with her husband Melvin Funk.

We are glad to welcome Lorraine Galle, Wichita, Kansas, as our new dietitian, who graduated from Bethel College, North Newton, Kansas, last year.

Leo Miller, Freeman, South Dakota, addressed the Ogden Park Methodist Church Thursday evening, on the subject, "The Church and Peace."

President S. F. Pannabecker has announced that forty-three students have now enrolled of whom 36 are full time and 7 part time. This is the largest enrollment in the history of this school.

Visiting lecturer this quarter is Dr. N. E. Byers, formerly President of Goshen College, and Dean of Bluffton College. Chicago is familiar territory for him since he took his college work at North Western University fifty years ago and at that time was the first Mennonite to graduate from an American college. His course is in the Philosophy of Religion and the students are enjoying his work.

Jottings

WESTERN DISTRICT

—Alexanderwhol Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: We again were able to do our part to help in making the gift day for the Bethesda Hospital and the Old Peoples Home a success. The Lord blessed us with a beautiful day, so many attended. The gift offering amounted to $1700.—Mrs. J. C. Reimer, Corr.

—First Church, Pretty Prairie, Kansas: Boyd Bonebrake, ministerial student at Bethel College, brought the morning message September 17 in the absence of our pastor, Howard Nyce, who was preaching at the farewell services for the Harold Ratzlaff's, missionaries to India, in Meno, Oklahoma. The Ratzlaff's sailed from New York September 25.—Ralph Krehbiel,— Corr —Zodar Church, Goltry, Oklahoma: A number of conversions took place during our revival campaign in August, conducted by Rev. Gomez and the Sam Beckers. Many also dedicated their lives to the Lord. After some special instruction, nine were baptized September 24. Ages range from 14 to 61 years of age. September 17 ordination and farewell services were held for Miss Ethel Marie Jantz, a member of this church, who is sailing for New York October 4, for a year of language study in Switzerland and then Africa. Our church has undertaken her support. Guest speaker for the occasion was J. J. Gerbrandt, superintendent of the Oklahoma Bible Academy.—Corr.

—Burton Church, Burton, Kansas: Mrs. Ray Henry and Mrs. Emil Dalke took food donations to the Bethel Deaconess Hospital on gift day, September 8. The Ladies Missionary Society has decided to have a project for each month, this months' project being sewing aprons. Our minister, Ray Henry, is attending the Central Baptist Seminary at Kansas City, Kansas. The Ladies Missionary Society presented a program September 21.—Corr

—Eden Church, Moundridge, Kansas: Our new pastor, Peter Dyck, with his wife and daughter arrived here August 10. August 15 the annual Sunday School picnic and reception was held in their honor. At this reception he was honored with the appointment as Knight in the order of the Orange Nassau by Queen Juliana of the Netherlands. He was presented a medal for his outstanding relief work in the Netherlands. Abe Cummings, missionary to India, brought the message to our congregation August 27, while our pastor was attending General Conference.—Edwin R. Stucky, Corr.

—Lorraine Avenue Church, Wichita, Kansas: September 2 Miss Lois Eichelberger, daughter of J. V. Eichelberger of Shickley, Nebraska, and J. Stanley Regier, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Regier, Hillsboro, Kansas, were united in marriage. J. M. Regier performed the double ring ceremony assisted by G. S. Stoneback, who gave a brief sermonette on the significance of marriage. Following a reception at the home of the bride's sister, Miss Grace Eichelberger, the couple left for a wedding trip to the Lake of the Ozarks. They are now at home at 2004 S. Hydraulic, Wichita.—Corr.

CENTRAL DISTRICT

—Wayland Church, Wayland, Iowa: Sunday evening, September 10, a capacity audience enjoyed a program of organ music at which time our new "Connsonata" Electric organ was formally dedicated. The delegates to the General Conference gave reports September 17 in the form of a panel discussion. Sunday, October 1, we observed Rally Day and Communion. October 1 and 8 we have a series of meetings in which Edmund J. Miller of Freeman, South Dakota, is the guest speaker.—Anna E. Mullett, Corr.

EASTERN DISTRICT

—Zion Church, Souderton, Pennsylvania: Recently 122 good-will Christmas bundles were prepared and taken to M.C.C. Headquarters at Akron. Cash contributions for this project totaled $1,026.32. In addition some items were donated. Many individuals, families and Sunday Church School classes made this their project, thereby helping to make this the fifth consecutive year in which our church has contributed 100 or more bundles through the M.C.C. to needy overseas.—Corr.

—Grace Church, Lansdale, Pennsylvania: A son, Lowell Mark, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Reiff August 26. Mary E. Gallagher and Kenneth Bauman were married September 9, with J. J. Plenert officiating. The newly elected C. E. officers are Nancy Seashaltz, pres.; Lois Stuhle, v. pres.; Jeanette Bishop, sec.; Wilbur Reiff, treas. We are happy to have our pastor and wife back after a months vacation. Our conference delegates each gave a report of the General Conference at the morning servce September 17. Lean Detwiler spoke on the Conference setting, Mrs. L. Detwiler on the Constitution, Jacob R. Fretz on the Spiritual and Devotional life, Mrs. J. J. Plenert on Evangelism and J. J. Plenert on Missions.

PACIFIC DISTRICT

—Immanuel Church, Los Angeles, Cal. A number of the young people attended the Y. P. Retreat at Lake Sequoia, August 12-18. A blessed time was enjoyed by all who attended and the Lord became more precious to all. Hospitalized: Miss Arvilla Geiger, our church worker, has been transferred to the Good Samaritan Hospital, Los Angeles. She is improving and her condition is satisfactory. Wayne Linscheid has greatly improved. He has been transferred to the Mission Hospital in Huntington Park. Mr. Linscheid has returned to his home. Dorothy Schroeder is enjoying a period of rest and will soon be in our midst again. They need our continued prayer.

NORTHERN DISTRICT

—Bethesda Church, Henderson, Nebraska: Our Pastor, Arnold Nickel, has left for nine months to attend Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago. Taking his place is John Thiessen, former missionary in India. An informal reception was given the Thiessens September 3. Reports of the General Conference were given during this afternoon's program. The C. E. Society met in the park September 3. As a part of the program the film, "Woman To Remember" was shown. The Sunday School picnic for the children was held August 17. Two-hundred twenty-seven Christmas bundles were packed for relief.—Mrs. Maurice Janzen, Corr.

A Vision for Voluntary Service

WITHOUT a vision the human personality perishes. It suffocates when the oxygen of unlimited possibility cannot properly react. Why should we be stifled by self-imposed restrictions in our lives. Let us dream of the possibilities, set our goals high and strive with all our energy to attain those goals.

Voluntary service is a way of life—a philosophy of living. This concrete expression of one's Christian convictions by giving a year of one's life is only a very small indication of the total implication of this philosophy. The year of service is a vital factor in the decision of the volunteer to give his life in its entirety and this way of living. The following is only a glimpse into the vision of what lies ahead for the V. S. prgram in our churches.

1 Individual spiritual development is the program's greatest possibility. This is the supreme goal of Voluntary Service, for here motivation is purified, vision clarified, goals crystalized, values solidified, and the whole of life made Christ-like.

2 Voluntary Service offers in-service training in the school of living. Your vocation in life, whether full time work within the organized framework of the church or in any phase of humanitarian service, will help to be more constructive when preceded by this V. S. experience.

3 Since the vision has not yet become real in our home churches and communities, the program is a conscience for the church at large. This experience made meaningful in our home communities and throughout our lives is a supreme test. The possibilities of a church operating upon this philosophy is the vision of voluntary service.

4 The goal of the program is nothing less than that of every church member participating as an active volunteer. All our young people will have the experience of giving a certain period of their life voluntarily "in the Name of Christ." This is the positive aspect of the most basic Christian principle—the love of Christ expressed by outgoing service. Other dreams are also a part of the vision. Let's be alive and vibrant, not perishing for lack of vision.

Bible School in Gulfport

ORIENTATION

OUR time spent during orientation week was very valuable as it prepared us for our work in the weeks to come. Reverend and Mrs. J E. Entz of Newton, Kansas, spent the week with us and their presence added much to our fellowship

Activities began with a get-acquainted social on Monday evening in the social room, where we became partially acquainted with the unit members while playing games and enjoying refreshments

Rev. Entz led us in our devotions each morning from Tuesday through Friday. Our prayer meeting too was led by Bro. Entz. Our hearts were uplifted by the kind and understanding way in which he presented his thoughts.

We attended four workshop periods, which were of value to us in our preparation for the summer's work. Mrs. Entz was in charge of the workshop and her thoughts and ideas were very practical. Her own experiences in working with children were a challenge to us. We learned new and good teaching methods and also much good Christian child psychology.

On Tuesday evening we were introduced to several families included on the visitation list. This in itself presented a great challenge to us.

Mr. Ramage, an experienced man in recreation for children, came to camp and presented to our group some very good ideas and suggestions for recreation and community work. He gave us a sound philosophy of that phase of one's life and provided a good background and foundation for those working on community projects.

On Wednesday we made a tour of the community and became acquainted with the territory and the people among whom we would be working during the summer. Our assignments were given to us on Thursday, and in the afternoon we began our solicitation for Bible School and community projects.

We enjoyed a get-acquainted social with the Wayside and Gulfhaven people on Friday evening at the picnic grounds behind the camp laundry. We became familiar with most of the faces and even remembered some of their names.

An impressive Consecration Service was held Saturday evening in the social room. This was one of the high lights of the entire week. Orlo directed our thinking to the great value and necessity of wholly consecrating and dedicating all of self to the Lord and thus being of service to Him and to our fellowmen.

All activities and services of the week were indeed very enriching and inspiring, and we all profited by them. —Evelyn

NORTH GULFPORT

These first two weeks finds us busy conducting Bible School at the North Gulfport school house and cafeteria. Good interest is being shown and our total enrollment reached nearly 200. However, the 4th of July, with its all-time low of 48 present, has brought our average attendance down somewhat. Several funerals in the community have also had an effect on our attendance. The Kindergarten class, composed of 50—60 youngsters, is being taught by Evelyn Schrock and Mrs. Carrick, the first grade teacher at North Gulfport. The other teachers helping with this Bible School are Ruth Anna Mast, first grade, Lydie Nussbaumer, second grade, Erma Keim, third grade, Mrs. Dunn (principal at the North Gulfport school), fourth grade, and Laura Metzler and Neale Sider, fifth and sixth grades. The upper classes are being taught by Richard Yoder. For most of the teachers it is their first experience working with colored children and we are finding it very interesting.

MOUNT CALVARY

Bible School is being held at Mt. Calvary, a colored community, from June 26 to July 7. The attendance is good, ranging from babies-in-arms to married folk. The group is divided into four classes, with Ruby Lee, a colored girl, in charge of kindergarten, Lillie Goering, first grade, Wilma Swartzendruber, fourth and fifth grades, and Lorne Ruegg, sixth grade and up. We meet many interesting experiences in environments such as we find ourselves in at Mt. Calvary. It is not too unusual to see cows parked in front of the glassless windows. There might not be any sleigh bells around here, but no one can dispute the fact that cow bells are plentiful and they jingle, too. Little Ezekiel, after having seen a rainbow in the sky one morning, said to his teacher, "Did y'all see God's precious promise in de sky dis mawning?" A little first grade girl, when asked by her teacher what gifts the wisemen brought to Jesus, said "Gold, frankenstein, and myrrh." A very friendly spirit prevails in the community, and we feel that it is indeed a privilege to carry on this work there. We trust that the seeds sown will blossom forth into Christian lives. —Lillie and Lorene

TURKEY CREEK

A little white church set back from the road midst beautiful green trees was the scene of two weeks at Turkey Creek Bible School. What a profitable two weeks they were! The negro children were eager and attentive. Four classes were held in the church auditorium and one, the senior class, outside under a big tree. The first week the senior class came in at least once a day because of rain. One morning as we came to Bible School in a dreadful downpour we found about a dozen little black faces peering from under the small senior class table trying to keep dry. It made an unforgetable picture. There were 87 children enrolled in the school with an average attendance of 75. A holiday and a picnic interrupted the classes somewhat. There was a good group of parents at the closing program, which we appreciated. The children took their parts well and sang some of their own characteristic negro songs. Pray that God's Word may bear fruit in the hearts of those dear children.

—Helen

MOUNT BETHEL

OUR Bible Schol at Mount Bethel was a very fruitful and satisfying two weeks with negro children. Rev. T. B. Brown opened his Baptist church again for our use and we crowded it considerably. It was necessary to use two neighboring porches and a shady spot under a tree to accomodate all the children. There were 161 enrolled, with an average attendance of 109. Two of the teachers, the co-principal, and five of the helpers were colored. The remainder of the staff, six in all, were from Camp Landon. The closing program proved to us that our efforts were not without results, as the children repeated their verses and songs. Perhaps a highlight of the program was the rendition by the whole group of the song "Happy in the love of Jesus." With broad smiles and with teeth gleaming they sang from the heart, and the result was thrilling. May the message remain with them always is our prayer. —Helen

PINE GROVE

CLOUDS in the sky overhead. . .little children singing and reciting the 121st Psalm, while seated on blankets spread on the ground. . . raindrops slowly falling. . .teachers looking at each other with questioning eyes. . .raindrops less frequent. . .children filing to their classes around tables under the trees. . .and suddenly showers, showers which at the time definitely did not seem like showers of blessing. The picture changes to little children running in different directions to the three houses designated for such occasions, each clutching their precious workbook under his arm, a Bible, colors and other things in his other hand. Yes, the rain did spoil our plans that first week of Bible School at Hamiltons when we continually had to meet in the Hamilton, Lindsay, and Wimpee houses, but it couldn't spoil the spirit of this little Bible School. 27 children met daily to learn about God. The final program given on Friday morning was attended by almost all the mothers and sisters. Several mothers, (one a Catholic) whose boys attended each day by bus, came from another section of town. What an interesting group of children, and what an inspiration to hear Pat tell of her concern for her parents who drink, or Bertha's promise to go with Pat to her church the following Sunday. —Laura

BIBLE SCHOOL

BIBLE School was conducted at Saucier from July 10 to July 21. The total enrollment was 29, the record attendance 27, and the average attendance 24. The group was divided into three classes, two of which were held in the schoolhouse and one in the cafeteria. Helen Snyder taught the kindergarten group; Irene Hertzler, third grade; and Lillie Goering, fifth grade. The interest among pupils, parents, and others was encouraging. Several mornings when drenching rains fell, we expected very few pupils in school since many walked several miles; but as we approached the schoolhouse, we could see a number of black faces peeping out of the doors and windows. The last morning we had a short program at which occasion punch and cookies were served. A number of parents and friends attended and expressed a word of appreciation for the work done there. A mother said when speaking of race relationships, "There won't be any separation in heaven, we know, so why can't we get together here below?" —Lillie

CLOSING NIGHT

Those people sitting so dejectedly for an hour on the steps of the Lyman colored Baptist Church last Wednesday evening weren't jilted at the altar. They were merely Camp Landoners waiting for someone to show up at the Bible School program which officially closed the Bible School held there from July 10 to July 21. Of course we realized that 7 p.m. probably would mean 8 p.m. or later (and it did), but what were we to do—go when the program was scheduled to start or when we thought they'd come? The wait was really worthwhile even though the church didn't quiver and quake quite so much as we had expected it to when the class of older boys sang their earth-shaking spirituals. In addition to the contribution of the two classes taught by Eunice and Laura, an adult class furnished part of the program in the form of music and answering of questions asked by their teacher, the pastor of the Baptist Church. Everything went quite smoothly until a late hour when the gentlemen who was supposed to be closing the program with a few "remarks," announced what the subject of his talk would be. We teachers thought we had fooled everyone with our placid expressions, but some kind soul must have detected a faint look of dismay; or else why would he have so quickly handed over a good fan, which served as well as smelling salts could have? The remarks really were quite good, however, and were followed by an offering during which time the people marched to and fro in search of more money while "two verses" of song were being sung—not to mention the number of times it was necessary to repeat the chorus. We surprised ourselves by the way we could join them in singing "God be With You." Herb, in fact, got in just lots of extra notes and sounded as though he was having a wonderful time doing it. The climax of the evening, at least to the children, came when we were served ice cream and delicious punch by our colored friends. It really was an enjoyable evening, and it was typical of the pleasant two weeks spent at the Lyman Bible School, working with the children and some of the adults there. The school was very small, with an average attendance of only 19, but the enthusiasm of the group made up for numbers.

Bible Schools Among the Hopi Indians

"RED and yellow, black and white, all are precious in His sight; Jesus loves the little children of the world."

These words can be heard very often when we sing choruses in our Vacation Bible School with these precious Hopi Indian children. And how true it is! The Lord Jesus came to this world to die for all!

It has been my glorious privilege for four weeks to tell this wonderful news to these dear Hopi children. For two weeks we (that is, John Wiens and I) taught in the little villages at Moencopi near Tuba City where we stayed with Rev. and Mrs. Henry A. Kliewer, who are the missionaries at this station. Our total enrollment here was eighty-four. After two weeks we were taken to Oraibi, where we taught another two weeks, working with Miss Anna Baerg, one of the missionaries at this station, and Rev. and Mrs. Albert Jantzen, former missionaries to China. The Jantzens were taking the place of Rev. and Mrs. Leonard Wiebe while they were out on their vacation. The total enrollment here was eighty, with an average attendance of fifty-seven. These four weeks are life experiences I am not very likely to forget since they have meant so much to me.

The work among the Hopi children is very interesting, and a work filled with many blessings. It is a special joy to know that we are in the Lord's will, for then only will He bless the work, which He has done so richly in the past.

The Hopi boy or girl will at first seem very shy, and seemingly you will not seem to get anything out of him, but once he gets to know you, you will change your mind about him. He is indeed a very lively and talkative child; and more than that, they are exceptionally affectionate and loving children if you win their confidence.

The Hopis are a very progressive people, and therefore also seem to have intelligent children which maks it pleasant to work with them. But sad to say, the parents bring up their children in superstition and fear, and therefore the children have a very hard time if they want to accept the Lord Jesus as their own personal Saviour, because they have to suffer persecution. However, thank God, there are those who really stand up for Jesus. I am at this time reminded of decision time in my Bible School class at Oraibi. Having been studying the 23rd Psalm, I asked them who wanted the Lord Jesus as their Good Shepherd to follow Him. The result was that about 75-80 percent of the class raised their hands. Truly, the Lord has done wondrous things out here. Therefore let us pray that the Lord will also work mightily in the future, and will bring many souls that are dead in sins, to come to the knowledge of Jesus Christ as the only Saviour from sin. Let us pray also especially for the older folk, that the Lord may work mightily in their hearts, so that the parents may lead their children, and then it will be so much easier for the children, to stay true. So, let us keep on praying; for we know that this work has to be carried on the hands of prayer, in order to prosper. —Henry Wall

I Could Call the Police

I COULD call the police and have them go after him," the admission clerk told me, "but I don't think they are equipped to do a proper job. This takes understanding and a right attitude—you as a psychiatric aide can handle this situation better than can a police officer."

The young ninteen-year-old patient has returned to his Topeka home after eloping several weeks previous. His fear of returning to the hospital led him to resort to the use of a large knife as a threat to anyone who would attempt to return him to the hospital.

The locked cellar door was opened and we went into the dark basement not knowing what to expect. Were we really the persons equipped to handle this job? Why had we been told that even though this ordinarily was a job for trained law enforcement officers with protective firearms, we as hospital aides were best qualified to do it? What should we do if our patient would attack the two of us with his long knife, while we stood in the inky blackness of the cellar?

After several minutes of talking with our patient, he willingly acompanied us back to the hospital. Without violence or force, without making the patient completely disturbed and resistive we accomplished our mission. We were sure our admission clerk had a valuable insight into the way of dealing with people—sick or well.

In His Step---What it Means

SERVANTS, be submissive to your masters with all respect, not only to the kind and gentle but also to the overbearing. For one is approved if, mindful of God, he endures pain while suffering unjustly. For what credit is it, if when you do wrong and are beaten for it you take it patiently? But if when you do right and suffer for it you take it patiently, you have God's approval. For to this you have been called, because Christ also suffered for you, leaving you an example, that you should follow in his steps. He committed no sin; no guile was found on his lips. When he was reviled, he did not revile in return; when he suffered he did not threaten; but he trusted to him who judges justly. He himself bore our sins in his body on the tree, that we might die to sin and live to righteousness. By his wounds you have been healed. For you were straying like sheep, but have now returned to the Shepherd and Guardian of your souls." I Peter 2:18 to 25, using the Revised Standard Version.

It is from this passage that Charles M. Sheldon selected the theme for his book, "In His Steps!" In meeting the different situations in life he leaves with us the thought, "What Would Jesus Do?" What would Jesus do today, or rather what would he have us do as we face life in this world of defeat and terror?

We are all aware of the aches and pains in the world today. As we see the hatred, the greed, the jealousy among individuals as well as among nations, races, and creeds; what are we contributing? What have we to offer to bring peace in the midst of turmoil?

It is true that Christ is the answer to these problems and that there is no peace without the Prince of Peace. But who is going to show him to the world? The world needs someone to present Christ in a more positive way. We all have our moral code from our Christian teachings which tell us to refrain from certain things because they are harmful or unclean. However, these appear to be negative in the eyes of the world. It is positive deeds with the love of Christ that will soften the hardened hearts of men. Who is left to serve Christ if Christians fail to volunteer? "For to this you have been called, because Christ suffered for you, leaving you an example, that you should follow in his steps."

—Warren Fuller

Beyond Our Own

Russia is renewing efforts to crush out Christianity. Their former League of Militant Godless was abandoned in 1941 to boost wartime morals. Now, however, we have the Soviet Society for Political and Scientific Research which announces a vigorous campaign against the "medieval Christian outlook." This drive is to be conducted on a scientific basis; there will be much propaganda, anti-religious films shown and millions of pamphlets. The chairman states as his aim "the struggle against the Gospel and Christianity legend must be conducted ruthlessly and with all the means at the disposal of Communism." But Christianity does not die easily, even in Russia.

The churches have been called on to observe October 22 as World Order Day. "Viewed from the perspective of God's purpose for the world all nations in some measure are found wanting. It is not for our people, nor for any people, to climb into the seat of the scornful. All nations stand in need of God's redemption."

Please enclose this label when writing.

During September the radio "Catholic Hour" presented a series of programs on Communism, tracing its growth and showing the solution. The titles of the addresses were "Spectre over Europe," "The Giant is Harnessed," "Now the World," and "Awake or Perish."

The Grace Bible Institute enrollment is 284. Two foreign students, one from Germany and the other from the Canary Islands, are among the enrolled.

The eighth Annual Bible Conference will be conducted at Grace Bible Institute from October 30 to November 3. The principal speakers will be Rev. Wm. Detweiler, Orville, Ohio; Rev. J. J. Toews, Buhler, Kansas; Rev. Ed Duerksen, Avon, South Dakota and Dr. A. H. Stewart, Chicago, Illinois.

It is estimated that only about fifteen per cent of the world's population claims to be even nominally Christian. Perhaps that means that not more than five to eight per cent of the world's population is actively Christian. We are a small minority but we have a great God and a marvelous Savior. Are we "witnessing unto all men?"

Now that schools are again in full-swing, it should be a very sobering fact to know that we spent in 1949 two billion dollars more for alcoholic beverages than we did for all education. What manner of men are we?

Dr. Kagawa, famous Japanese Christian stopped over in Akron, Pa., on September 11. He spoke highly of the significance of the Mennonite testimony to the world. As a parting word he said "Send us more missionaries."

The Whole Gospel

THE LION AND THE LAMB, by Gerald Kennedy. Abingdon-Cokesbury Press, Nashville. 1950. 233 pages. $2.50.

THE world is almost reasonable, but not quite." "There is, in a word, something in life which hates logic and will not be confined by it." ". . . . life is paradoxical. That is, it demands that we hold together in a kind of tension what seem to be contradictions." In these words we have the central idea behind the descriptive title, "The Lion And The Lamb. "Things as different as the lion and the lamb must be held together in subjection to a higher power." Christian truth at its deeper levels will immediately out run the strait jacket of a closed system of thought. It is many-sided, like the facets of a cut diamond. It reveals first one facet, then another. "Heresy is always the attempt to narrow and over-emphasize one side of the gospel." It is the singular glory of the gospel that it does not over-simplify the truth of God, that it does not confine itself to the narrow strait jacket of man-made systems or creeds or legalisms.

Thus pursuing his theme, the author points out, for example, that the gospel is not all "forgiveness;" it is also "judgment." It is not all "personal;" it is also "social." It is not all "peace;" it is also "tension." There is an exceedingly valuable chapter on "Humility and Assurance." The chapter on "Weakness and Strength" establishes a solid ideological base for Christian peacemaking. The fact that Christian truth on its deeper levels is paradoxical, is one which needs very much to be stated. It forbids us to assume that we have the whole truth, when what we have is but one facet, or one side of a paradox. It may serve to erase party cries within the church, and establish warmer Christian fellowship. However, in thinking in terms of paradox, one needs to proceed with caution. We may be strongly tempted to hold as paradoxical what may in fact be two mutually exclusive and contradictory ideas. Imagination may even do overtime duty, as it did with the allegorical school of scriptural interpretation. Thus paradox may obscure rather than illuminate the truth.

Now and then one comes upon a sentence which reveals the preacher at his best. "We cannot believe that what we need to be saved from is ourselves. We believe too often that all we need is to be saved from a few bad men in the world." "God does not do for us what we must do for ourselves. He does for us what we learn at last we cannot do for ourselves." "It is about time we informed the embryo demagogues that we do not propose to allow them to smear decent men with the term "Un-American" just because they happen to disagree with them." "Christianity separated the sin from the sinner. Toward the sinner it was more forgiving and gentle than any other philosophy had dared to be. But toward the sin it burned with undying hatred." "There is something about the experience of getting acquainted with Jesus Christ that gives a man a sense of having entered eternity here and now."

SHARING—NOT STORING

We are not storehouses, but channels,
We are not cisterns, but springs,
Passing our benefits onward,
Fitting our blessings with wings;
Letting the water flow onward
To spread o'er the desert forlorn;
Sharing our bread with our brothers,
Our comfort with those who mourn.

THE READER SAYS

A "LOST" Resolution

During the closing moments of the Conference at Freeman, the Resolutions Committee presented a resolution to the effect that the Executive Committee explore the advisability of holding the session of Conference from a given Friday or Saturday through the entire week following, including the succeeding Sunday. The resolution was defeated by a large majority in an almost cheerful manner.

The resolution has merit. A conference which begins let's say on a Saturday, can use that day for registration, lodging assignments and similar routine items. The ensuing evening can very well be set aside for the customary addresses of welcome, the introduction of guests, and similar matters. The following morning, Sunday morning, offers the logical opportunity for the Conference Sermon. Sunday evening offers a splendid and fitting opportunity for the Conference Communion Service. If a guest speaker has been invited, what an opportunity Sunday afternoon offers for his first appearance.

Then the Conference is free to begin the work of the business before it on Monday morning, secure in the knowledge there is an entire, uninterrupted week ahead. This arrangement will permit more flexibility than the present one, and more opportunity for meetings of subsidiary organizations. If necessary, and it perhaps may be, Saturday morning will accomodate unfinished business. Then, in the satisfaction of a job well done, the Conference can use Saturday afternoon for an enjoyable recreational period. The second Sunday, the last day of the Conference, because of the very nature of Sunday and its associations, can and should become the climax of the Conference.

TITHING

It is scriptural—approved of God in the Old Testament and supported by Christ's words in the New.

It is spiritual, for it calls into play definiteness, progressiveness and system.

It is a crushing blow against selfishness.

It causes one to take the initiative in Christian giving rather than wait until the appeal for money is made.

It frees the church from the disgrace of deficits.

It enables the church frequently to plan for an enlarging of its work.

It establishes the individual as a financial steward, accountable to God.

It elevates worship to the high plane of rounded-out sincerity.

It makes giving a principle and no longer a spasmodic expression.

It is likely to result, as it has done in many instances, in our giving more than a tenth of all our receipts.

It means fewer of the comforts and pleasures of life which money can purchase, but the power to enjoy those that are left is expanded.

It places us in the position before God of holding out our hands to give as well as to receive.

A NEW REFORMATION NEEDED

IT was 433 years ago that Martin Luther nailed his 95 theses on the Wittenberg church door. That was the start of a movement that shook the world in what we now call the Reformation. While many things have changed since then, yet some of the spiritual weaknesses of that day are very similar to conditions existing among us today. We, too, need a new reformation that will bring a transformation of heart and spirit.

Church membership in that day was a mere form instead of a mighty force. In the early Apostolic church it cost something to be a Christian. Now again, it has often become too easy with no high demands, no deep change of life, no searching disciplines. It should mean a strong transforming fellowship in which there is a real change of heart, a new birth, and a mighty power.

The Lordship of Christ had faded out in Luther's day. Men gave their allegiance to temporal and spiritual dictators instead of to God. There is a similar situation today. We often neglect God and feel we can do quite well without Him. Prayer, worship and devotion are neglected and our loyalties given elsewhere, to the state in particular. We need a reformation in which Christ again becomes supreme in our lives. We must follow Him unreservedly, cost what it may. He is the way, the truth, and the life.

In that day religion had become largely a matter of works instead of a high faith in God. If people paid their dues, sins were supposedly forgiven by the priests and great cathedrals built with the confession money. Today we are often unhappy and under the guilt of sin. We try hard to do the things that will help us forget our wrongs, but to no avail. We must feel again the great truth that "the just shall live by faith." We must believe with all our hearts in the Lord Jesus Christ, and out of such a living faith, the proper works will follow.

The Bible was a closed book in those days. Today we boast of it being the best-seller, but too often it is again a closed book. A whole generation is growing up with an alarming ignorance of the truths of the great Book. It should be our light and our guide in this troubled world. We need a revival of the study and full belief in this Word of God. We need a new sense of its great value as a guide to God and the way of life.

Observing Reformation Sunday should be more than a hasty glance at history. It should mean for us a new sense of the Church, of Christ, of Faith, and of the Bible.

THIS title of a new book is suggestive. We hear so much about what is wrong with the world, that it is refreshing to know that some things are still right. Each one could make his own list of what is good. It is well to count our blessings.

There is the potential good in the material things God has placed in the world for man's use and betterment. There is the dependability of the seasons and the cycle of seed-time and harvest. The rain and the sun fulfill their purpose. The forces of nature, the fruits of the earth, the flowers and trees, the mountains and seas and sunsets. The response of the earth to the wisdom and toil of man. There is much still right with the world if man does not misuse it.

There are also many people that are right with God and so right in the world. These good Christian folks are the salt of the earth. There is kindness and goodness and truth and love. There is friendliness and helpfulness. There is the power for good in the home and the Church. We still have good neighbors, unfailing friends, sympathetic pastors—men whose lives are a rich blessing and inspiration to us all.

Yes, we may be grateful for the many things still right in the world.

PINNING LABELS ON PEOPLE

IT is now customary at conferences and other gatherings to pin a label on each one. It is a convenient way to learn to know a stranger's name and location. It is intended to help us become acquainted more easily.

But in another sense we are often guilty of labelling people in a way that is unfair and unjust. We jump at conclusions too hastily. People cannot be classified as readily as trees or rocks. Too often we look at others with prejudiced eyes, and take a wicked delight in pinning a suspicious label on them. Many a good Christian's work has been hindered because someone placed an unfair label on him. This is a serious matter.

There is a penalty for those who are too quick to label people wrongly. Some spiritual quality goes out of their lives. It is a terrible thing to carry ill-will against our brother. We cannot worship nor be forgiven if we harbor an unforgiving spirit towards others. So says Jesus. We have plenty to do to keep ourselves true to the label "Christian." Let every one bear the marks of the Lord Jesus.

LEANING TOWERS

THE leaning tower of Pisa is of special interest to tourists. It does not stand up straight and true as a building should, but, due to a faulty foundation, it leans considerably to one side. Because this is so unusual of big buildings, it is famous throughout the world.

Lop-sided people seem to be much more common than leaning towers. It is very common to find lives slightly out of balance. Because of faulty foundations or wrong materials thay do not stand up straight and true as men should. Instead of sturdy pillars they are leaning towers.

I am With You

E. A. Albrecht*

THE indwelling presence of the living Christ is one of the wonderful experiences of the Christian life. One of the great facts of our Christian Faith is that Jesus died on the cross to save us from sin. Another and also a very significant fact is that the same resurrected and living Christ is with us day by day, and shares himself with us and works in and through us. He is fulfilling his promise to his disciples when he said, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. (Mat. 28:20) We must believe the first to receive salvation, and we must experience the second to live a happy and fruitful Christian life.

The first few chapters of Acts reveal to us what the indwelling Spirit of God meant to the first disciples. It meant that Jesus was with them in a very intimate and personal experience. And this sense of his presence made it possible for them to go forth and witness and preach with great power and effectiveness. It is written that when the authorities of Jerusalem saw the boldness of Peter and John and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled and took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus. (Acts 4:13) The reason for their boldness, and the source of their power to heal and to preach so that thousands believed, was not only in that they had been with Jesus, but that he was a living reality within them now. He was filling them to overflowing and they could not keep to themselves this wonderful experience and power.

We too, can claim this promise of Jesus and know his intimate and personal presence. And this presence should also make a difference in our actions and behavior so that men will marvel and take knowledge that we have been with Jesus. It is through our zeal and through our boldness to witness and give our testimony as to what Christ means to us that others will be brought to him.

To the early disciple the experience of the presennce of Christ was one of deep inner joy. The mystical union with Christ lifts the soul out of sorrow and despair, and fills it with peace and joy. I believe we can say that the first disciples experienced a three-fold joy. The first was in that mystical union with Christ when he poured out his Spirit upon them and they experienced his presence in a very intimate and personal way. Secondly, when they went forth to preach and to witness they saw results. Thousands came to hear them and believed. Thirdly, they rejoiced that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for His name. (Acts 5:41)

We too, should experience this three-fold joy. If we do not have a happy and intimate fellowship with him, perhaps it is because we have not been loyal to him. Disobedience and failure to foster that intimate relationship through prayer will soon rob us of that joy. If in obedience to him we go forth to serve and witness among others what we have experienced, we too, will be able to rejoice and praise God. We dare not keep to ourselves what we have seen and heard; and it is when we give and share the blessings of the Gospel of Christ to others that he is very near to us. If we allow fear of public opinion or the voice of authority to dampen our spirits and zeal for Christ we cannot expect to be joyful and happy in his presence.

The third source of joy for the first disciples does not come easily today. To often we are discouraged and disheartened when we face criticism or persecution. We are not willing to suffer and resent it when it comes. Can we suffer shame for his name and rejoice? Jesus said, Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you and say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake; rejoice and be exceeding glad. . . (Mat. 5:11, 12)

The growth of the early church amidst a hostile world bears evidence of the power and presence of God permeating and activating the lives of the believers. If the church is weak and ceases to grow, is it perhaps not due to a lost sense of the presence of God? How real is God to us? Boldness—power—joy—these come to us through the indwelling Spirit of God in us. Jesus has promised to be with us. Let us claim that promise, for we need him and should want him to be very near to us in these days.

"IF NO BIRDS SANG EXCEPT THE BEST"

My talents may not be so rare,
And better ones found anywhere;
But bird songs would not have much zest
"If no birds sang except the best."
No sense of meter for a test,
Deciding which of them is best;
No thought about their breath control
Can mar their efforts, as a whole.
It's natural for the birds to sing,
Their voices on the air they fling.
So why should I not with the rest
Use talents, though not of the best?
When from the heart it comes sincere,
It's bound to have a note of cheer;
And blends with others God has blest,
Without much thought of which is best.
So we might learn from birds on wing,
That all who wish may chirp and sing;
For there would be no real song fest
"If no birds sang except the best."

Excerpts from China Letter

P. J. Boehr

THE week past was the last week of the Children's classes and the week of the closing programs at the two places, Friday evening and Saturday forenoon respectively, both really worthwhile programs; many Bible passages had been memorized and Christian Hymns learned well. How these little ones sing when they have been drilled. It was so heart warming to hear in Miss Kuyf's room, the warm prayers, especially of Paul Li, a former Mohammedan, but now a member here and his younger brother Mark just baptized here.

Then came Sunday the 27th. What a feeling that was to wait for this day and how one wondered what the thinking of the Chinese folks was, and again, which persons would be elected. Much prayer was made that the will of the Lord might be done. I believe the prayers were answered and the Lord's will was done, for the elections took place peaceably.

They did it differently at the two places. Here the "convener" was a local Christian young man, baptized in September 1949. That was also the case in the West Suburb where also a Christian young man of last September's class presided. During the week each did it differently in preparing for the choosing of these 12 people. It seemed to be so ordained that at each place 6 should be elected, for according to check and count there were 61 names here and 59 names at the other place.

Here at 4th street (where we four missionaries live) the brother who has finished his first year at the University and seems to be a man of system and culture, Kao Yang, worked together with other brethren and got a ballot sheet out with all church-members' names printed, and an invitation to the church-members' meeting attached. The brother in the West Suburb prepared name cards for each member with a number on each, so the people could vote either by name or number.

A seminary teacher, an able speaker on indigenous churches, and with a strong voice in the Shantung dialect had spoken 6 times preceding August 20 at both places. He had formerly been in the Gospel ministry in Korea for 6 years.

I preached on "The Church of the Living God" on Sunday morning, August 27th, after which all prayed in concert for the Spirit's power and guidance. These young Christians prayed again before they voted, which was like music to spiritual ears. Here the members selected their 6 people in the first ballot. In the West Suburb the votes had fallen in such a way that all six delegates were out of two church workers families. It was gracious on their part to "back out" of the situation on the score that in order to do things "decently and in order" there should be no more than one member of any family eligible to such a committee of delegates. That was accomplished peacefully by withdrawing all but the two names of the two families with the highest votes. To a goodly number of us here we believe the choice of all 12 delegates was "of the Lord."

My hope is that they will get two churches started and work as fast and earnestly as possible for self-suport.

We had a very interesting wedding. The bride was somewhat of a Rebeccah, who had never seen her bridegroom until the day before yesterday. Both are University graduates, and his father had worked where the bride came from. He had been impressed with this godly young woman and her Christian testimony. The son began to write (and pray, I believe); the father must have too, and she surely. So when doors closed to leave for her home prov., and opened to come here, including a ride on the last bus here in time for this occasion, Romans 8:28 was again fulfilled. Both may leave for Mt.— East Prov. in a day or two, from where they are originally. He had been a student in our schools and baptized by pastor Yang. The father of the groom is a gateman here.

MENNONITE MEN For CHRIST

Mennonite men are on the way! At the Freeman Conference they organized, adopted a constitution, elected officers, and began thinking of "things needful."

Your Church Membership

Familiar Answers to an Important Question

"I don't know how long I'll be here." None of us do. We don't even know how long we will be alive. The very uncertainty of times makes it all the more imperative that you move your membership and go to work now.

"I don't know anyone here." You never will, unless you give yourself a chance. But if you will "join" you will find that the members here love the Lord and will love you just as much as the ones you left behind.

"I want to visit around and see which church I like best." It's all right to visit to find where you have the greatest opportunity to serve, but be careful lest you degenerate into a religious tramp, drifting as a visitor from church to church, receiving constantly but serving nowhere.

"I hate to leave the old home church." You have already left it. All they have there is your name on the roll. They don't want your name without you . . . .

"I haven't time." Whose time are you using, yours or God's? Who gives you life and breath? What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul—or life?"

The Imperative of the Mennonite Witness

Paul Peachy*

WE shall be witnesses." It is not my purpose to elaborate on the theological content of this statement, nor to try to prove the already incontrovertibly established fact that we as the Christian Church must preach the gospel. The question rather is, what is its significance for us as MCC workers? Why a Mennonite witness? And the answer is to be found not only in the original command of Christ, but also in the conditions peculiar to our own age or civilization, which though not changing by one iota the original commission, makes its application a special one. For the church herself, though never made responsible for the mass salvation of a civilization, can nevertheless become largely responsible for its collapse. I refer here to the partial and comparative failure of the Protestant Reformation. For the Reformation, with stakes set high at the reinstitution of Christianity in its original purity, crystallized prematurely, thus preserving some of the fatal errors of Catholicism, which errors have been a strongly contributing factor to the creation of the conditions that have brought us to Europe as relief workers. I refer here to the retention of infant baptism, a concept underlying universal church membership as opposed to voluntary assembly of believers. And out of this concept grew such corollary errors as the union of church and state, militarism, and the priestly clergy. The compromises broadened the sphere of the church, deeply embedding her in contemporary culture, but robbed her of her essential dynamic and message.

But not only did the official confession fail. That section of the Reform carrying through the original New Testament vision, at first a suppressed minority movement, lost its own vitality, and likewise forfeited its right to speak to the conditions of our time. The English free church movement such as Methodism did much to revive some of the basic concepts, such as, for example, believers baptism. But these movements too, have left much to be desired. And so the churches stand in the ruins of a catastrophe which they could not avert and yet for which they are partially responsible, still holding in their hands the commission with which Christ entrusted them on the Mount of Olives.

What then of our witness in this time? Should there be a Mennonite witness? In the first place, to speak of a Mennonite witness is not to speak of Mennonitism as having a priority on truth, or as being the final criterion for truth, nor yet as being a supplementary or new revelation of truth. Nor is it that we are the only church in which one can be saved. It is admittedly difficult to maintain a firm conviction about anything without thereby implying that those of another persuasion are mistaken. And it is equally difficult for the church to perform her evangelistic task when there is such a confusing din of differing voices as to what constitutes Christianity. It is to overcome these difficulties that interdenominational movements have sprung up. The unity of the invisible church of Jesus Christ is already an established fact. To see therefore, the visible church moving toward that goal of unity is something that must warm the heart of every true believer. And yet we must be realistic. As long as humanity is human, there will be differences in religious expression and emphasis, which even a World Council of Churches can never completely overcome. And these differences tend to become institutionalized, to become fixed into denominations. And it is the unbalanced or incomplete emphasis of one denomination that leads to the formation of another. Thus almost every movement is in a sense corrective, even when later the newly rediscovered segment of truth is made the absolute and therefore heretical.

As we attempt to find our place to develop our witness in this confusion, we often see but two alternatives. There is either the way of hostility to other movements, or there is the opening wide of arms to receive all who name the Name of Christ, thereby losing our own identity and message, with the latter approach usually working out as Aesop's dog who saw his own shadow, but thought he saw a bigger and better piece of meat. Neither of these approaches is adequate to the demands of Scripture, nor yet to the exigencies of our time. Paul could rejoice that in every way neither by pretence or in truth, Christ was proclaimed. And Christ told his disciples who were disturbed by the preaching of those not belonging to their own band, that they should not be forbidden. These statements potentially contain the solution for our own problem whereby we will learn to link hands as it were with that which is genuinely Christian in other movements, but which also will safeguard from contamination with or support of error, and which will enable us to preserve and to fulfill in a positive way the mission with which our own movement has been entrusted.

What then is that mission? Could we not accomplish more by plunging into the larger stream of Christianity, discarding our name and our separate program? Why a Mennonite witness?

Christianity in itself is a seeming paradox and is built on paradoxes. Jesus said, "He that findeth his life shall lose it." The values and concepts of eternity and those of time always stand in apparent contradiction. Throughout the ages the church has oscillated between the poles of the paradox. Perhaps only in the first century church was the contradiction resolved, and the seemingly opposite truths synthesized. The Protestant Reformation, after many centuries of intermittent decline, had corrupted the church, was inspired by the original first-century ideal, but the price was too great for the mass movements to pay. Out of that cataclysmic upheaval emerged the then despised sect of the Anabaptists, carrying aloft, though at times falteringly, the banner of the New Testament ideal. Today, four centuries later, the major compromises of the larger movements have in a sense gone to seed, and the old questions then answered by compromise, are being debated anew. It is for this time that Anabaptism, that Mennonitism, has a witness, for down through the centuries it has clung to the New Testament solution of the paradox. This of course, does not mean that no other movement has likewise or even better preserved one or another truth or value, but rather that Anabaptism maintained and defined most clearly, the major premise.

NATURAL AND SUPERNATURAL

1. Anabaptism has maintained the balance between the natural and the supernatural in the Christian message and experience. Shorn of its supernatural elements, that of the regenerative work of the Spirit in the believer's heart, Christianity has often degenerated into a mere external moral code or legalism. Shorn of its natural or human elements, that of its demand upon the believer for repentance and sanctified living, it has degenerated into an impotent inner pietism. The New Testament insistence upon both, which Mennonitism has endeavored to maintain, is a severe standard, but it is the only true and adequate expression and application of the Gospel.

INDIVIDUALISM AND UNIVERSALISM

2. The Anabaptist vision grasped the New Testament balance between the individualism and the universalism of the gospel. In its zeal to fulfill the universal aims of redemption, that of bringing all men into the kingdom of God, the official churches attempted to embrace all within their bounds through universal compulsory membership, effected through infant baptism, thus violating the basic principle that redemption of society can be accomplished only if and insofar as the individual is saved. On the other hand, there have been tendencies to make salvation a private pietistic matter, detached from the practical implication of the gospel. The rapid spread of early Anabaptism with the practical Christian living that it produced, witnesses to the proper dynamic synthesis of these two principles at that time.

THE GRADUAL AND THE APOCALYPTIC

3. The Anabaptist movement understood the synthesis of the gradualistic and apocalyptical elements in the gospel. The New Testament sees the kingdom as a leaven, beginning small, but eventually becoming great. And so some movements have looked to the gradual establishment of the kingdom through the gradual conquest of the powers of evil and improvement of the social order, something that man would accomplish through his own efforts. But the New Testament also speaks of the Apocalyptical element of the kingdom from without, from above. And so others saw this age as so hopelessly corrupt that only by the immediate and complete overthrow of society in its present stage could the kingdom come. The New Testament sees no conflict between these truths, for the kingdom begins in the believer and in the church now (the gradualistic), and is fully established in the return of Christ (the apocalyptic).

THE RELATIVE AND THE ABSOLUTE

4. Anabaptism comprehended the relationship between the relative and the absolute in the Gospel. Christian attainment will always be relative in this world, as the New Testament itself well recognizes, and yet it sets up unqualifiedly the ultimate standard of perfection. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect." This truth, this commandment, has been a perpetual stumbling stone to nominal Christianity. The classic example of the problem is the question of Christian participation in war. All Christians recognize war as a social and moral evil, and yet many consider it a necessity under certain circumstances. It is held that the absolute standard of non-participation cannot be held in our relative, hence imperfect situation. Others admit the absolute claims of the gospel, but hold them applicable for a later age. They accept Jesus as Saviour, but only in a limited way as Lord. In the New Testament the course of action is clear. "My kingdom is not of this world." Its citizens are strangers and pilgrims on the earth. And while they cannot escape the responsibilities of time, as Niebuhr well says, they dare never compromise with evil. Their ethic is already the absolute ethic of the Kingdom which they shall one day keep perfectly when the kingdom comes to maturity in the return of Christ.

THE TEMPORAL AND THE ETERNAL

5. The Anabaptist vision contained the New Testament harmonization of the temporal and of the eternal in the Gospel implications. People still repeat the question of the disciples, "Where is the Kingdom and when shall it come?" And the answer is still Christ's answer, "The kingdom is within you." Rarely has the truth been fully understood that the kingdom comes in a real way in the individual heart and life when it receives the gospel. For Jesus says further, "He that believeth on me hath everlasting life. . .is passed from death unto life, not in the dim uncertain future, but here and now. Inasmuch as the Christian receives eternal life when he accepts the redemptive work of Christ, the difference between the temporal and the eternal in the development of the kingdom is only quantitative, not qualitative.

FAITH AND WORKS

6. The Anabaptists understood the Scriptural relationship between form and spirit, faith and works, in Christian experience. According to the New Testament, the form or outer expression is resultant from the inner life and not causal. In the infant baptism and mass of Catholicism, and even in some of the formality of high churchly Protestantism, the order is reversed. The outer form is thought to have inner spiritual effectiveness. On the other extreme is the viewpoint that form (works), since it

Preaching Christ in the Smoky Mountains

AND this gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come. Mat. 24:14.

It has been our privilege for the past three years to preach and teach this wonderful gospel of the Kingdom to our people of the Smoky Mountains. God has blessed us in a marvelous way as we battle against a great conflict for His name's sake. In our ministry here fifteen precious souls have joined Grace Chapel. We have received eighteen members by the right hand of followship. One has passed on and one name has been removed.

The latest reception of members was in the month of August, 1950, when we received four members. In July, a year ago, we had our first and only baptismal service. Two persons were baptized; the rest had been baptized at an earlier time. It was a day we shall never forget. One of the candidates was a married lady who had been saved here in Grace Chapel. Her husband, who adhered to another religious sect, was strictly against her being baptized, but we praise God for her faith and determination. The day was partly cloudy and rain was threatening.

Just as we gathered at the river bank it began to rain. "Praise the Lord, He always makes a way," we gathered in an old hay barn which stood near-by and held our service. These services seem to be a great joy to our people; they cry, laugh, and shake hands as we all rejoice together. Yes, of a truth, the mountains are a worth-while place in which to work.

We recall the conversion of an unmarried man in his late thirties, a very immoral person, and one who had sold his life as a slave to booze. We had been dealing with him for some time and it seemed that all words were in vain, until one night at a revival meeting in Newport, Tenn. I layed my arm on his shoulder and spoke to him again about the condition of his soul, after which he walked down the aisle with an expression of faith and accepted Christ as his Saviour.

Just recently a group of colored folk from Newport, Tenn., gave a program in Grace Chapel which was very interesting. We estimated a hundred and fifty present. Some times when conducting a funeral service, there will be two hundred or more present.

At regular services the attendance varies from 20 to 50. We have prayer meeting each Wednesday night, preaching services each Saturday night, Sunday school each Sunday morning, and Sunday school in the Houston Valley school house at 2:00 each Sunday afternoon.

We also do personal work and house visitation, carrying the gospel to those that are not able or interested to attend services. In some of our mountain homes we find the people in quite a sad condition, families living in shabby log huts with scarcely any bedding, children without shoes, and very roughly dressed. Smoking tobacco and dipping snuff seems to be quite a popular thing in most places. Children from the age of three and up can smoke, chew, drink and curse, like their elders! It is by your prayer and your gift that we can enter into these homes with the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. "For he saith, I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succored thee: behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." II Cor. 6:2.

THE MENNONITE WITNESS

is not causal, must be non-essential. Since salvation is all by grace, it frees us of responsibility to act. In the New Testament, as in the Anabaptist vision, inner spiritual experience, by reason of its very nature, is inseparable from outer expression in piety, worship and service.

INSTITUTION AND FELLOWSHIP

7. Finally, the Anabaptist vision kept clear the New Testament synthesis between the church as an ecclesiastical institution and the church as a fellowship of believers, between the church as organization and the church as organism, between the church as "Kirche" and the church as "Gemeinde." But in the New Testament, the church is the assembly of the believers apart from whom she does not exist, even though in another sense one can speak of the Church as an entity which serves as the custodian of the Gospel. And that fellowship is composed of those who by reason of their own encounter with Christ voluntarily enter into it.

This discussion of New Testament paradoxes is by no means complete or exhaustive, but I submit it as a partial and suggestive answer as to why there should be a Mennonite witness. It means that we have a two-fold witness, first to the unevangelized and then to our fellow Christians, which includes our witness to one another. Te define the concept in terms of the great commission we have this two-pronged task formulated by Christ in Matt. 28:19, 20. "Go therefore and make disciples of all nations. . . teaching them to observe all that I have commanded you." The two aspects of the task can never be separated, because they are not two different tasks, but rather aspects of the same thing. We cannot proclaim the redemptive message without also drawing from it the consequences of Christian living.

M C C News Notes

Good Response to Clothing Need

By the end of August, a total of 160 tons of clothing for relief were processed, since the beginning of the year. Receipts of clothing are usually higher during the fall and winter months, so the total this year will likely be over 200 tons.

The 2671 Christmas Bundles contributed by churches in Canada are being sent to Paraguay. The approximately 10,000 additional from the United States are allocated to Germany, Japan, Java, England, Italy, Austria, France, Palestine and the Philippines.

Relief Workers on the Field

At present there are 141 relief workers in 15 countries. Of these, more than one-third have served beyond one term. During the past three months 26 workers have returned upon completion of their terms, and 21 others have gone forth to take up the work.

European Workers Meet

For three days over the week end of Sept. 24, the MCC workers in Europe gathered at Bad Duerkheim, Germany, for a spiritual life conference. Such meetings are held periodically, to help workers maintain a fresh, dynamic Christian life in the face of the difficult situations in which relief workers often need to work.

New Relief Project in China

Hong Kong, China, is the location of a service to be opened this month, to provide a place of refuge for children who otherwise would need to live in places where direct exposure to tuberculosis would endanger health. In this city where tuberculosis ranks high among the infectious diseases, the service is a unique and significant one. It also affords a place of immediate relief work to bring help "In the Name of Christ" to the people of China, one of the most needy countries on the face of the earth today.

CO Wages May go to CARE

Money earned by COs during World War II and paid into the "Frozen Fund" of the US Treasury, may be appropriated by Congress for use by CARE. A bill to use this sum of $1,300,000 for educational books for European libraries to be supplied through CARE, was passed by the Senate, and reported favorably by the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

Concerning the Draft

It seems that when a young man signs Series XIV of the General Classification Questionnaire, indicating that he is a CO and desires the Special Form for COs, some local boards simply give a Class II-C or III-A instead of sending a Form 150.

It is, however, very important that the young man persist in securing the Form 150, fill it out and return it to the Board. A CO position which is strongly asserted only in time to keep a man from being inducted into the armed forces, is suspected of insincerity.

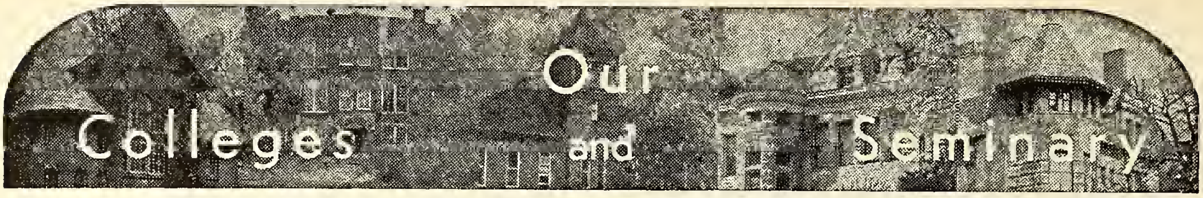
Any man can spoil himself: He can allow himself to grow so sensitive that he lives in constant pain. He can nurse his grudges until they are an intolerable burden. He can think himself insulted until he is apt to be. He can believe the world is against him until it is. He can imagine troubles until they become real. He may hold so many under supicion that no one believes him. He can look so askance at his friends until they are no longer friends. He can think himself so important that no one else does. He can have such a good opinion of himself that no one else enjoys his presence. He can become so wrapped up in himself that he becomes very small. —Sunshine Mag.

MAN'S PHYSICAL AND SCIENTIFIC PROGRESS
MAN'S MORAL AND SPIRITUAL PROGRESS

THE GREAT DIVIDE

by Charles A. Wells

It comes with a shock sometimes when we realize how far man has advanced in material things and how primitive he remains in things of the spirit. Flashes of nobility come to him at times when some vision of an ordered world arises, ruled by moral force and not physical violence,—motivated by spiritual concepts and not by hatred, greed or passion. Then the noble vision fades and there he stands again, club in hand! If the world loses faith in the power of ideals again, and we enter another era of vast rearmament, it will do us no good to blame it all on others. For nazism, fascism and communism have not been the products of certain peoples but the failure of the whole world to meet the needs of men. None of these curses would have overtaken us if we had not all failed spiritually. Men must be awakened to the only way our world can grow spiritually to match its physical and material achievement,—a new birth of the spirit of God in the human heart.



Our Colleges and Seminary

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

J. E. HARTZLER, who was on the Sherwood Eddy study tour of Europe during the last summer, will give a Vesper address at the college Sunday afternoon, October 22, at 2:30. Hartzler is always an interesting speaker and with the rich experiences of the past summer, should have a very worthwhile message for our people.

J. Harold Sherk, Executive Secretary of the Peace Committee of the Mennonite Central Committee, visited the campus October 3, 4. He was available for individual conferences, spoke to the Peace Club, and spoke at the regular chapel services.

A play, "The Blithe Spirit," is to be presented October 20 and 21 by the speech department of the college.

Miss Edna Ramseyer, Assistant Professor of Home Economics and Dean of Women, is on leave of absence this year to continue work toward her Ph. D. degree at Ohio State University. William Burbick, of the speech department, is also working on his doctorate at Ohio State and returns weekends to do some teaching at Bluffton.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

HENRY HITT CRANE, noted minister and leader in the cause of peace, has been secured as the speaker for the Fiftieth Anniversary Founders' Day program, December 14. Crane is the minister of the Central Methodist Church in Detroit, Michigan, and an outstanding advocate of peaceful settlement of the world's problems.

The "Star," Freeman Junior College student paper, was provided with its staff for the year in the election September 29. The editor will be Jerry Mast of Walnut Creek, Ohio; business manager, Lillian Ratzlaff of Freeman; and assistant business mananger, Mary Nachtigal, also of Freeman.

The farm shop has been in the process of remodeling since the Conference closed, and considerable repair work has made the roof weather tight again. The classes have been working on the building during class time and gaining valuable practical experience. G. J. Toews, in charge of remodeling and moving, stated considerable work needed to be done yet, particularly in providing new tables and work benches. Help will be much appreciated in providing labor, material and tools.

Barbara Wipf, a graduate of Freeman Academy of 1948, was the victim of a car accident, September 26. She and her fiance had been out visiting, and on returning ran into a sandy shoulder rolling the car. Miss Wipf was a registered nurse and well liked by the community. Funeral services were held in the Bethany Church, September 29.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

THE Seminary student discussion group had its first session Monday evening, September 25, with four individuals giving five-minute presentations on "How can I get the most out of the Seminary?" Another meeting was held on Friday evening addressed by William Lovell, pastor of the South Congregational Church, who discussed the changing nature of our neighborhood and the proper response of a Christian church to these changes. He is serving a church which is seventy percent colored and thirty percent white. Among the striking statements which this pastor made was the following, "We have learned to work together, play together, study together, and work in political arrangements, but Christians have not yet learned to worship together at the level of different racial backgrounds." This problem of shifting neighborhood patterns is bringing serious concerns and study here in the city.

Special communion services have been scheduled at the Mennonite Bible Mission, with Willard Wiebe of Lind, Washington, the speaker, and at the Mennonite Church where Aaron Epp is the regular pastor.

During this past week everyone here was given an opportunity for indicating the individual he would like to see be the interim pastor of our newly planned congregation here at the Seminary.

The fall retreat for the Seminary Fellowship is planned for October 20 to 21 at the Community Center Foundation at Palos Park, Illinois. Each quarter we plan to have one spiritual retreat where we withdraw for a period of quiet, meditation, and prayer.

Word has been received from Andre Goll that he has had a pleasant voyage across the Atlantic Ocean and is now back for his new work as an evangelist for the French Mennonite Church. We are deeply grateful for the fellowship we had with this fine young Christian from the church in France. Word has also come from Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Goering that they are happily settled in their new work in the Brook Lane Mental Hospital of the Mennonite Central Committee. Ellen Harder returned last week to claim some of her baggage here and return to Bethel College where she is enrolled for the school year. We are also happy to welcome Mrs. A. Warkentin back to the Seminary Fellowship.

Don E. Smucker conducted special services at the Tiskilwa Mennonite Church during the past week, where E. A. Sommer is the pastor, and on Sunday, October 1, spoke at the 75th Anniversary at the Emmanuel Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas, of which Garman Wedel is the pastor.

CENTRAL DISTRICT

—Topeka Church, Topeka, Indiana: Holy Communion was observed October 1, on World-wide communion Sunday. During the Sunday school hour promotion exercises were held for the Primary Department. Bibles were presented to eight scholars who were promoted to the third-year junior class. At the evening service Pastor Loewen showed slides of pictures taken on their vacation trip in August, which included the Central District Conference at Washington, Illinois; the General Conference at Freeman, South Dakota; and the Young Peoples Workshop at St. Peter, Minnesota.-Opal King, Corr.

MIDDLE DISTRICT

—First Church, Berne, Indiana: On Sunday evening, September 17, a week's series of meetings came to a close under the leadership of the Young People's Societies of the church. C. A. Derstine of Kitchener, Ontario, was the speaker. His messages were very helpful and greatly appreciated. Sunday, September 24, occured the burial of Mrs. J. F. Lehman, 87 years of age, after a heart ailment of almost ten years. Missionaries Alfred and Mrs. Habegger spoke in the evening at the church and showed pictures of the Montana Mission field and workers, including pictures of the newly erected church which some of our men helped to erect recently. Quite a large number of our young people have gone away to school this fall, some preparing for mission fields.—Martha Gilliom, Corr.

—First Church, Bluffton, Ohio: The Men's Brotherhood had a reception supper for the college men recently. Men have volunteered to go to Shavehead Lake and erect the cabin our church has purchased. Sunday evening, September 17, Mary K. Bauman gave a talk about her work with migrants this summer in a summer service unit. Delbert Gratz spoke and showed pictures of Switzerland at the monthly meeting of the Friendly Couples class. Mr. Gratz, the Bluffton College librarian, just recently returned from Switzerland after doing several years of relief work there.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: The organ fund, started in 1946 by a gift from S. C. Sprunger, has now been successfully completed with a concluding gift from the same person. The organ was first played April 3, 1949, and formally dedicated June 19, 1949. In deep appreciation for all the support given by the congregation, the church turns to God and gives Him the honor for enabling this goal to be reached. We are now enjoying the recently installed public address system, donated by A. C. Diller and dedicated in a brief service following the morning worship September 20. The crew of six men and two ladies who traveled to Shavehead Lake to erect a cabin came back with the work done and lots of enthusiasm. Mr. and Mrs. Harold Himes are both attending Ashland College. George Breneman took his Sunday School class of five boys and five girls of 'teen age for a trip to Cleveland to see the airport, the zoo, and a ballgame. In the annual C. E. election Harley Himes was chosen president, Vernon Lehman, vice-president; Juanita Lehman, secretary; and Harold Himes, treasurer.—Mrs. Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

EASTERN DISTRICT

—Deep Run Church, Bedminster, Pa.: Herbert Fretz is making his fall pastoral visits. The Laymen Visitation Evangelism Campaign is now underway. The Brotherhood and Womens' Convention of the Eastern District Conference was held here October 14. We had our Harvest Home meeting on October 15, with a display of products in the front of the church. —Corr.

—West Swamp Church, Quarkertown, Pa.: Seven from our church attended the General Conference at Freeman, S. D. While our pastor, Arthur Rosenberger, attended the Conference, two of our young men brought the Sunday morning messages: Stanley Stauffer, who is preparing to be a medical missionary, and Kenneth Shelly, a ministerial student at Bluffton College. The College and Bible students had charge of the morning service, September 3. Sunday afternoon, September 24, the C. E. held a service at the Frederick Home for the Aged. The evening meal was furnished for the guests in the Home by the Live Wire and Never Idle S. S. classes. —Corr.

PACIFIC DISTRICT

—Newport Church, Newport, Washington: Our pastor and Mrs. Schmidt have returned from a vacation spent in Kansas and in Nebraska, during which they attended the General Conference. Mr. and Mrs. John Henderson spent a recent vacation here and spoke on their future work, translation work among the Indians in Venezuela. A group of our young people have left to attend school.—Mrs. H. Hiebert, Corr.

NORTHERN DISTRICT

—First Church, North of Butterfield, Minnesota: The month of September will be a red-letter month for the congregation. It had the privilege to have three of its young men ordained to the Gospel ministry as evangelists. September 3, San Fast and Fernando Fast, graduates of Grace Bible Institute, were ordained as evangelists. C. H. Suckau was the guest speaker, and the pastor of the congregation performed the ordination. On September 24, Aaron E. Suckau, who together with his family has been engaged in tract and Bible distribution work for the past four years in auto courts and cabins in the south-western part of the U.S., sought ordination as a high-way evangelist. This was granted and he was also examined by the examining committee of the Northern District Conference. The brethren Paul Tschetter, John Suderman, and L. R. Amstutz took part in the ordination. L. R. Amstutz gave an excellent message on some of the musts of an evangelist, based on Mal. 2:4-7.

Mennonite Youth

SOMETIMES youth is very modest about their place in life. When they grow older, become gray, have the dignity of age, then they will be an influence and will be able to do the things about which they dream. In reality, the only time a person can do that about which he aspires is now. The little child is told that in a few hours we will go to town and get some candy. She replies that she wants the candy, "Right now." She cannot wait. A gray head will not make the things you want to do be a reality.

This is a truth that is startlingly real concerning the church and her leaders. From Christ and His disciples on down through the ages there is every evidence that those who gained a vision of their task for the Kingdom proceeded to do something about their vision, "Right now." Thus, the result is that many leaders of the church have been young people. The following article presents this in a dramatic way. Here is a topic for young people to think about and discuss, "Youth Who Have Changed History." E. L.

Youth Who Have Changed History

In browsing through the pages of history, you will find that among the greatest apostles, crusaders, reformers, pastors, missionaries, and evangelists of all time, the majority were young men.

Young Men of the Bible

The apostles were chosen as young men to give up their occupations and become followers of the Lord Jesus. The reformers and builders of the church were not merely young men following the fashions of their times, but with courage and faith they preached against the warped religious traditions and teachings of their own day. Not imitators of older teachers but trail blazers proclaiming the new truths of the grace of God in Christ Jesus, these men set continents aflame with spiritual fervor and stemmed the gap between civilization and chaos.

Hebrews eleven reminds us that some of the earliest builders of history were not only men of faith but young men. A young man heard the challenge of God to leave his loved ones, his friends and his country to go into a strange land. He denied himself and the good favor of friends and loved ones to obey the commission given him. Today we realize more than ever the glory of his success. For the promise which God made to him when he was still a young man has come true because all nations have been blessed through the life and ministry of Abraham.

Among other heroes of those early days was a man brought up in King Pharaoh's palace. Instead of choosing the glory and honor Pharaoh offered him, he denied himself all this, laid down his riches and by his own volition numbered himself with the people of God, the nation Israel. But with sacrifice and self-denial comes blessing, and Moses became the deliverer of God's people.

No more dramatic a story could be told than that of Daniel, the young man who determined not to defile himself although surrounded by every form of human temptation in the king's nefarious court. No kind of persecution the wicked king could contrive was enough to change Daniel's mind. For here was a young man who changed history because he had determined in his heart to be true to God.

Almost all of the prophets and apostles could be named as young men of faith, tearing down great strongholds for the Lord God whom they served. In the New Testament John the Baptist blazed out his warnings of the judgments to come, not forgetting John the beloved, Paul the missionary, Stephen the martyr, and Peter the impulsive young man who became the great preacher of Pentecost.

Youth of the Early Church

Beyond the period of the Apostolic Church, Jesse Lyman Hurlbut in his "Story of the Christian Church" has outlined five periods of church history.

The first period, he says, began approximately at the death of St. John, about 100 A.D., and ended with the Edict of Constantine, 313 A.D. During this time the Christians of the Second and Third Centuries underwent indescribable persecution at the hands of Riman Emperors.

During the first persecution of the church under Nero, the sixth emperor of Rome, the satanic despot himself watched the burning of the city and of thousands of Christians who perished in the flames.

Those who refused to deny Christ were punished in every imaginable way. Some were sewed up in skins of wild animals and then played with by wild dogs until their death. Others were dressed in shirts made stiff with wax, tied to axletrees and set on fire in order to light the gardens of Nero. But instead of weakening the church, persecution only served to strengthen it for hundreds of young men and women who were enemies of the Christian faith joined the ranks of the persecuted and the church grew.

During the persecution of Domitian, Simeon, a Bishop of Jerusalem, was crucified; St. John was boiled in oil and afterwards banished to Patmos; Flavia, the daughter of a Roman Centurion, was banished and a law was made, "That no Christian, once brought before the Tribunal, should be exempt from punishment without renouncing his religion."

During the persecution under Trajan around 108 A.D., a young man named Ignatius, was captured by the persecutors. When Ignatius heard that the church at Rome was trying to deliver him from the persecutors, he wrote them, exhorting them not to do so lest they should deprive him of the blessing which he expected to receive from it. "Now I begin to be a disciple. I care for nothing, of visible or invisible things, so that I may win Christ," he wrote. "Let fire and the cross, let companies of wild beasts, let breaking of bones and tearing of limbs, let the grinding of the whole body come and all the malice of the Devil come upon me; be it so, only may I win Christ Jesus!" Later, when he was sentenced to be thrown to the beasts, he cried out, "I am the wheat of Christ; I am going to be ground with the teeth of wild beasts that I may be found pure bread."

The story is told of Germanicus, a young and zealous Christian, who, when he was delivered to the wild beasts because he refused to deny Christ, displayed such Christian zeal to the Gospel that several of the pagan persecutors became converts to Christianity.

Hundreds were burned at the stake, scores obliged to walk over thorns, nails, and sharp shells, and others scourged with whips until their fingers and arms lay bare. A zealous Roman woman, Felicitatis, a devout Christian, and her sons, all Christians, were brutally murdered. The eldest was scourged and pressed to death with weights, the next two had their brains beaten out with clubs, the fourth was thrown over a precipice and the three youngest beheaded.

In the catacombs of Rome, heads were found severed from bodies, limbs and shoulder blades broken, bones calsified with fire.

Inscriptions on the graves told their own story. "Here lies Mercia, put to rest in a dream of peace." Another said, "Loren, to the sweetest son, borne away of angels." At a young lady's grave, "Victorious in peace and in Christ." Another epitaph said, "I lift my hands against those who took me away at the age of twenty though I had done no harm."

When the persecutors had finished their work, the church remained stronger than ever and a new era of history was ushered in.

Youth of the Imperial Church

The period of the Imperial Church began when a twenty-five-year-old young man wrote the famous Edict of Toleration in 313 A.D. and soon thereafter made Christianity the state religion.

His name was Constantine and he had conquered the empire with a motto which he had claimed to have seen in a vision—"By this sign (a shining Cross) thou shalt conquer."

During the next period of church history, unfortunately, the preaching of the gospel of faith gradually disappeared. One young man after another endeavored to bring the church back to the truth of the gospel but one after another failed.

Among these was Peter Waldo, a merchant of Lions and founder of the Waldensians. He preached the Scriptures and appealed against the usages and doctrines of the Roman Church. Persecution followed and his followers were driven out of France into Northern Italy.

In England, a movement began with John Wycliff, who, while still a student at Oxford, began teaching the Scriptures in preference to the teachings of the decadent church.

In Bohemia, it was John Huss, soon excommunicated, condemned and burned to death. It seemed a tragic end but again the story of a young man who changed history, for his death aroused the reforming group of Christians in Bohemia to action.

Youthful Leaders of the Reformation

Then came Martin Luther. Eighteen years old when he entered the University of Erfurt, the decisions he made during the next two years not only changed history, but the course of history itself. By the time he was twenty, he had definitely decided to accept the Bible teaching of justification by faith. At twenty-two, he dedicated himself to the service of God and became a clergyman of the Roman Church. Sometime later he went to Rome and climbed "the stairs" on his knees. When he was about half way up it dawned upon him that this was earning salvation by works and not by faith. Rising from his knees, he determined that from henceforth he must preach the gospel of justification by faith alone and not by works.

While still a young man, he nailed the ninety-five theses on the door of the Cathedral of Wittenberg, proclaiming to all that final authority should not be in the church and its traditions but in the Word of God.

In Switzerland, another young man, just twenty-two, began preaching the gospel of faith rather than works. An organization was soon begun in Switzerland which was even more radical against the formal church than in Germany. Civil War followed, ending its work soon after young Zwingli was slain.

The work went on, however, and soon found a leader in John Calvin, the great theologian of the church whose "Institutes of Theology" published in 1536 when he was only 27 years of age, became one of the standards of Protestant doctrine.

The spirit of reformation swept country after country—Denmark, Sweden, Norway, France, the Netherlands and England—borne invariably on the shoulders of young men who stopped at nothing in their zeal to do the will of God.

In Scotland, Queen Mary instituted the bloodiest persecution of all time against the Protestants, yet John Knox, a young man on fire for God, became so influential that Queen Mary said she feared nothing but the prayers of John Knox.

By the end of the sixteenth century, every country of Northern Europe west of Russia had broken away from the Medieval church.

Again, young men had changed history.

Youth Leads the Modern Church

The modern period of church history is best typified by the Wesleyan Revival of the eighteenth century and the missionary movement of the nineteenth century.

The Wesleyan movement was actually begun by a group of students who formed a "Holy Club" at Oxford. Leaving Oxford, these students went to all parts of England and some to America spreading revivals wherever they went. John Wesley, in his early twenties, began preaching his powerful message of revival. His brother Charles, wrote hundreds of hymns which, until this day, stir the church.

In the early nineteenth century, a young man only eighteen years old grew concerned about the heathen of the world. One day this young man spoke to a group of ministers and asked during his discussion, "Whether the command given to the apostles to teach all nations was not obligatory on all succeeding ministers to the end of the world?"

One of the ministers cried out furiously, "Sit down, young man! When God wants to convert the heathen, He'll do it without our help."

That man was William Carey.

Shortly after this, Carey led in the organization of the Baptist Missionary Society and went to India as a missionary. Since his death, thousands have followed his example, preaching the gospel to all nations. Today, he stands as the father of modern missions, another young man who changed history.

I could go on-and-on, reminding you of the famous men of God who, in their youth, changed history.

But do consider these two things: First, the secret power in the lives of these young men resulted from their willingness to be instruments for the spreading of the gospel. And second, "only God can know what miracles might take place in your life if you will surrender your life to the service of Christ." —the Y. P. Messenger

SKY PILOT

WITH THE HELP OF A PIPER CRUISER, NORVAL HEGLAND SERVES SIX COUNTRY CHURCHES.

AWAY in the distance there is the drone of a motor. Then an airplane circles the little country church, dips its wings and glides down upon the red-flagged landing strip. A lanky young man jumps out from the cockpit. Brief-case in hand, he strides across the field to greet parishioners waiting on the church steps.

"Sky Pilot" is a term which applies in a very real sense to the Rev. Norval Hegland, an air-minded young pastor who learned to fly and then persuaded his Home Mission Board to allow him to put that knowledge to use. For the past year and a half, he has been working out his dream in an air parish on the fringes of the South Dakota badlands.

The original mission-supported air parish was made up of five widely scattered churches. Circled in red on Pastor Hegland's flight map were Morristown, Isabel, Rosebud, Firesteel and Slim Buttes. After one year, Newell was red-penciled too. With six churches in the parish, the project became self-supporting. By taking to the skies, Pastor Hegland has surmounted the difficulties of distance and rugged terrain, and has found it possible to carry on an intensive ministery in these six churches, each too small to support a pastor by itself.

In his three-passenger Piper Super-Cruiser, the pastor flew 40,000 miles during his first year in the air parish. The airplane which enables him to carry on his unusual ministry was a gift from the young people of the South Dakota District Luther League.

Only once has Pastor Hegland been forced to miss a scheduled service. A blizzard kept him grounded that time. However, four times he has faced an empty church at the end of his flight because roads were impassable.

The sight of the red and buff airplane taxiing up to the church door or across the pasture on a visit to a ranch home always creates a stir among the children of the parish.

"I make use of their aeronautical interest, too," grins the pastor. "When their attendance record is good, I take them up for a ride." In fact, when he offered the young people airplane rides for selling subscriptions to the church magazine, they brought in more subscriptions than there were people in town.

The pastor's wife, Margaret, and three children, Paul, 5, Mary, 4, and Ruth, 1, are all air-minded too and enjoy flying with him. The youngest, Ruth, has already chalked up more than sixty-five flying hours in her first year of life.

A thirty-three foot trailer is the Hegland's home during the summer months. This enables them to move about and spend some time with the members of each of their churches. During the winter, they live in the parsonage at Newell.

The air parish has prospered. In one year, the flying pastor has been able to lay the groundwork for an effective long-range ministry among the isolated ranchers in the large territory he serves. For example, Sunday schools have been organized where there were none before; young people's groups and adult instruction classes have been formed; seven weeks of vacation Bible school were held.

Having proved by experience that his air parish idea is practical, Pastor Hegland says hopefully, "Perhaps now more young men in the ministry may be given the opportunity to serve from the skies."

was performed October 8, 1950. Gerhard Peters has been serving this congregation for over two years. He was installed as Minister in November, '48, by Rev. Sam Goering. He and Ervin R. Wedel of Jackson, Mississippi, who is a member of this congregation represented this Church as delegates at the General Conference. The Ladies Mission Society packed two big boxes of clothing for relief. Mr. and Mrs. Peters represented the Church at the Oklahoma Convention at Talequah, Oklahoma, September 29 to October 1.

—Emmanuel Church, Moundridge, Kansas: Our church observed the 75th anniversary of its organization Sunday, October 1. Programs were held in the forenoon, afternoon and evening. Donivan Smucker, Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago, was the guest speaker for the afteroon and evening. A history of the church was read by our pastor, Garman H. Wedel. Reports by various church organizations and boards as well as individuals who recalled some pioneer life of the church were given. Music was furnished by the church choir, children's Sunday School classes, men's quartet and mixed octette.—Mrs. Garman H. Wedel, Corr.

—Arlington Church, Arlington, Kansas: During the absence of our minister, John F. Schmidt, on August 20, D. C. Wedel of Bethel College gave the morning message. Pastor Schmidt was also absent September 10 and 17 when Lamont Woelk, student at Bethel, was our guest minister. Funeral services were held in our church for Mrs. Amelia Ewy of Halstead, September 20. She was formerly a resident of this community.—Mrs. Lester Ewy, Corr.

—Buhler Church, Buhler, Kansas: September 10 our congregation had a Mission Festival and farewell service for Missionary Harold Ratzlaffs. Sam Goering brought the morning message, and Mr. and Mrs. Ratzlaff spoke. At noon we had a fellowship dinner and in the evening the Ratzlaffs showed moving pictures of India. The total collection for the day was a little over $500, which will go towards the purchase of a film projector for the Ratzlaffs to use in India. September 17, Mr. and Mrs. George Neufeld showed us moving pictures on Africa.—Mrs. P. J. Neufeld, Corr.

Beyond Our Own

The Quakers have always been a peace-loving people. Now for the first time in history a group of them are planning to leave the U.S. because of their peace-loving convictions. A group of about 25 are leaving their homes around Fairhope, Alabama, for Costa Rica, where they hope their lives will not be tied in with military economy.

In Cleveland, Ohio, from November 28 to December 1, there will be a great gathering of church men and women for the Constituting Convention of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. This is to be a merger of eight interdenominational agencies, some of them more than fifty years old. These agencies are: Home Missions Council of N. A.; Foreign Missions Council of N. A.; International Council of Religious Education; National Protestant Council on Higher Education; Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America; Missionary Education Movement of U. S. and Canada; United Council of Church Women and United Stewardship Council.

Recently some 77,000 members of the Jehovah's Witnesses gathered in New York city for a world wide meeting. They came from 48 states and 68 foreign countries. They baptized over three thousand converts in a rented swimming pool. They also released their own translation of the New Testament.

Joe Louis, in his recent loss of the heavy-weight championship, won $102,840 for his evening's effort. Many a minister will preach a whole life-time and scarcely earn that much. Something is wrong.

A great ten-ton bronze Freedom Bell is now touring our country in a "Crusade for Freedom." This crusade will close on October 24, when the Freedom Bell will be dedicated in Berlin, and a world-wide bell-ringing ceremony will be broadcast from there. The inscription on the bell reads "That this world, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom."

Billy Graham's six weeks revival in Portland, Oregon, drew great crowds and closed on Labor Day with an attendance of 30,000. Total decisions were nearly 10,000, a large majority of these being first-time confessions. Graham started another campaign in Minneapolis on September 17, and another is planned for October 29, in Atlanta. The American Broadcasting Company has just arranged to have him speak on the radio, beginning November 5.

A study of 2,000 students in both church and non-church colleges shows a woeful lack of knowledge about religion. More than half of them spell "prophet" as "profit." A great majority cannot list the Ten Commandments; nor name the four gospels, nor give even approximately what Jesus gave as the two greatest commandments. The conclusion is that the average lege student is "almost illiterate" about the rudiments of Christianity.

Book Notes . . . . Youth and Christian Citizenship

YOUTH AND CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP. By Melvin Gingerich. Herald Press, Scottsdale, Pa.

CHRISTIAN young people in our day are in particular need of help in thinking their way through the labyrinthine problems and heavy pressures which are apt to prevent them from coming to Christian conclusions in many areas of life. This book is an excellent attempt to furnish some such help. The author states that "the purpose of this book is to help our youth recognize that there is a 'Christian patriotism' in which they can believe sincerely and to which they can give themselves wholeheartedly and for which they need make no apologies."

Dr. Gingerich, who is the author of the book, is a churchman who has worked in the field of education. He was a high school teacher for 15 years and a college professor for 17. Thus he has been in close touch with the adolescent mind, and one senses that in this book he is dealing with what are the real problems of Christian young people.

This book of 200 pages is divided into fifty chapters, averaging four pages to the chapter. And each chapter deals with a different citizenship problem, or with a particular facet of some problem. Thus the material is well adapted for use in Youth Fellowship or C. E. meetings, or in discussion groups of other sorts. There is a freshness and clarity about the presentation which adds to the usableness of it.

A number of chapters in the book deal with problems related to the Christian view of government. In a day when criticism of the government is too glibly given it is heartening to have someone pointing out the values which we receive for the taxes which are paid, the benefits which accrue to us because of the many governmental regulations, and the common integrity of government officials.

In several other chapters Dr. Gingerich helps the reader to understand how it is that a person who refuses to participate in warfare is not really a second-rate citizen nor deficient in patriotism, but is really, in Biblical terms, "the salt of the earth."

Other chapters set out the Christian attitude on "Conserving Nature's Resources," "The Color Line," "Religious Liberty," "Honesty," "Communism," "Strengthening the Family," and "The Problem of Leisure." And then of course, there are many others of an equally vital nature.

Through all of these discussions runs the conviction that Christian young people dare not form their conclusions on the basis of majority opinion or current practice. The mind of Christ is the norm which is sought.

This is a volume which parents of young people will want to have in their homes, and which adults also will profit from reading.

Correspondence Opportunity

A foreign correspondence agency in England has requested names of young people in Canada and the U. S. who would like to correspond with a youth in England. This opportunity will interest many who are unable to use a foreign language in such letter exchange. If interested, write to M.C.C., giving name, address, sex, age, special interests, and specify that a correspondent in England is wanted.

Is it Right

Is it right to build churches to save men's souls, and at the same time to license shops that destroy them?

Is it right to license a man to sell that which will make a man drunk and then punish the man for being drunk?

Is it right to license a man to make paupers and then to tax sober men to take care of the paupers?

Is it right to license a saloon to breed vice and then tax people for schools to teach virtue?

Is it right to derive revenue from a traffic which scientists, medical authorities and educators cannot defend?

Is it right to manufacture and sell a commodity that steals away a man's brains and makes him a murderer on the public highways?

Is it right for our government to abet and support a civil enemy which killed in the two years following Pearl Harbor more Americans than did the Germans and Japanese combined?

Is it right to allow one and one-half million tons of grain a year to be made into booze, when the world is hungry?

Is it right for the "law" to punish a man for a crime which he commits after buying and drinking the stuff which the "law" (licensed "taprooms") sells him?

Is it right to license the sale of a product which, according to J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the F.B.I., is the basic cause of 80 percent of all crime?

Is it right for a Christian to go to church on Sunday and pray for God's blessings upon the nation, and then go to the polls on election day and vote in favor of the nation's greatest saboteur and enemy—alcoholism?

If the church is right—the liquor traffic is wrong.

If the liquor traffic is right—then the church has been wrong through all the ages.

General Lewis B. Hershey, the blunt-talking director of the draft in World War II, who is again marshaling the nation's civilians for war, said in an interview that war is legalized murder and indicated the U. S. is not too well prepared for it.

"Last year," he said, "we had 7,000,000 killers and another 7,000,000 to back them up. But the killers are old now, 32 or 33. Many of them are used up, burned out, in spite of brilliant war records."

"There's a peacetime classification for a killer," he continued. "Men who fall into that category are anti-social. Except in wartime, homicide is an illegal profession."

OUR PEACE BASIS

THE FRANK expression and conviction of one conscientious objector as found in an article in this issue is somewhat condensed from a longer treatise. It merits our careful consideration. Is our conviction on this matter something that can be added to or omitted from our main religious beliefs without affecting our whole life? If so, it is not deep enough. Nonresistance is the natural outgrowth of our concept of love. Love is the basic principle of our religion. So the ideal of peace is not an impractical ideal but the most real and practical concept in the world.

The argument is often brought that the method of love and peace will not work in our complex age. This is admitting that God, who is love, is not as strong as guns and bombs. This is saying that hate is more powerful than love; that evil must be overcome by more evil instead of by love. It is time we awake to the fact that atomic love is the only force that will bring the desired results. The universe and the nature of man were so constructed that nothing else will work. If as Christians we actually believed this, and staked all on this belief, we would have found the solution to our problems.

Our basis for peace must stem back to the nature of God, who himself is love. It grows out of the life and teachings of Jesus. It follows from our concept of the sacredness of the personality of man. It is not an appendage to the Christian faith but the very foundation. It is not a negative attitude to be proclaimed in times of war, but the positive, outgoing expression of love in all our relations of life.

THIS GADGET AGE

THE CENTRAL conference ministers met recently to evaluate some of the basic beliefs of our faith. It was a profitable meeting. It would be well for ministers generally to arrange such meetings where our common beliefs could be carefully restudied. We all need frequent inventories of our beliefs.

One of the themes of the meeting referred to was that of the simple life for this complex age. We talk much about the simple life, sometimes quite vaguely. But we live in a very complex age. When is our life lived simply? Where does the simple life start and where does it end? Is it an outer form or an inner spirit? How much can we be bound up with things? In how far are we justified in adding the numerous gadgets to our life? We cannot get along entirely without the material things of this life. It might be safe to say that when things are means to a higher end instead of an end in themselves, they are useful. A life is complex when there are confused goals and motives pulling in opposite directions. We need a clear and simple purpose before us, and then laying aside the weights that would hinder us in attaining that high Christian goal, we must "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus".

Paul kept his life simple. He could say, "this one thing I do," whereas many of us would admit "these forty things I dabble in." Paul also gives us a good rule to follow: "Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

DON'T STOP NOW

THE program of Voluntary Service and its support must not be allowed to dwindle down, but should pick up both in volunteers and in contributions. The government thus far has seen fit to defer men of draft age who were conscientious objectors. This very fact should spur us on to undertake worthy projects of real service. Here is an opportunity to show to the world that our convictions on peace and good-will are genuine and sincere. While others are being drafted to be trained as "killers," we should have many volunteers to demonstrate the power of love in voluntary service. And those who may not be able to take up such service should give hearty and sacrificial support to such projects.

It may not be generally known, but our whole Voluntary Service program is at present deeply in need of funds. Unless churches and individuals respond liberally to this cause, it must be retracted. This wil never do. Our peace testimony must not be a negative one of things we will not do, but a positive demonstration of helpfulness and service. We should not wait till we are again forced to work out some form of civilian service under the government, we should show now a positive expression of our Christian peace convictions. Don't stop now with the fine work of voluntary service!

A POSSIBLE SOLUTION

IT has been somewhat alarming to note the gradual decline in church contributions, while at the same time prices keep going up. The dollar is not what it used to be; how well we are aware of this when we make our purchases. But we may forget this fact when we plan our contributions. Since the dollar is worth less than formerly it will take more of them to keep the work and service of the Church at its best. This is not a time to decrease our support for missions, relief, voluntary service, peace, education, publication, and all the other needful avenues of church work.

Perhaps we need to approach this problem from a slightly different angle. Instead of ministers pleading for more funds, they might preach more on the great themes of stewardship and tithing. There is a biblical method for supporting the work of the church. Individuals and churches that practice tithing, not only experience the joy of faithful stewardship, but also meet the needs of church work. Those that go beyond tithing in a systematic plan of stewardship enter still deeper into the joys of their Lord. The preaching and faithful practice of Christian stewardship will supply us with all the funds we need to carry on the great work of the Church.

Witnessing Christianity

J. B. Wiens*

THE twentieth century is an epoch-making century. Seldom have we witnessed such decisions in world history, as in this period. The enemies of God are mobilizing their strength and are preparing to make a decisive and final assault against the Lord and His Anointed. In Christendom there is the feeling that the coming of the Lord is drawing nigh.

It is very essential, therefore, that every believer and every congregation regard it as their sacred obligation, to be true in their service to the Master, to labor and pray as though the ultimate outcome depended entirely on their efforts. Christ emphasized the whole range of man's influence in the words of the Sermon on the Mount when he said: "Ye are the light of the world." His Church shall be a testifying and witnessing church. The motto of the Standard Oil Company: "Let the light shine in every corner of the world," is indeed significant. The spiritual application of these words expresses the unmistakable thought, although in other words, that a Christian should take the torch and be a light-bearer in the darkness of the world.

Scripture testifies of John the Baptist: "John did no miracle; but all things that John spake of this man were true." John testified before all men, that Christ was Lord, and many believed. In opposition to the atheistic forces, we want to be like a mighty rock in the ocean, that stands in spite of the surging waves that may dash against us. To acknowledge Him in word and deed is our pleasant task, and, with the help of God we can give a real testimony for Him. Testifying is to invite man and to bring the message of Salvation to them. Andrew first found his brother Peter. . . and led him to Jesus; Philip findeth Nathanael and said to him: "Come and see" and thus, beginning with Andrew, Philip and John the Baptist, the true witnesses for Christ, stand as pillars on which Christ builds His church. The martyrs of each age and also of the twentieth century are not only witnesses in word, but with their whole life. "Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses," who in their time and before the whole world represented Christ with such readiness and joy, should this not challenge us to do likewise? This we endeavor to do here in Vancouver and, we trust, others in their places, where they might be assigned to labor by the Lord. May it also be said of us, as Jesus said of Mary: "She hath done what she could," and also "Enter into the joy of the Lord."

The following gives a vivid illustration of what a witness should be. One evening two ships rammed each other in the fog on the Thames River; many drowned and some were saved. Two witnesses were called into court. The first one said "I heard the crash about 6:00 P.M. It was time to quit work and go home. I did not bother about the mishap." In stern voice, the Judge said: "Shame on you." A second witness was called. He said: "I heard the crash and anticipated a tragic mishap, jumped into the water, loosed a boat and rowed to the scene and saved as many as the boat would hold. Again I went into the fog and brought others safely to land, and I went a third time to save more. If I only would have had a larger boat to be able to save all!" The Judge said: "You did what you could; more is not expected."

In the same manner God regards our life and efforts. He does not expect us to do more than our boat would hold.

(Translated by A. J. Neuenschwander. In a concerted effort, this church brought fifty new members into the fellowship of Christ up to Pentecost of this year).

Quaker Peace Testimony

WE wish at this time to reaffirm our belief that all war, no matter how apparently good the cause, is contrary to the spirit of divine love as seen in Jesus, and that to those who seek to live wholly in this spirit and have felt its life and power war is utterly denied. We believe that in these days especially, war is not even an effective method of national defense and that those nations, our own being no exception, which rely on it will perish by it. We conceive it to be our duty, therefore, both as lovers of Christ and of our country, to urge all men to listen as never before to that divine love which is present in every heart to consider whether it does not command them to abstain, at whatever personal cost, from participating in this evil and disastrous course.

We are humble before the spirit of truth, and we do not presume to limit that spirit as it moves the hearts and minds of men in ways that are not ours. But we invite all men, whether of our persuasion or not, to ask of themselves the following questions:

1. Do we believe that all men are equally children of God, and that he cares equally for all, whether Americans, Russians or Koreans?
2. In our conflicts, do we really care about the people with whom we are contending?
3. Are we fighting for our enemies as well as against them, that they may come into a fuller life and knowledge of truth?
4. Are we fighting merely because our national pride is at stake, and is this a motive worthy of children of God?

America has sought to create a world in which she can live at peace. But she has tried to do this by making men afraid of her weapons of destruction. In so doing she has become herself the victim

Anchors of the Soul

H. E. Nunemaker *

This is an age which tries the soul. The press and radio keep before us the repeated crises through which the nations are passing, causing the most staunch to be fearful of the morrow. Yet this is not a situation peculiar to our times except that today there is an accumulation of crises which overwhelm us. Every age has faced them in a greater or lesser degree.

The twenty-seventh chapter of Acts portrays a crisis in a graphic way. A vessel was caught in a fearful storm in which the sailors were helpless and despaired of saving their lives. They prayed to their gods but received no help. As a last resort they cast out four anchors to avoid being driven upon the rocks which were ahead. In that group was the Apostle Paul who passed through the same experience, yet with a calmness and assurance which enabled him to be of service to the others. In verse 23 he tell us of an experience which served as a four-fold anchor for his life and enabled him to outride the storms.

H. E. Nunemaker, Pastor, Silver Street Church, Goshen, Indiana

The first anchor was faith in God, an anchor which not only the world but Christendon also needs desperately. It must be remembered that faith is more than believing certain things about God, important as those beliefs may be. Belief is that on which faith acts. Faith is the next step, that of placing one's trust in God. How can it be secured? It does not come as an inheritance. It cannot be transmitted by another. It is strictly a personal matter and must be wrought out in each individual life. It will be gained as was that of D. L. Moody. As he related his experience, he prayed much and earnestly for faith expecting that some day it would come down and strike him as a bolt of lightening. But nothing happened. Then one day he read in Romans 10, "Now faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the word of God." "Then," he said, "I opened my Bible and began to study it and my faith has been growing ever since."

The second anchor was that of the sense of the presence of God. "There stood by me this night" in the midst of the storm One who is not touched by the wind and waves and is not affected by the fears that paralyze man. The Apostle could speak with assurance when he realized that God was constantly at his side. And he could be confident of His presence now, in the time of adversity, because he had made Him his constant companion in the times of prosperity. His was not a crises companionship. It was a lifelong fellowship. Here, I believe, lies often the difference between a greater faith and a wrecked faith when adversity comes. When God is a constant Companion all of life assumes a different color.

The third anchor was rooted in the Apostle's consecration to God. Many years before this he had given himself to God, with no other desire than to serve Him. It was the passion of his life to be where God wanted him to be. Then when opposition came and the stones fell about him, or when the waves tossed him about, he was not troubled. He was posessed with an inner peace in the assurance that he was in his Lord's service. Contrary to human reasoning the supreme joys of life are found in this way rather than in selfseeking.

The fourth anchor is closely related. It was the anchor of unselfish service. "There stood by me —Whom I serve". His consecration to God was expressed in a self-consuming interest in his fellowman for whom Christ had given Himself. In that service he was misunderstood, falsely accused, beaten, made a prisoner and was now in great physical danger. Yet in it all his own comforts and dangers assumed minor proportion through his absorbing love and interest in his fellowmen.

We are, I am assured, often cowards because we are selfcentered. It is natural to be interested in one's own things. But when that becomes the absorbing interest in life we have built on a very unstable foundation which can be swept away by the tide of misfortune. When there is no compelling vision of service for our Master, when we have not lost sight of self in service for others, we have no cause greater than self to steady us when adversity comes.

There are times when we seem to be victims of circumstances, when we are helpless, unable to alter the conditions under which we must live. If we would come through those experiences with poise, not a slave but as a conqueror, we will need the steadying influence of these anchors in life.

WITNESSING CHRISTIANITY

of fear and has lost all freedom of action. A handful of men in, shall we say, Moscow or Korea or Berlin can pull the strings that jerk us into action, can impel us to submit our young men to military enslavement through conscription, can impel us to destroy by our own hand our religious and political liberties. And all this because of our reliance on force and fear. But there is a spirit and there is a power that liberates from this fear. It is the spirit of truth that makes us free, of the love that casts out fear. This spirit we have known in our own lives in measure suficient for our needs. To it we call you all." —A statement by the Ann Arbor, Michigan, Meeting of Friends; in Gospel Messenger.

Why I am a Conscientious Objector to War

Harold Buller*

I. BECAUSE SALVATION FROM SIN THROUGH WHICH WE ENTER INTO THE KINGDOM OF GOD WAS BORN OUT OF NON-RESISTANT LOVE ON THE PART OF GOD.

I AM a member of the Kingdom of God. As such, my first duty before my king is to work for the establishment of that kingdom in the hearts of many more people who are in need of Him. But God did not use them to establish His Kingdom of Love.

First He created man who was to love and serve God. But man sinned against God and immediately started on a downward path of scornful rebellion toward God and of envy, hatred and murder toward his fellow men. Sin brings punishment—but not because God glories in seeing His enemies suffer. He started a plan by which He wanted to win people back to Him by love, not by force.

So we read in Rom. 5:8, "But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners (v. 10 calls us God's enemies), Christ died for us." In the sixth verse of the same chapter, "For while we were yet without strength (spiritually weakened by our rebellion against God) in due time Christ died for the ungodly." The natural result of sin is death, yet the words of John 3:16 tell us that God in His love gave his Son that we need not perish but may have eternal life.

As a member of the Kingdom of God which was established in this way through love, my every action must be geared to service in that Kingdom to the end that others will want to enter it too. My every action must be such that it can be consistently steeped in non-resistant Love by which God saved me if I want to further God's Kingdom among men according to the principles by which He started it and by which it has been kept alive for thousands of years.

II. BECAUSE JESUS LIVED A NON-RESISTANT LIFE

Jesus is my King who has given me everlasting life. He established the Kingdom in which I have this life and to which I as a Christian want to give my first and highest allegiance at all times. He has set all standards for His Kingdom by his own life and teachings.

When the prophets, who were looking forward to the revival of God's spiritual Kingdom under the Messiah, spoke of Christ, they heralded Him as a Prince of Peace in a Kingdom of peace. Isaiah proclaims that strife among men is to be done away with because such a One who is "The Mighty God" has been given to us. (Isa. 9:5-6). He also speaks of Christ as the meek, lowly and suffering Saviour who is triumphant because He is willing to serve by bearing the sins of men. (Isaiah 53)

When Jesus comes in the New Testament he is exactly the type of Messiah that the prophets foretold. Jesus came "preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye and believe the gospel." (Mark 1:4b-15) When He called men to repent of their sins he showed them personally how He wanted members of His Kingdom to live. He knew of only one way to make those who by nature were His enemies to love Him, and that was to show His love for them. He followed this plan to the very end, even to his death.

Jesus avoided violence to His enemies. He did not resist even though He could have called legions of angels to defend Him. His power was shown to His captors when they asked for Him. Upon His answer, "I am he," we are told that "They went backward and fell to the ground." (John 18:5-6).

Jesus endured mockery, spitting upon, crucifixion, railing from the mobs, and even the challenge of His diety (Matt. 27:27-44) with but one answer: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." (Luke 23:34).

The basis of Jesus' action was a new commandment by which he asked His Kingdom members to live: "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." (John 13:34-35).

With such a challenge as this coming directly from my Saviour and King who lived the same non-resistant life that He asks His followers to live, I feel that as one who is born again I must be a conscientious objector.

III. BECAUSE THOSE WHO FIRST LEARNED OF JESUS INTERPRETED HIS MESSAGE AS ONE OF NON-RESISTANCE AND LIVED IT THUS.

If those who sat at the feet of Jesus and walked with Him as He lived in a sinful world would have patterned their lives along other than non-resistant lines, I would be inclined to think that Jesus was insincere, not meaning what He said. But after having learned of Him, they were thoroughly non-resistant in every aspect of life and taught others to do likewise.

Stephen believed that the Kingdom of God could be best advanced by giving His testimony and then dying for it without a struggle. He followed the steps of Jesus even in the spirit of his final prayer: "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." (Acts 7:60).

The apostles seemed to have no thought but that of joy to be counted worthy to suffer for the name of Christ. (Acts 5:40-42) They asked no defense. They did as Jesus had done, of whom Peter wrote when he said: "Who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously." (I Peter 2:23). They said, "We ought to obey God rather than men." (Acts 5:23). They were true. The testimony of writing which they left us still gives to us the message with which they lived and died. John said, "Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God. He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love." (I John 4:7-8).

*Relief Worker in Europe

For many years after the ascension of Jesus it was taken for granted that Christians do not bear arms. It was only after the church began to compromise with the world in other ways that the soldier-Christian became generally accepted. One historian, J. W. Thompson, writes: "The Church yielded to the world in order to gain support of and acquire the property of the rich and influential pagan aristocracy."

As a child of God, I would like that the principles which were accepted by Jesus' earliest followers should also govern my life. At that time the non-Christian world trembled because of Christianity's rapid growth. Now Christianity too often trem- because it fears the world.

IV. BECAUSE NON-RESISTANCE IS THE HIGHEST EXPRESSION OF CHRISTIAN THINKING AND LIVING.

Anything short of a fully rounded Christian life is below the level of that which God desires for His children. God wants those who belong to Him to live an abundant Christian life. According to Jesus Himself the only basis for such a life is love toward God and love toward man. (Matt. 22:38-40) In the Bible to love is always to give. If I truly love God for what He has done for me through Christ I gladly confess my sins and give my whole life to Him in service. If I truly love my fellow man I desire to give of myself to Him, never asking anything in return. There can not even be a thought for what I do.

According to scripture when love, which is another name for non-resistance, is scripturally interpreted, it soon becomes evident that non-resistance is part and parcel of every phase of true Christian living. Being a C.O. simply means being consistent with this underlying principle of love when war comes along. We are to lay down our lives for our friends as Jesus did. Jesus had no designs to get the other man's life first.

Instead, when He saw another man's need He gave Himself to fill that need. Thus He won His enemies and asks me as a Christian to do likewise. This is non-resistance. To do less than that in any phase of life is below the level of those standards that God has ordained in the kingdom to which I belong. Non-resistance is the highest expression of Christian thinking and living. As a Christian who realizes this, I need to live accordingly, regardless of what may happen to me. Jesus did.

V. BECAUSE GOD TEACHES THAT IT IS WRONG TO TAKE THE LIFE OF ANOTHER PERSON.

Where there is no love human life has no value. But where God's love is present, human life is valued above all else. The value of human life and personality under Christianity is well illustrated in the following quotation: "Owe no one any thing, except to love one another, for he who loves his neighbor has fulfilled the law. The commandments, are summed up in this sentence, 'You shall love your neighbor as yourself.' Love does no wrong to a neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." (Rom. 13:3-10 —R.S.V.)

The prophets' entire emphasis was upon the value of human life in the sight of God as they cried out against the degrading sins in Israel's society that killed the masses spiritually and physically. They pointed forward to Jesus in whose Kingdom men were to live together in peace rather than hate which is basic to war and its murder. When Jesus came He showed men that His was a spiritual Kingdom and called into it all who would respond to His love.

Throughout His entire life on earth He held the value of the individual above all else as He dealt with men. Jesus came to save the individual life from degradation and death. For this reason He did not give up His relationships with the publicans and sinners. For this same reason James and John were not allowed to destroy His enemies (Luke 9:56) by calling down fire from heaven upon them.

If the Bible thus consistently teaches "Thou shalt not kill," I have no right to disregard it. Jesus says, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; that you may be the children of your Father which is in heaven." (Matt: 5:44-45a) To curse my enemy is essentially to kill him. But to pray for him is to recognize that he is of value in the sight of God. If he has value in God's sight he must also have value in mine.

VI. BECAUSE NON-RESISTANCE IS TRUE PATRIOTISM.

Jesus said, ". . . all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." (Matt. 26:52) I believe that the country in which I live will crumble sooner if I take up arms in its defense thus creating even more hate for it in the hearts of those whom I fight than if I approach my enemy as Jesus teaches that I should. The greatest permanent good for my own country can be accomplished only as I do the greatest good for the largest number of people.

Popular wartime patriotism demands that people blindly fight for their country, right or wrong. My country may be right. But if being a good American demands that I hate another people and enlist my utmost energies to kill them, I cannot at the same time be a consistent Christian. Christ taught His followers to do otherwise. Let me apply the methods that work for the good of all men in God's kingdom and I will be a better American.

As a Christian I believe that all standards of patriotism which do not meet up with God's standards are too low. I may not follow them.

VII. BECAUSE I BELIEVE THAT GOD EXPECTS ME TO LIVE UP TO THE HIGHEST AND BEST THAT I KNOW.

Paul says to the Athenians that "The times of ignorance God overlooked, but now he commands all men everywhere to repent, because he has fixed a day on which he will judge the world in righteousness by a man whom he has appointed."

Overcoming Temptations

Hugo Mierau*

(Read this in connection with the Sunday School lesson for November 5. Ed.)

Do you not know that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit within you, which you have from God? You are not your own; you were bought with a price. So glorify God in your body. I Cor. 6:19, 20 (RSV) . . . and you are Christ's; and Christ is God's. I Cor. 3:23 (RSV).

WHEN we settle the problem as to what we belong to, and to whom, then we have solved the problem of overcoming temptations. It is not primarily as to whether we shall do this and not do that, but how we deal with our living souls. Do we belong to the gods of the world or do we belong to the Lord of Life? The Apostle Paul speaking to the Corinthian church said, "You are not your own; you were bought with a price. So glorify God in your body . . . . and you are Christ's; and Christ is God's."

Our lives are to be lived in the spirit of the One who entrusted us with them. Every one of us is God's temple, sent into this world to fulfill a special function. When we conscientiously believe this our only fear will be not to let our Creator and Recreator down. We too are placed between Bethlehem and Calvary. Jesus knowing that he came from God (Bethlehem—Christmas) and that he was going to meet God (Calvary—Easter) took a towel and girded himself and began to wash his disciples' feet. We are to glorify God in our bodies. Apart from this truth and way and life which Jesus has lived and which is with us now in the Holy Spirit, the Golden Rule becomes a joke and meaningless. Especially should we ponder this when our present day is so desirous of power and possessions.

As Henry Thoreau observed men and women being driven furiously by their madness to own things he remarked sadly that men and women live lives of "quiet desperation." We are so busy making a living that we have no time to live. We drive ourselves into a whirlwind in order to possess, and then have no energy to possess our possessions. We have nothing left to live creatively in the Kingdom of God. Thus ill health enjoyed by many chronic invalids is no more than an elaborate disguise for deep-seated fears of losing our possessions.

Do we dominate our possessions or do they dominate us? As Obadiah saw the matter, a man's possessions ought to be a means to "deliverance" and "holiness." We ask, "What will my possessions do for me?" The deeper question is, "What are my possessions doing to me?" Jesus put it straight when he said, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works and give glory to your Father who is in heaven." Matt. 5:16 (RSV). We don't need to shout it from the housetops as to who we are and what we belong to. This is soon discovered by others, what we are really trying to do and what is our main desire in life.

Jesus said further, "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Matt. 6:21 (RSV). The greatest temptation in life to overcome is that we live not by self-efforts but by self-surrenders. Here lies the secret of our lives. To what and to whom do we belong. "You are not your own; you were bought with a price . . . . " said St. Paul. And he said, "and you are Christ's; and Christ is God's."

If we are Christ's then the only true key unlocks us and a life of self-giving and of self-surrendering indwells us. If we Americans can keep busy we believe we have the answer to our temptations. This is good but life has even a greater thing to offer. The writer of Isaiah says, "In quietness and in confidence shall be your strength." (Isa. 30:15). We need to be busy and thrifty and yet to step out of the hurried life of our present day and come apart in quietness and in confidence, so that something can be done for us in the way of Christ. Then we will be ready to do something else for others again. We can only overcome temptations as we surrender the deepest within ourselves to the highest in the world. This is belonging to Christ, "and Christ to God."

The story is told of Louis Pasteur, who became the great scientist of France, living in the days of war. He was a cripple. Often he was ridiculed by his fellow countrymen and told that he was just another mouth to feed. These cutting remarks hurt him so much that many times he would cry bitterly. But one day he told his wife, "I have something to give to France that men with swords cannot give." He gave the world such amazing contributions that this man who was once called a liability to his native land became one of the greatest heroes. There is a definite function for each life in this world.

From what has been stated we conclude that the two most common temptations of discouragment and indifference flee and are overcome in a positive, forward and onward way, that when our whole life (each day) belongs to the Lord of Life as revealed in Jesus Christ we will live to glorify God in our bodies so that yet many may be brought to him and surrender their lives to his kingdom and his righteousness.

M C C News Notes

Plan for Resettlement of Danzig Mennonites

One of the actions in the October 7 MCC meeting outlined a twofold plan assisting in the resettlement of the Danzig or West Prussian Mennonite refugees. In the past it has not been possible to give much resettlement to these people.

Approximately 700 of these Mennonite refugees are to be assisted in movement to Uruguay, as funds designated for this purpose are available. It is hoped that a number may yet be able to enter Canada. The remaining group who are not able to migrate, or who desire to remain in Europe, are to be assisted in a resettlement project in Western Germany. The funds for this are to be made available through Ten-Year Participating Loans. Some support may also be secured from governmental sources. C. L. Graber, of Goshen, Indiana, has been appointed to assist C. F. Klassen in this resettlement program in Western Germany, and is scheduled to sail from New York on October 14.

MCC Discusses Voluntary Service

On October 7, the MCC gave consideration to the Voluntary Service Program in the light of the present emergency in the nation and in the world. Several questions were taken up specifically: (1) Shall young people be urged now to volunteer in greater number? (2) If so, what shall be the role of the MCC in providing projects in an expanded program? (3) How should a larger program be financed? (4) What types of service projects should be encouraged?

After discussion it was felt that these are basic questions to which each of the MCC constitutent churches should give expression; and that the MCC should stand ready to serve the churches in such manner as may then be outlined. A resolution was approved calling attention of the various groups to these questions.

Korea Relief Approved

A relief unit in Korea, to consist of 5 to 7 workers, and relief materials as may be needed, was approved on October 6. Further effort is being made to secure governmental clearance on acceptable terms, for such a relief project.

Plan Ministry to B. A. Mennonites

The spriritual minstry among certain Mennonite families and individuals living in the area of Buenos Aires, Argentina, has been strengthened through the appointment of Martin Duerksen, formerly of the Mennonite Colonies in the Paraguayan Chaco, to assist Nelson Litwiler in this work.

Farm Trainee Program to be Enlarged

The Mennonite Agricultural Trainees from Europe, who have come to the United States to learn agricultural methods and observe rural life in American Mennonite communities, are each to be shifted within the next few months, to a farm in a different locality where they will remain for the remainder of their one-year period in America. This has been planned to broaden and enrich the experience of these Trainees.

The Trainee Program has had a very favorable result, both to the trainees, and also the communities where they have been assigned. On the basis of this, plans for an enlarged program have been approved for next year, to increase the number of trainees to 50. The expense in this program is defrayed by payments made by the farmers for whom the young men work.

Claims of the Gospel

THE GOSPEL AND OUR WORLD, by Georgia Harkness. Abingdon-Cokesbury Press, 1949.

The Author: Dr. Harkness was Professor of Applied Theology at Garret for a decade. Currently she is teaching at Pacific School of Religion. Unique as a lady theologian she is also outstanding in her ability to present the subject matter of theology in language intelligible to student and layman. This makes her books particularly rewarding for the average minister and layman. She writes as an evangelical liberal.

THE thesis of this book is simply that the churches of America, though far from decadent, are doing much less effective work than they might be doing with their resources. The major cause of the difficulty lies in their failure to present the meaning of the Christian faith in terms that seem vital to the common man, i.e., there must be a much closer connection between theology and evangelism.

The author closely examines the assets and liabilities of the present day church seeing among its weaknesses, inadequate numbers, unhealthy divisions, meager financial support, un-prophetic leadership and lethargic congregations. At the base of this is the fact that the proclamation of the gospel is being too feebly done.

She then looks at the state of mind of modern man and outlines what the gospel has to offer him by way of something to believe in and live by. She finds in the Christian message of faith, hope and love an answer to man's sense of guilt, fear, insecurity and his need for fellowship.

Dr. Harkness then proceeds to discuss the minister and the gospel, making an urgent appeal that more preaching be directed to the basic questions that man asks such as, life's meaning, man's destiny, how to overcome sin, the function of prayer, immortality, etc. This is followed by a dramatization of the world in which the layman lives, which world the minister so often fails to enter. Finally the message and claims of the gospel as projected upon the social scene. The book is an up-to-date practical presentation of what the Gospel can mean to the world in which we live.—Orlando J. Goering.

THE RIGHT WAY

SOMEBODY is catching a glimpse of your way through life, and unconsciously going your way, perhaps merely because he knows no better direction to take.

The fatal power of leading others is inescapable. And nobody is so insignificant and commonplace that he does not influence by his example the life of someone else. People do things because others do, more than for any other reason. This is the strange force of crowds, where we are swept along by the cumulative power of example to do what in our sober judgment we never would do.

You are adding to the pile of happiness or the heap of misery; you are shedding light or you are spreading gloom. Your "little nameless remembered acts" are the ones that will weigh the most when the final books are balanced.

BETHEL COLLEGE

FOUNDERS' DAY, October 12, which commemorates the sixty-second anniversary of the laying of the corner stone of Bethel College, North Newton, brought recollections of another era to those still living who were present at that occasion. Dr. P. J. Wedel, now retired, was one of those. Vividly he recalls to us the scene of sixty-two years ago on that Memorable October morning, in an address made at the Golden Anniversary.

"Not a home; not an automobile; not a tree or a garden; not a sidewalk; no hard-surfaced roads; just a goodly expanse of prairie; the basement of the building completed, if I recall rightly, excepting the place which the corner stone was to occupy and now does occupy in the southeast corner of the building; a rather cold, brisk wind blowing; people coming in from all directions until a crowd, estimated at about 2,500 people . . . . had assembled."

The sermon of the occasion was given by Rev. S. F. Sprunger, Berne, Indiana, president of the then Western District Conference, and the ceremony of the laying of the corner stone was conducted by Rev. A. B. Shelly, of Pennsylvania, president of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church. Five years later, on September 20, 1893, the administration building was completed and formally dedicated.

SPECIAL SPEAKERS AT MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

VELS F. S. Ferre of Vanderbilt University, who delivered the E. B. Hoff Memorial lectures here last year, returned on Thursday, attending the afternoon tea and bringing a warm Baptist piety to his brilliant mind and deep commitment to the Christian faith.

Dr. A. Stauffer Curry, Executive Secretary for the National Service Board for Religious Objectors addressed the chapel service on Friday morning. He discussed the current situation in Washington with regard to conscientious objectors, declaring that the overwhelming majority of congressmen are in favor of recognizing the rights of CO's in various pieces of legislation.

J. Winfield Fretz brought the message at the historic occasion when our first church service was held and the steps launched for a regular Mennonite congregation here at the Seminary. We are also happy to announce that Willard Wiebe, on leave of absence from the church in Lind, Washington, has been selected as interim pastor and will serve for the remainder of the year.

We are sorry to announce that our faithful business manager, John T. Neufeld, has had a relapse in his health and is away from the business office taking a complete rest.

Don E. Smucker gave the final address in the Peace Conference being held at Goshen College, October 7 and 8.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

A talent nite program was sponsored by the South girls dorm, October 3, to provide funds to remodel their recreation room. Under the able direction of Mr. C. R. Flickinger who acted as master of ceremonies the program proceeded smoothly and effectively.

Dimitry Markevitch, one of the worlds foremost cellists, will present a concert at 8 P. M., October 24, in Pioneer Hall.

Jottings

MIDDLE DISTRICT

—First Church, Chicago, Illinois: Olin Krehbiel, pastor of the First Church in Berne, Indiana, has consented to come and conduct a series of meetings here. We have directed our prayer meetings to this end. We ask an interest in your prayers.—Corr.

PACIFIC DISTRICT

—Menno Church, Lind, Washington: Mr. and Mrs. Paul Boschman were introduced to the congregation, August 20. Boschman is the interim pastor for Willard Wiebe while he is attending the Chicago Seminary this school year. The Wiebes plan to resume full pastoral responsibilities again in June. Mrs. Boschman is the daughter of M. D. Linscheid, secretary of the Pacific District Conference. They are preparing for foreign mission service. The annual Homecoming Harvest festival was held September 24. Paul N. Roth was the guest speaker for the morning and afternoon sessions. The choir presented several numbers and a fellowship luncheon was served during the noon hour. Mr. and Mrs. Roth planned to visit the other two Eastern Washington churches in the interest of the Mental Hospital. Andrew Shelly visited this community during the month of August in interest of the Chicago Seminary. Those attending General Conference were Mr. and Mrs. Wiebe, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Franz, Adelph Gering, Jake Gering, Malinda Jantz, Joy Belle Jantz and Andrew Jantz. —Mrs. C. C. Claassen, Corr.

—Calvary Church, Barlow, Oregon: Our pastor, Paul N. Roth and Mrs. Roth returned last week from a five day trip to Lind, Colfax, and Newport, Washington. The tour was made in behalf of the King's View Home, Reedley California. Miss Beverly Yoder, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Yoder, is a first year student at Oregon College of Education, Monmouth, Oregon. Weddings during September were: Edna Roth and Roscoe Christner, Glorene Hostetler and James Howard, Gloria Hostetler and Ronald Camp, the latter are twin daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Rolla Hostetler. Four Christmas bundles were sent by the Sunday School class. On October 18, the Women's Missionary Society will pack clothing and shoes for relief. Miss Marilyn Hostetler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hostetler, enrolled this fall as a student nurse at Immanuel hospital, Portland, Oregon. Our society has quilted nine quilts, made several comforters, pillow-slips and many baby garments. At this time we have received over $300 for a kitchen in the church basement.—Mrs. Ivan Learfield, Corr.

WESTERN DISTRICT

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Oklahoma: Recently we were privileged to hear Leonore Friesen, a candidate for missionary work in Japan, speak to us on "How God has so marvelously led and supplied my every need for the field." Her text was taken from Psalms 71:15-16, "My mouth shall show forth thy righteousness and thy salvation, I will go in the strength of the Lord." A large number from our church attended the Sunday School Convention at the Go Ye Mission near Talaquah, Oklahoma.—Wilfred Ewy, Corr.

—Johannestal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Enns celebrated their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary September 23. Henry D. Penner, a senior at Bethel College brought the morning message September 24.—Mrs. Ed. Plenert, Corr.

—Einsiedel Church, Hanston, Kansas: Recent speakers here are E. W. Zimmerman, field representative of the Northern Bible Society; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Fotopulos of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, July 16, who supplemented their message with rock and chalk talk illustrations; P. P. Tschetter in behalf of Grace Bible Institute, Omaha, Nebraska; and a representative of Moody Bible Institute presented "Dust Or Destiny," "Voice Of The Deep" and two short missionary films. One week in August our pastor and Guy Harrison of the Vona, Colorado, Mennonite Church, attended a visual-aid course in Jetmore, Kansas. Brother Albrecht and Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Miller represented our church as delegates to the General Conference. The Mission Society packed and mailed nine Christmas Goodwill packages. At the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Lingenfelder our Sunday School picnic was held on their lawn, September 3. Friends and neighbors of the hosts also attended.—Mrs. W. P. Schowalter, Corr.

—Brudertal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: This congregation observed the 50th Jubilee of Missions in India, September 24. Miss Augusta Schmidt gave the message in the morning, followed by a basket lunch consisting mainly of "curry and rice." In the afternoon a group presented a skit relating experiences on the India mission field and in the evening we took a visit to India in pictures with S. J. Goering delivering the message.—Mrs. Waldo Nickel, Corr.

—First Church, Hutchinson, Kansas: The youth team for voluntary service, consisting of Elaine Waltner, Evelyn Sawatzky, and Bill Lampi, spent a busy week here. Special group meetings were planned—the church council and their families, a workers conference of all S. S. teachers and officers of all other church organizations, a day camp for children was conducted, a meeting with young people of high school age was planned, and together with our pastor they also did some special visitation work. Pastor Sawatzky had charge of the devotional hour over KWHK recently. Our church participated in the Sunday evening union services of the city churches during July and August. Twelve Christmas bundles were packed by our Sunday school. During the absence of our pastor, who attended the General Conference, the pulpit was filled by J. W. Fretz, J. F. Sawatzky and Walter Ediger. Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Plenert and Clyde Dirks, former pastors of this church, visited here enroute to the Conference.—Corr.

Into the Beyond

MISS ELISE HOLLY, Hamilton, Ohio, member of the Trenton, Ohio, Church, was born September 30, 1849, and died October 2, 1950. Her unusual age and great interest in missions and the church were outstanding.

JOHN M. PANKRATZ, born September 12, 1870, in Waldheim, South Russia, was a member of the Alexanderwhol Mennonite Church, Goessel, Kansas, until his death September 23, 1950.

MRS. ELIZABETH (WENGER), Wayland, Iowa, member of the Eicher Emmanuel Mennonite Church, was born October 28, 1869, and died September 18, 1950.

BIBLE No. 188

Eric Fenn

The Story of How After Ninety Years the Bible Was Translated Into the Tibetian Language. This is the 188th Language to Receive the Whole Bible.

TIBET has been for long a land of mystery. Its capital, Lhasa, is known as the "Forbidden City," and throughout the nineteenth century no European was allowed to go there, or, if he got there by stealth, he was expelled as soon as he was discovered. One Englishman, Mr. W. Moorcroft, managed to live there for twelve years disguised, but he left no records. Indian explorers visited Lhasa between 1863 and 1881, but they had to conceal their purpose and their instruments. Missionaries like Miss A. T. Taylor of the China Inland Mission got near to Lhasa now and then, but were always turned back. Only very slowly did this mystery which shrouded Tibet give place to a knowledge of the geography and languages of the country.

Most of Tibet is about 15,000 feet above sea level. The Himalayas form the southern wall, while to the north lies an even mightier range, and then the barren desert of a high plateau. The great river bed of the Brahmaputra runs from west to east for about 800 miles right across Southern Tibet before it turns south to the sea.

Yet for some seventy-five years portions of the Christian Scriptures have been finding their way over the passes, across the rivers, into the homes and even into the monasteries of the country. In 1903 the whole New Testament was published in Tibetan, and now, this last year, the complete Bible is at last available and will be traveling on muleback from China and the east or Kashmir and the west, into the markets and meeting places of the mysterious land of the Forbidden City—yes, even into Lhasa itself. Where missionaries cannot go, this Book will go.

The story of the Bible in Tibetan goes back to 1856, when a little group of Moravian missionaries settled at Kyelang in Kashmir. They had failed to get into Tibet, so they settled as near as they could—about 15,000 feet up in the Western Himalayas, overlooking the valley of the Indus, some 200 miles from the Tibetan border. At first there were only two of them—Dr. A. W. Heyde and Mr. Pagell. Then they were joined by Dr. H. A. Jaeschke, who was to play a leading part in the work of translating the New Testament into Tibetan. When Jaeschke died in 1883 they had established a tiny congregation numbering only twenty-nine persons at Kyelang and an even tinier one at Poo, where six people met for Christian worship; but they had translated almost the whole New Testament into Above is a map on which can be located the places mentioned in this story. Below is what a portion of the Tibetan Bible looks like. It is the 188th language into which the complete Bible has been translated.

Tibetan—only the Epistle to the Hebrews and the Book of Revelation remained.

Just before Jaeschke's death they moved their headquarters to Leh, about 120 miles farther north. Leh was a market on roads leading northwards over the terrible passes to Yarkand and Kashgar in Turkestan, southwards into the northern plain of India and eastwards into Tibet proper. The Tibetan border was only some fifty miles away (as the crow flies, though man must crawl round hills and through rivers); indeed, Ladakh, the district in which Leh lies, is really just a part of Tibet which happens to belong to Kashmir. It was thus an admirable center from which to distribute their New Testament. They set up their printing press at Leh and began.

Soon, however, a great liguistic controversy arose and had to be dealt with. Jaeschke had used "classical" Tibetan for his translation, but Tibet, like most mountainous countries, is a land of many dialects, and people from one district could not understand those from another. The written language—which we have called "classical" Tibetan—was common to the whole country but understood only by a minority. In particular the language of eastern Tibet was very different from that of the west, where the Moravians were working. Missionaries on the China border and in Darjeeling were very critical of the choice of the "classical" language, so a committee was set up representing all the different points of view, and met in 1898 at Ghoom under the chairmanship of the veteran Dr. Heyde. They made a revision of Dr. Jaeschke's translation which satisfied all concerned and it was this version which was sponsored by the British and Foreign Bible Society in 1903.

In 1912 Dr. A. H. Francke, another brilliant linguist, who had joined the little group at Leh, was asked to take in hand the translation of the Old Testament. Unfortunately, he soon had to return to Germany because of a breakdown in his wife's health, but he went on with the work there, with the help of a Tibetan he took back with him. His translations were checked by a committee on the field, and in this he was helped particularly by two men—Yoseb Gergan, the pastor of the little congregation in Leh, and David Macdonald, a trading agent in Darjeeling, who had spoken Tibetan from infancy. Superintended by Bishop Peter, the little printing press at Leh turned out portions of the Bible from time to time, and even printed the first newspaper in Tibetan, The Ladakh Times.

Dr. Francke died in 1930, a leading expert in Tibetan language, religion and customs, and an authority on the archeology of the country. Before he died he had completed the translation of the Old Testament, but there was still much to do before it could be ready for printing.

Dr. Francke bequeathed his work to the Rev. Yoseb Gergan, the outstanding Tibetan scholar who had been his chief assistant. Just before the outbreak of the Second World War the completed manuscript was sent to London, but printing could not be undertaken at once, and the war broke out before it had begun. The precious manuscript was stored for safety in the crypt of Ripon Cathedral. When the war was over, special funds were raised and the printing was sanctioned by the British and Foreign Bible Society's Committee in 1945. It was agreed to do the work in Lahore, India.

The next stage was to write out the whole Bible in special ink and with a special pen on a special paper, so that it could be photographed and reproduced by the litho process. Mr. Gergan decided to do this himself, with the aid of two other Tibetans, Gappal and Phunthsog. By the end of 1945 a large section of the book had been sent to Lahore and the proofs had begun to arrive. In 1946 Mr. Gergan's health began to fail and he had to employ two additional scribes, Stobldan and Zodpa. He died in August 1946, a few days after the work was completed.

At the last moment the whole enterprise almost came to grief. The proofs had to be sent from Lahore to Leh for correction and the corrected proofs returned to Lahore for revision. Most of the journey was by pony or on foot, over great passes and through wild desolate country, through rain and snow and blistering heat. One set of proofs was lost, another so damaged by weather as to be indecipherable. Then came the independence of India, the division of the country into India and Pakistan, and (in 1947) the war in Kashmir. All regular communication was interrupted. Gappal, one of the original scribes, decided to go to Lahore and complete the proofs on the spot. He set out in February, 1948, but the fighting in Kashmir blocked his way. He tried again in March—and disappeared. For weeks nothing was heard either of him or of the precious manuscript which he carried.

Mr. Chandu Ray, the Lahore Secretary of the Bible Society of India and Ceylon, set out in July to look for him, hearing that he had been seen in Srinagar, the capital of Kashmir. After a two-day search in Srinagar, Mr. Ray found him and persuaded him to go with him to Lahore. With some difficulty a permit was obtained for Gappal to leave Kashmir. The two men flew to Delhi, went from there to Amritsar by train, on by bus to the border of Pakistan, walked the two miles between the two borders, and picked up a taxi to Lahore. They did it all in one day. The Tibetan had never traveled except on foot or by horse in his life, and was almost overcome by the heat of the plains after the cold of the mountains! Then at last, in the bishop's house, in a specially cooled room, Gappal sat down to check the proofs. In a fortnight they were done, and in August 1948 he was able to set off for home, carrying one of the first complete Bibles in Tibetan under his arm.

The ninety years' saga was over. But a new one has now begun—the saga of taking this Book over the passes and across the rivers into the market places of the Forbidden Country.

In The Paedegogische Hochschulen

A New Labor of the M.C.C. is the Work in the Student Christian Movement of Germany. Here Are Some Early Experiences.

I ENTERED Germany on June 8, and met Pastor Bannach and his fellow workers at the headquarters office of the Evangelische Studentengemeinde here in Stuttgart. During these months my first responsibility has been to learn: to become acquainted with these leaders of the German branch of the Student Christian Movement, to learn to know more about the individual Studentengemeinden at the universities and Hochschulen (schools of higher learning), and particularly to make initial contacts with the students and professors at the Paedagogische Hochschulen (PH), the institutions in which elementary schoolteachers are trained. This summer semester was in session when I started, and Pastor Bannach, the general secretary of the Studentengemeinde, suggested that I visit as many of these schools as I possibly could before the semester ended about the middle of July.

There are approximately 36 PH's in West Germany and Berlin, in which Protestant young people are trained to be public schoolteachers. Some of these are entirely Protestant in policy and administration, while others are under joint Protestant-Catholic leadership. I visited sixteen of these schools, and spent about one month on these trips. The schools I visited were located in the American and British Zones of Germany.

The factor of religious instruction causes concern to many Christian leaders as well as students. Many of the students know they will not be able to obtain a position as a teacher unless they are equipped to teach the religious instruction which is a regular part of the academic curriculum. For too many of them it means teaching a subject about which they know very little and about which they have no real personal convictions. In some cases, it may even mean that they are personally antagonistic to it. In one PH I was informed that of 118 graduate students, 116 had applied for the examination in religious instruction. I was not too well satisfied with my investigations about the content and methods used in preparing these young people for this important assignment, but I did not want to appear overcurious and prying. The classes which I did attend and the information I received cause me to feel that the concern which has been expressed is justified, but that there seems to be an impotence and a lack of real initiative on the part of the leadership who should deal with this.

My associations with the students in the Studentengemeinde were in every case most satisfying. It was not without reason that in some cases I heard the question (and when it wasn't voiced I noted it in glances): "You are not a German, and you do not even represent the 'Evangelische Kirche'; just why is it that you are working with the Studentengemeinde?" However, I was received with a warm welcome everywhere, and it pleased me to not that they urged me, if at all possible, to join them in some of their future "Freizeiten" (retreats), and invited me to return in the coming semester. I tried to establish contacts with these Christian student groups in various ways in order to become personally acquainted with their activities and problems. I visited regular classroom lectures and seminars, attended the daily morning devotional period, joined them in their weekly Bible study, and also had the opportunity to attend some of the special worship services conducted by the student pastors. At most of the schools a special meeting was called to which the most active members came, and at which time we informally discussed matters pertaining to the scope and responsibilities of the local Studentengemeinde. Some of the questions asked at such meetings were: Why do you have a Studentengemeinde? What is your relation to the local church? How do you try to reach and witness to the students who are not members of the local group? As future teachers, how do you expect to relate your profession to that which is the responsibility of the church and to that which a child experiences in his home? Does the Studentengemeinde aid you in your personal devotional life? This last question brought a startled response from the pastor of one of the groups. He indicated that this was a typical American question and that no one has a right to ask something personal—and to him seemingly intimate—as this implied.

Three times I was invited to join the students in an evening of fun and games, and it was good to see them relax and laugh. This was always a satisfying and pleasant way to meet the members of the group. A number of times I was invited to join a seminar in their discussion, and most of the times they would relate their discussion to a comparison of German and American training of teachers, religious education, philosophy and approach, or American church life. Everywhere I found a keen interest in these matters, but also noted the lack of the most basic concepts for real understanding. The concepts of separation of church and state, of the various denominational characteristics of our American church scene are foreign to these young people. While at Bielefeld I was invited to spend an hour in discussion with a group of young pastors in training (Prediger Seminar), and they revealed the same lack of understanding and appreciation, and underscored the need for their young people to receive a more enlightened and tolerant attitude toward these matters.

My impression is that there is a tendency for the Christian students to divide their life into religious and secular categories, and thus to evade some of the basic factors which must be faced when one determines to be a follower of Christ Jesus. This same tendency can be seen in the Studentengemeinde as a whole to some extent. I would say that the small "core" of Christian students who through home influence have been brought to the place of conviction and experience form the cornerstone of the life in the Studentengemeinde. The weekly Bible study is an important part of the program, and the retreats to which other students are invited are used to provide a more concentrated period of Bible study, relaxation, and fellowship. The "Kurrende," a group of music-loving young folk, gather regularly to learn new songs and to sing for shut-ins in bunkers and in prisons. This is a very real and practical attempt to witness beyond their own borders. Another recent development which I consider as significant in providing the students with an opportunity for practical Christianity is the "Patengemeinde." This means that a Studentengemeinde in West Germany adopts a similar group at some school or university in East Germany and sends food parcels, books and publications, and delegates to these isolated fellow students.

My hope and prayer for this work is that first of all I may be able to challenge these students to recognize what it means to be a Christian teacher. Bible study with small groups will be one of the best ways of doing this. Then my conviction is growing that these young people need to experience the fellowship of the small group, the cell, through conversations, Bible study, and united prayer. Here lies the powerhouse for the vitally awake Studentengemeinde. Finally, and, for me, the greatest challenge lies in the fact that these students see me as an American and as a Mennonite, one who to them represents the free churches beyond the borders of their own "Evangelische Kirche." It is a humbling and yet wonderful realization that I can in this way work toward that spirit of ecumenical understanding and appreciation which we so desperately need in the world today. The Apostle Paul spoke of being an ambassador for Christ, to whom had been given the ministry of reconciliation. II Cor. 5. This, for me, is the assignment that I have received in working with these students of the Paedagogische Hochschulen. —Erna J. Fast

Using God's Power to Cure

THE AA is a fellowship of ex-alcoholics who aim to help fellow problem drinkers to recover their health. The AA groups have no constitutions, no officers, no dues. They take no position as a group on controversial questions such as political and religious issues.

Members of the AA must first of all have had a sincere desire to stop drinking once and for all. Then they took twelve steps to recover from the worst of all diseases. Following is a summary of the steps they took.

They admited they were powerless over alcohol, but they believed that a Power greater than themselves could restore them to sanity. They turned their will and lives over to the care of God as they understood Him. They made an inventory of themselves, and admitted to God, to themselves, and to another human being their wrongs. They asked God to remove their shortcomings and made direct amends to people they had harmed whenever possible. They seek to continue to improve their conscious contact with God through prayer and meditation. Having had a spiritual experience as a result of these steps, they try to carry this message to alcoholics and practice these principles in all their affairs in daily living.

The core of the technique with which the AA works in the lives of men and women is spiritual. They must recognize a Power greater than man. Because it depends on God, Alcoholics Anonymous has been able to help more alcoholics than anything else that has been tried.

All of us felt the evening had been worthwhile and inspirational, especially those of our group who have spent the summer working with problem drinkers.

WHY I AM A CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTOR

I may have been ignorant of God's deeper revelation of truth at a former time. But now that the spirit of God's love has been revealed to me in the life and death of Jesus, I have been enlightened. When God calls on men to repent of former sin He does not mean for them to keep on living in that sin. Those who repent only with their mouths and not with their deeds will find the God of love to be a stern judge when "he will judge the world in righteousness" by Jesus Christ. Paul writes that "we shall all stand before the judgment seat of God . . . So each of us shall give account of himself to God." (Rom. 14:12—R.S.V.)

"Whosoever knows what is right to do and fails to do it, for him it is sin." (James 4:17) God abhors sin. I am a member of his Kingdom. God expects me to live up to the highest and best that I have seen and known.

Beyond Our Own

Last year over four thousand Roman Catholics joined the Episcopal Church. Over a ten year period, 26,242 members of the laity and fourteen priests changed from Catholicism to the Episcopal church. There was a gain of ten Catholics for every Episcopalian that turned Catholic.

Wilhelmina, former queen of the Netherlands, has written a small booklet entitled, Christ, the Unknown, in which she gives testimony to her love for Christ and her experience of communion with Him for many years.

On July 30, Italian Waldensians and French Huguenots climbed to the Alpine crest which is their border between the two countries. Each group carried a great square timber. When they met the two timbers were united into a cross, communion was served, and the cross erected on the border.

The International Christian University is to be on a 350 acre campus at Mitaka, 17 miles northwest of Tokyo. This university is to be: A gesture of good-will from America; a source of strength and inspiration; a means of undergirding and revitalizing the whole system of Christian education in Japan; a notable experiment in higher education; a facility for the study of oriental culture, language and history; and an evidence of America's concern for the development of Japan. Maurice Troyer, Mennonite of the Central Conference is one of the vice-presidents.

Charles E. Fuller, who for twenty-five years has been on the radio in the "Old Fashioned Revival Hour" is soon to appear in a weekly program known as "Old Fashioned Meeting." It will especially emphasize the stories from the Bible.

Thomas S. Smith, prominent Christian layman known as "The Apple King" died recently in Chicago, at the ago of 80. He had been very active in many Christian activities. He was the father of Wilbur M. Smith, professor at Fuller Theological Seminary.

The annual report of membership in religious bodies in the U. S. indicates that 54.2 per cent of the estimated population of the U. S. are church members. Of these 59 per cent are Protestants. This is the highest church membership yet reported, also the highest percentage of population on church rolls.

Fort Wayne, Indiana has just experienced a great revival under the preaching of young Jack Shuler of California. Forty churches cooperated in these meetings along with many other organizations. More than a thousand people came forward for salvation and reclamation. "Ma" Sunday, wife of the late Billy Sunday said "I believe Jack Shuler is more like my husband in his delivery and enthusiasm, than any of the evangelists today."

The American Bible Society has published a special edition of 50,000 copies of the scripture in Korean, containing the four gospels and the Book of Acts. Another 100,000 copies of the Sermon on the Mount are also to be sent to Korea.

The Biblical Seminary of New York observed its fiftieth anniversary this year. Dr. Wilbert W. White, the founder once quoted words regarded as appropriate to the school "Here once again we have an event so unlikely before it happened, so seemingly inevitable now that it has happened, that we do well to accept it as from God." The Seminary was started at Montclair, New Jersey, but after a year was moved to New York.

Something has been happening to the American dollar. Using as the standard of measurement the consumers' purchasing power during 1935-1939 we note the following decline; In 1940 it was worth 99.8 cents; 1941 it dropped to 95.1; 1942 to 85.8; 1943 to 80.9 cents. Then it steadily declined so that in 1945 it was worth only 77.9 cents; 1946 to 71.8; 1947 62.8 and the latest figures 1948 it was only 58.4 cents.

An estimated circulation of the Scriptures in China, covering the last six-month's period to be reported, totalled 578,406 copies, according to the American Bible Society.

THE READER SAYS

Dear Sirs:

In the October 10 issue of THE MENNONITE in the section on the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, the statement was made ragarding Dr. N. E. Byers, that he "was the first Mennonite to graduate from an American college." The Mennonite WHO'S WHO gives his year of graduation from Northwestern as 1898. Dr. P. J. Wedel of Bethel College received his A. B. from the University of Kansas in 1895. I think Kansas had already joined the Union! There may also be other earlier ones I do not know about.

Sincerely,
Roland P. Brown

(Anyone knowing of earlier graduates, please let us know. Ed.)

HOW TO MEET OUR BUDGET!

Dear Sir:

If I recall correctly, it was stated in the Mennonite last year that if every church member gave $10 to the Conference the budget would be met. I do not know how this year's budget would match up with that, but enclosed please find $20 in postal notes for my wife and myself to be applied where you feel it is the most necessary.

Sincerely yours,

WHAT IT TAKES

Do You Have What It Takes?

Under the new Constitution it will take lots of patience to work out all of the new arrangements so that the work formerly done by eleven boards, will now be done successfully by four.

So from the Headquarters, at 722 Main, this suggestion: Be patient. New secretaries are trying to understand the new Constitution. New committees are trying to interpret it. New situations arise, which need to be fitted into the new framework. And it all requires a little time and thinking.

What Will It Take?

It will take patience and planning. It would be the height of folly to rush in and, without adequate consideration, assign this job or that job to any committee at random, else the new situation would be worse than the first—which we tried to cure with a new Constitution.

So, if you have what it takes—patience and planning—the transition to the new constitution will be made smoothly—but it will have to be made in time. It will not happen over night. Almost daily special committee meetings are being held at the Headquarters office—and every day some progress can be seen. Let us be thankful for the progress that we do see and be patient until we see that which we don't see—at the moment.

Editorials

UNTO THE LEAST OF THESE

THE article in this issue on serving the Lord with projects is a sane presentation of the need of practical Christian service as a natural outgrowth of our love and good-will. It is one thing to say we love the Lord, but it may be quite another matter to actually engage in such service as shall be of real help to our fellow-men. Fortunately, there are many projects whereby we can prove our faith by our works.

Our relief program has always greatly interested our people. In the early days of our history we were extended relief at various times by the brethren of Holland. Now that we have such wide opportunities to do good unto others in this way, it is but fitting that we should respond generously.

But there are other projects that should claim our interest also. The voluntary service projects offer great possibilities. The aid of displaced persons; assisting refugees in finding new homes; freedom from race discriminations and prejudices; all these are practical ways of expressing our good-will toward men.

It is the outgrowth of an inner relationship with God. As we are found in His will and plan, we express our love for Him by loving our fellowmen. Call it projects, works, fruits of the spirit—the main thought is the same. Religion is a two-way experience: it is a matter between us and God, but it must also manifest itself in our attitude towards others. "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen."

THE OLDEST MENNONITE CHURCH

RECENTLY the editor was privileged to worship in the Germantown Mennonite Church, the oldest Mennonite church in America. The present building was erected 180 years ago, dating back to the time before the Revolutionary war.

It is an impressive experience to worship here and to partake of the Holy Communion in the same place where our forefathers have served God for so many years. Both the changing and the changeless things come to mind. What a change in material progress, the spread of transportation, the television as noted throughout Philadelphia—all this is new and in strange contrast to what must have been the early history of the Church.

But when one enters the stone building and shuts out the noise of modern ways of the world, there is much that is the same as in its early history. The same hunger and thirst for God; the same need of a forgiving Savior; the same simple Communion service, in remembrance of Him; the worship in song and praise; these things do not change. The heart still needs God and is restless until it can rest in Him.

SATURDAY NIGHT

DOES someone feel moved to write a strong article on "The Christian's Saturday Night?" In former days Saturday evening was used as a preparation for Sunday. Work was quit earlier than usual, the Sunday School lesson was studied by the family, preparations were made for the Lord's day. But today it is different, and for many Saturday night extends into the early hours of Sunday. A noted bishop recently said at a large convention, "good Christians should go to bed early on Saturday night." Here is a simple statement to be considered soberly. It is unfair to God to be less rested and alert on Sunday morning than on our regular week-day mornings. He deserves the best of our mind and strength.

GOD, THE ARTIST

THE beautiful coloring of the leaves in Autumn makes us think that God must love the beautiful. Else why such gorgeous colors and flaming sunsets. Sometimes we overlook this side of God. He is not the God of the drab and the ugly. He makes the flowers, the gay colors of the leaves, the bright blue skies, to bring beauty into a world meant to be beautiful. He is the supreme Artist, and man has not been able to paint such landscapes, or to blend such colors as we see about us in the Fall of the year.

It is to be regretted that we do not appreciate the beautiful more. Man in his selfishness and greed makes the earth ugly. He should cooperate with God in keeping it beautiful. Our lives, too, are meant to be beautiful. "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us."

JOINT STATEMENTS FOR PEACE

A JOINT statement by Jewish, Protestant, and Roman Catholic leaders urges the following five point program for peace:

1. Renunciation of the use of war or threats of force as an instrument of national policy.

2. Loyal adherence to the solemn obligations of the United Nations charter for the maintenance of international peace and security and the peaceful settlement of disputes.

3. Respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all.

4. Participation in positive programs of the United Nations for the common welfare and better standards of life.

5. Acceptance of international agreements for the effective reduction and regulation of armaments, including atomic weapons, by all nations, through a trustworthy system of international inspection and control.

But it is difficult to persuade governments to agree to the above and to stand by them unless there is a solid foundation underneath. The real basis of all true peace must be peace with God and an abiding in His will and love. Here the church must supply what the nations cannot. There can be no true peace where there is neglect of God and His will for all mankind.

Christian Fellowship

J. J. Regier*

Acts 2:42, 44

THE early apostolic church was considered a true fellowship. A fellowship in the sense of a marriage contract where the husband and wife agree to a "joint participation" in the necessities of life. This corresponds with the original idea of the Greek word for fellowship (koinonia). Christian fellowship in the early church was a banding together member with member against a common foe. Their fellowship was a partnership to the extent that individualism was obscure. How appealing and yet how obsolete in a twentieth century setting are the words: "And all that believed were together, and had all things in common." Acts 2:44

The key to Christian fellowship in the early church was determined not by what a man does but what he is. Action is but the by-product of a soul relationship. A soul that is anchored in the redemptive and atoning grace provided by God the Father and realized in the person of His Son our Saviour, is a possessor of His spirit, feeding on the nutritious grace and knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. This is heeding the words of Philippians 2:5, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." The apostolic church had in common the spiritual life and the mind of Christ which gave to them the key to Christian fellowship.

The key to Christian fellowship became a sacred trust. This vertical soul relationship in the person of Jesus Christ must now reproduce the mind and life of Jesus Christ in a horizontal, active fellowship. For we read that the apostles . . . "continued steadfastly in doctrine, fellowship, breaking of bread, and in prayers." Acts 2:42. Here are doors which apostles of the early church kept open for they led them to the "store house" of God. However, they were also mutually aware that these were doors which Satan, the arch enemy of a Christian fellowship, was seeking to close and thus curtail the spiritual power and effective witness for God. If these doors of the early church symbolize a spiritual nurture which appears to be basic in maintaining a spiritual, aggressive and influential Christian fellowship, then it behooves us to briefly reconsider these doors as suggested in verse 42.

IN DOCTRINE

First, the brethren continued in doctrine. They had a love for the word of God. It has been well said: "The word of God does not need to be rewritten but re-read." As we depend upon the word of God to bring us to a knowledge of salvation, so we must turn to God's word for growth and strength to meet the tests of life. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Romans 10:17. As we read it, this word becomes a lamp unto our feet and a light unto our path. Psalms 119:17.

IN FELLOWSHIP

Secondly, the apostles of that early Christian church continued steadfastly in fellowship. They had a love for one another. Love is the Christian's insignia. The apostle John testified to that in I John 4:20, "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen." Not to love our brethren is to misrepresent God. We believe that it was the love of God which conceived our salvation. Then it must be that same love which permeates our fellowship and motivates our service. "For it is the love of Christ that constraineth us."

IN COMMUNION

Thirdly, the apostles continued steadfastly in the breaking of bread. They had a love for their absent Saviour. They seem to live in the light of His coming. John confirms this thought in his epistle (I John 3:3) "And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." This expectant and blessed hope and the glorious reappearing of Christ should serve as a moral and spiritual filter in our everyday living. We must stand in attention as heralds of the cross, lest he come and find us sleeping. "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." I Corinthians 15:52. Might we not ponder seriously the words of the psalmist: "I have set the Lord always before me, he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved."

IN PRAYER

Lastly, they continued steadfastly in prayer. Yes, they had a love for prayer. Moody once said: "I would rather have power to move the arm that moves the world than to wear the crown of earthly kings." Prayer is more than a formal observance, it can be an actual forge in the believers life. It can be a means whereby we can claim our spiritual inheritance. Such spiritual impartations, however, do require silence before him. Luther must have translated Psalms 37:7 because his experience compelled him to do so. For we read thus: "Be silent unto God, and let Him mould thee." Have not some of our richest spiritual assets come to us when all activities were suspended and our soul learns to be silent unto God?

CONCLUSION

If our witness and service for God is to be spiritual, agressive and influential, then we too must agree on a joint participation in keeping open these doors through a mutual exercise of the entrusted fellowship.

He who cannot bear misfortune is truly unfortunate.

History of Pawnee Rock Mennonites

Max Smith

THE Pawnee Rock Mennonites are of original Dutch stock. Their forefathers emigrated to Germany from Holland because of early persecution. Frederick the Great in 1772 promised them among other things, freedom of worship, exemption from military service, etc. It was not long, however, before some of these privileges were denied, so in 1786 the Empress of Russia agreed that if they would settle in her territory they might make their own laws and govern themselves in a limited way for 99 years. They were to be exempted from military service and have freedom in religious practices. So again they moved to a new land. This group, however, did not move until 1802. Jadweldinine was the name of their village. Although there were quite a few farmers among the immigrants, many of them were linen weavers, dairyman, lumber sawers, and day laborers.

The Empress of Russia died in 1796, and as a result, they lost some of the liberal policies. It was then they decided to emigrate to America. The Czar was unwilling to let these good farmers go so he decided to compromise with them, but to no avail.

In 1873, Tobias Unruh and others were sent to America to find a suitable place for settlements.

This having been done, the Mennonites sold out for almost nothing, many of them not even having enough money to pay for their passage to America. Late in November of 1874, they sailed from Antwerp on three ships. It took the Nederland 17 days, the Vaderland 21 days, and the Abbotsford collided with another ship and docked at Liverpool. This delayed its arrival. During the trip an outbreak of smallpox was suffered.

They came here as the special charges of the Penn. Aid Committee. Abraham Siebert and Tobias Unruh were leaders of the group. So just before Christmas in mid-winter three ships of immigrants landed in New York. Seemingly no provision had been made to take care of them through the long winter, so about 30 families were unloaded at Great Bend and Pawnee Rock where they lived in immigrant houses and box cars until spring. J. P. Dirks was the first child born after the group reached its destination. He was born in a boxcar on the siding at Pawnee Rock.

With the coming of spring, they began to hunt about for farms. Those who could afford it, bought school land from the government. Others acquired land under the homestead act.

Their homes were made from lumber and sod. They had dirt floors. Among the hardships these pioneers endured were prairie fires, grasshopper plagues, interest on their loans at the rate of 36 percent, a selling price of 50 cents per bushel for wheat, 5 or 6 cents per pound for butter, 5 to 10 cents per dozen for eggs. In contrast to the prices which they received for their products was the price which they were forced to pay for flour—$6.00 per 100 lbs.

The first meeting places of the Mennonites were at the District 48 school house, the home of Jacob Base, and the Dundee stone school house.

There were 75 names on the list of first members of the church. The names appearing most frequently are such as Schmidt, Unruh, Dirks, and Siebert. Names which appear on the church charter are J. B. Schmidt, J. J. Schmidt, B. H. Unruh, P. H. Dirks, and S. P. Smith.

The first baptismal services were conducted by Rev. Stucky from Moundridge. The first candidates were Ernest Smith, Susie Wedel, Daniel Unruh, Caroline Base, S. P. Smith.

In 1897 they built a frame church building for $2500. The site was donated by J. P. Wedel. Equipment included factory made seats, coal stove, hand made pulpit. They remained a mission church until 1909. In 1915 the present brick building was built for a cost of $15,000. It was dedicated on December 19. Speakers were T. F. Balzer and P. H. Richert.

Complete organization of the church seems not to have taken place until 1900, when it was also designated as the Bergthal Church of the Mennonites near Pawnee Rock. The church was connected with the congregation at Canton until 1895 when P. H. Dirks was ordained Elder and in 1896 they became a member of the Western District Conference, and also became independent.

Bible School was organized in 1903. J. B. Schmidt was the teacher. At first it began after district school was out and lasted two months. At present the church conducts from two to four weeks of Bible School.

Ministers of the Congregation have been Abraham Siebert, Jacob Koehn, Tobias Dirks, David Schmidt, Peter Dirks, J. B. Schmidt, and our present minister, John Kaufman.

LOOK! Do people actually live there?"

On the deserted shores of a once-flourishing fishing industry, our eyes behold the framework of an old sailboat, not more than fifteen feet in length. Old rotten boards nailed together in the shape of a box have been placed on the boat to form the four walls of a house. This is "home." A small window allows a bit of morning sunlight to enter. To get to the door, one must go up a five rung ladder. There it stands on a heap of rubble—brick and mortar which once formed a lovely brick house —and home.

We knock at the door of this little boat-house. A young man and his wife appear at the little opening. Their care-worn faces speak of much suffering, and present trial. We get a brief glimpse into

Serving the Master through Projects

Mrs. J. S. Schultz*

FOUR questions may be considered: Why projects? When projects? What kind of projects? And Who shall do them? For each one of these questions I think we can quote the Bible and find an answer.

WHY PROJECTS?

In Ecclesiastes we read: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might." We know what a blessing and promised reward there is when two or three are gathered in his name. The blessing is just as great and meaningful if there is unity in work as if there is unity in prayer. We know that any group of Christian women will not undertake any planned work in any other manner than in a prayerful manner. How much more power there is when a group is united in doing some task than if a few individuals try each by himself to do the same thing. No matter what our mission-minded groups undertake, it is always for the purpose of helping others, be that in missionary phases, in relief phases, or any other Conference undertakings. We know this: "Whatsoever ye do unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye are doing it unto me."

Another answer for Why projects? is that "By WORK is faith made PERFECT." Not by teaching, not by Bible knowledge, not by a lot of memory ability, not by being on important committees in the church, but by WORK is faith made perfect. Jesus pointed out: "Not everyone that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

A great many of us here, I imagine, learned to know Mrs. Ernst Crous when she was here from Germany and visited the many churches in America. She told us again and again how much it means to the women in Germany to see that we are making things with our own hands. They are simply overwhelmed by the love and the generous giving of time and energy which is evident in the quilts and comforters and clothing that have been sent to them. We must continue in this work of love and do what our hands find to do "with all our might."

WHEN SHALL WE SERVE THE LORD THROUGH PROJECTS?

Always, not only during the war, when the need is greatest and when we must do something in order to keep our minds in the right channels. Not only when the needs of others shout at us from every direction, but when there is quiet suffering. "He that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." And has there ever been a time in our lives when we did not know about the needs of some whose need we could not meet alone but which could easily be met by a united effort? If our religion is not practical, if we remain self-centered, if the troubles and problems of others leave us cold, if we can feel at ease when our own needs and those of our loved ones are met, we are still in darkness. So when we ask ourselves when shall we serve the Lord through projects, we would say, "Always, for there is always strength in united effort to meet the ever-present need." As Christian women we should train ourselves to become so sensitive to the needs of others that we do not wait to meet those needs till the needy ones beg for our help, but that we are ready even before they ask.

In fact, then we will see so much need that we do not know where to start. But we have our Guide, who tells us "Do good unto all men, but first unto the household of faith." There is no merit in helping those outside our faith who can call the loudest or quote most Bible passages if by so doing we neglect our own household of faith. It is not one or the other. It is BOTH, but first the household of faith. Should we not think of our mission and relief work as belonging to our household of faith? Before we spread out into many directions, we can well afford to ask ourselves whether we have done our part to meet the needs of our household of faith, first of all.

WHAT KIND OF PROJECTS?

We all know that to carry on the work of our various boards and committees and the MCC it takes lots of funds. Money is needed everywhere to carry on these extensive programs. If every Christian would tithe, or practice proportionate giving, all the treasuries for these various undertakings would be filled, but since not many do, we must in many churches resort to some projects which bring in the funds. We need these earning projects and we need the service projects.

We need funds for mission work, for relief work, for migrant work, for Christian education, and for many other phases of Kingdom work. Since the free-will offerings in many churches are not enough to bring in the needed funds, many women enjoy making quilts and selling them, or having food sales, or working in canneries and handing the earnings in for relief or missions; or some pass out dollars and ask the women to earn with that dollar as much as possible in a given length of time, then hand in the earnings for relief and missions. All these methods can be good if done in the right spirit. They have possibilities of double blessings: that of swelling the treasuries for Kingdom work and that of working together in love and understanding.

In contrast to these earning projects we have this other type of project—the service project—which we know must be carried on. God himself worked with his hands when He made this world. Jesus worked with his hands too. Why should not we band together and work with our hands, at such work which has nothing to do with cold, hard cash, but just plain, loving service for the needy? There is a little poem which expresses this sentiment so well:

*In charge of the Ohio Cutting Room. This article condensed from a paper read at the Indiana Women's Missionary Meeting, Berne, Indiana, October 26, 1950.

PRAYING AND WORKING

Lord, when we pray, "Thy Kingdom come,"
Then fold our hands without a care
For souls whom thou hast died to save,
We do but mock Thee in our prayer.
Thou couldst have sent an angel band
To call thine erring children home:
And thus through heavenly ministries
On earth Thy Kingdom might have come.
But since to human hands like ours
Thou hast commanded work divine,
Shall not our eager hearts make haste
To join their feeble powers to Thine?
To word and work shall not our hands
Obedient move, nor lips be dumb,
Lest through our sinful love of ease,
Thy Kingdom should delay to come?

We have all read about the great joy that the Christmas bundles have brought to thousands of children. We know about the school bags. We know about the garden tools, about the soap, Bibles, books, layettes to Africa, the fat, and the foods of all kinds. Think of the many old and new garments that have been sent. We know that millions of garments have been made and sent "In the Name of Christ."

And yet we have those who feel it is not missions if we do relief work. Aren't the two very, very closely related? Who is going to decide when it is missions and when relief? Why is it missions if a missionary gives material aid, and why would it not be missions if a consecrated relief worker gives material aid in the name of Christ. And IF we make a distinction there, who are we to say that one is more important than the other? It is again not "one or the other." It is BOTH. They are both our adopted children, both belong to our household of faith. In serving our fellowmen we are co-workers with Christ, regardless of what area of human need we are serving, and thus that work becomes sacred.

Though we are primarily right now concerned with relief projects, I think we dare not forget that we have another field in which we can work together and which would be strengthened through our united effort. Our Colleges and our Seminary also need our help in many ways; why not work together in making them better able to train the young folks to carry on the relief and mission work of our churches. There is much to be done with our hands and if we do it unitedly, prayerfully, and lovingly our field of service is almost unlimited.

WHO SHALL DO THEM?

Those who approve of everything that has been done? Those who have no fault to find with any of the workers? That would not be enough. That group is too small. No, all those who love the Lord. And who are they? How can we tell who loves the Lord? "By this shall ye know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one toward another." It is not only the women of the church who love the Lord. Perhaps we sometimes miss opportunities of developing zeal for service in our children, young people, and men of the church. Sometimes we do things that would be done better if left to our young people or our men. If others who are willing can do it better than we, then we are not doing our Kingdom work efficiently. I know one church where it was found very successful over a period of years to divide their clothing drives into four phases. The young people do the advertising and collecting of the clothing. The children help with the canvassing. The women do the mending and the packing; and the men of the church do the roping and shipping. This gives work to a great many more people in the church than if the women do it all. Because more work with it, more become interested in it. If we find that our men and children are indifferent to the needs of others, is it perhaps that we as women have undertaken to do what would be done more effectively if done by them? So, when our various committees and boards of the various Conferences suggest working together on some projects, let's do them with all our might, do it whenever there are needs, let us give to bring in funds, and let us work in loving service with our hands because we love the Lord.

MENNONITE MEN For CHRIST

For your organization—as a special feature—suppose you show the film, "Beyond Our Own." This film was shown by the men in the Eastern District Conference and is highly recommended. For details write Walter H. Temple, 1124 North North Eighteenth Street, Allentown, Pennsylvania.

the tiny crowded room—"home." A baby's weak cry comes forth from what appears to us like a bundle of rags. They had everything—but lost all. And the future? America, perhaps. Their faces brighten and we sense the deep longing in their dream. But America—one knows the difficult immigration laws. One knows how few can go and how many wish to go and must remain behind.

May we who have a home—we who have never known what it means to be in need-never forget those who are people like you and me, people wth rights and privileges, hopes and desires the same as ours.

Thinking is the hardest work there is; this may be the reason why so few engage in it.

Bluffton College Bible Lectures

EDWARD P. Blair, professor of New Testament Interpretation at Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, Illinois, will be the speaker for the week of November 12-16. The general theme of the lectures will be "The Fellowship of the Dedicated," a study of the faith, life, and activities of the New Testament Church. The individual titles are as follows:

What is Christianity?
The Authority of the Christian Minister
The Prayer Life of the Early Church
The Holy Spirit in the Life of the Church (two lectures)
The Social Role of the Church
The Future of the Church (two lectures)

EDWARD P. BLAIR
Professor of New Testament Interpretation. Garrett Biblical Institute

Dr. Blair is a native of Oregon. He has studied at Seattle Pacific College, the Biblical Seminary of New York, Yale Divinity School, and the American School of Oriental Research, Jerusalem. Before going to Garrett, he had taught at Seattle Pacific College and The Biblical Seminary in New York. He is the author of a book, "The Acts and Apocalyptic Literature."

BE TRANQUIL

WHEN you feel like saying something that you know you will regret, or keenly feel an insult, not so easy to forget, that's the time to curb resentment and maintain a mental peace, for when your mind is tranquil all your ill thoughts simply cease.

It is easy to get angry when defrauded or defied, to be peeved and disappointed if your wishes are denied, but to win a worthwhile battle over selfishness and spite, you must learn to keep strict silence, though you know you're in the right.

So keep your mental balance when confronted by a foe, be it enemy in ambush or some danger that you know. Be self-controlled and tranquil when all around is strife, and know, my friend, you've mastered the most vital thing in life.

M C C News Notes

Volunteers are Assigned

The eleven young people recently enrolled for a year of Voluntary Service, have been assigned as follows: to Topeka State Hospital, Kansas; Esther Christner of Iowa City, Ia. and James Millen of Quarkertown, Pa.; to the Industrial Home School Annex, Washington, D.C., Melita Derksen and Lena Teichrow, both of Abbotsford, B. C. and Ruth Anne Lichti of Deer Creek, Okla.; to Bethesda Hospital, Vineland, Ont. Hubert Loewen of Hillsboro, Kansas; to Brook Lane Farm, Raymond Goossen of Dinuba, Cal.; to Gulfport, Miss.; Vern Jantz of Odessa, Wash. and Elmer Wall of Mt. Lake, Minn.; to MCC Headquarters, Akron, Pa., Mr. and Mrs. Menno Nisly of Hutchinson, Kansas.

Another group of volunteers will be enrolled on Nov. 17, for a one-month period of training after which assignments will be made for the remaining eleven months of the term. Additional applicants will be received for enrollments in this, and possible later groups.

There is Work for Deferred Men

Conviction has been expressed that now is the time for deferred young men to make a witness through some type of constructive sacrificial service. Inquiries have also been made on what is being done by the MCC and other church leaders to make such service possible.

The MCC and a number of Mennonite conferences have precisely such project openings now, and have had for some time. Workers, particularly men, are now needed and can be used without developing new voluntary service projects. Anyone feeling constrained to volunteer for service to bear testimony to the nonresistant belief, should apply to either the MCC or the conference leaders.

Concerning the Draft

A number of men who have been in Class I-A or in the Army Reserves have recently asked for help in securing recognition as conscientious objectors. Unfortunately they did not make known their CO position until after they received their physical examination or even order to report for induction. All possible assistance is given to such men.

It should be made very clear, however, that men who delay to make their position clear, through negligence or other reasons, place themselves in an extremely difficult problem. Men who for some reason now hold Class I-A, or are in the actice or inactive Reserves, and mean to take the CO position, should immediately take steps to clear their position, and should under no circumstance wait to make their convictions known until they receive their call from the Local Board or the Reserves headquarters.

Relief Workers Needed

A number of workers are needed to replace those whose terms are being completed, particularly persons for work among refugees, various teaching and counselling services, and other duties. Areas of service are Europe, the Middle East and the Far East.

Uruguay Settlers Make Progress

With the construction of additional houses, at least three completed and twelve more in process, the housing situation in th Uruguay settlement, El Ombu will be alleviated. For a time about 100 families have been living in one community building.

The land has been divided into 30 parcels, with three families responsible for each. Almost each family has a cow and many have chickens. Agricultural implements sent from North America arrived last summer in good condition. Many of these items have been assembled and put to use. In some cases their use needs to be dapted to soil conditions, available draft power, etc. Many of the tools are owned communally, although the aim is to have each group of families own its equipment and livestock.

LETTER TO CAESAR

Dear Caesar:

For a good many years we've been on fairly good terms. You have always been wanting something of mine and usually I found a way to give it to you.

Do you remember that day, almost 2,000 years ago when the scribes and priests tried to trick Jesus? They asked him whether it was right to pay tribute to you. You were mighty unpopular in Jerusalem then. But he took one of your coins and pointed to your image. Your name was on it. So he said to give to you what is yours, and to God what is God's.

I've never been sure whether you were happy about that answer or not. A number of my fellow Christians found it a convenient formula for giving you just about anything you asked for. But I recall that most of those early Christians didn't give you much. They were too poor to carry many coins. They refused to join your armies. They wouldn't even burn a little incense at your altars when you wanted to be worshipped. And you took their lives but they didn't give them to you. And in spite of you, they grew stronger and stronger.

But later on you began to get the best of them. You signed up with them and then soon you got control. Their high priests blessed your wars and you paid them well for the compliment.

Now, Caesar, it's been a little harder for me to work with you than for some. We never did think it was right to go to war. Sometimes you let us go our way, but sometimes you wouldn't excuse us. You asked us for our coins, more and more of them, and because they had your picture on them, we paid up pretty well. And then you put your hands on our sons. Even when you couldn't get them to put on your uniforms, you still told them what they could and couldn't do. Well, we lived through that. I remember when you took some of our farms and moved a few of our churches to make room for your operations. We didn't like it, but you paid us (with our money) and so we tried to bear it.

But, Caesar, you've gone a little too far. When you ask our boys of seventeen, fellows hardly out of high school, and when you say that this time you won't even try to train them to be gentlemen, but that you're going to make "deadly killers" out of them (I'm quoting one of your men), then I object. Next you'll want the girls and already you're bidding for control of our minds. No, Caesar, I'm beginning to think we've already given you what really belongs to God. And he comes first. You can't make our boys into "deadly killers" without taking their souls—and they belong to God.

From this time on, Caesar, I'm going to be very careful in responding to your demands. Perhaps I owe something to you. But I know that I owe everything to God. He comes first.

Sincerely, if not too respectfully,

—Gospel Messenger

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

REGISTRATION of students at Canadian Mennonite Bible College began Thursday, September 28, and enrollment of new and former students reached 43. To be assured of balanced study-programs the students were aided by Rev. Arnold J. Regier, Dean of Curriculum, and others of the teaching staff.

The following Friday a Fellowship Supper was held at which Rev. H. Wall, Acting President, spoke a word of welcome to the students. Classes commenced on Monday, October 2.

On October 8, I. I. Friesen, Dean of Men at the College, served as guest speaker in Alsen, North Dakota. His topics for the three services were: Thanksgiving, Missions, and Evangelism. He was accompanied by Mrs. Friesen, and also a male quartet which rendered appropriate messages in song. All were graciously accomodated by Mr. and Mrs. Dan Regier, home pastor at Alsen, Mr. and Mrs. D. Bartel, and Mr. and Mrs. J. Toews.

Work started by the College Evangelism Class under the direction of B. Toews, was resumed this week. Renewed attempts are being made to contact as many Mennonites as possible throughout Winnipeg, and to personally invite them to church. May God richly bless this undertaking.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

BIBLE Lectures, Ministers' Conference, Women's Missionary Conference, and a special academic conference in which various Mennonite colleges will participate, are all to be held on the Bluffton College campus during the week of November 12. Also during that week the Board of Trustees of the college will hold its semi-annual meeting. On Wednesday, November 15, the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges will have a meeting at Bluffton. This will be a busy week, but one of great inspiration. You are invited to share this inspiration with us.

During the week of October 22, Harry Yoder conducted special meetings at the First Mennonite Church, Hutchinson, Kansas. Yoder is Assistant to the President at Bluffton.

Homecoming and Parents' Day activities over the week end of October 14 and 15, were very well attended. The purpose of the Parents' Day is to give parents an opportunity to become acquainted with the college and the faculty, thus increasing the cooperation between the home and the school.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

ANDREW R. Shelly, Field Secretary of Mennonite Biblical Seminary, addressed our combined chapel service Friday morning, October 13, prior to his departure for eight addresses at the Western District Conference, Newton, Kansas. His text was from the first chapter of the Second Epistle of Peter, "Yea, and for this very cause adding on your part all diligence, in your faith supply virtue; and in your virtue knowledge; and in your knowledge self-control; and in your self-control patience; and in your patience godliness; and in your godliness brotherly kindness; and in your brotherly kindness love. For if these things are yours and abound, they make you to be not idle nor unfruitful unto the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." Brother Shelly stressed the importance in starting the pilgrimage of faith, but this start, he said, leads on to greater things if we will climb the mountain of Christian experience. The three reasons why people do not start the pilgrimage of faith are that they are complacent and indifferent, they lack confidence, or they do not actually believe in the truths of the Gospel. What he called the barbed wire on the route of the mountain of faith he listed as moral laxness, jealousy, and selfishness, and he urged all of those in the congregation to use their leadership as Christians to help people in the thrilling pilgrimage of the Christian life. In an earlier message this week Professor Marvin Dirks described his summer at New York Biblical Seminary and Union Theological Seminary, he stated his new appreciation for the work we are doing in the combined institutions of Mennonite Biblical Seminary and Bethany Biblical Seminary.

At the opening church service last Sunday, J. Winfield Fretz, of Bethel College gave a very stirring message called, "A Twentieth Century Colony of Heaven." In this message he urged us not to despair because of the failure of other Mennonite churches in cities; he urged us to be truly a Christian church with all the characteristics which the New Testament gives to a genuine Christian brotherhood; and he proclaimed the deep resources available in the Christian Gospel for those of us who would have a colony of Heaven here in this large city in the twentieth century. It was a fine opening message and we pray that we may have messages of equal power in the weeks to come.

This week for the first time we had prayer meetings in eight different parts in our Seminary campus rather than a single prayer meeting in the large room here in the Seminary.

WESTHOFEN

by Norma Jost

A MONTH ago "Westhofen" was little more than a name —a place on the European Voluntary Service map—which held no unusual interest from the other names such as Kiel, or Darmstadt or Donaueschingen. But during this summer it has come to mean something vital in my life—and I think in the lives of the other people who met there.

Westhofen is just a small German village, like so many in north Germany. It is very old—almost a thousand years. The crooked, cobblestone streets are worn and bumpy. An occasional car comes through the narrow streets, but more often a wagon or a cart drawn by oxen. The houses are old, very old, with typical "Fachwerk" (wooden framework). There is a Protestant church there with its steeple rising above the other buildings as a symbol of a Christian settlement.

Westhofen is in the heart of the intensely industrial section of Germany—that part known as the "Ruhrgebiet." The skyline is dotted with smokestacks and the landscape often spoiled with large heaps of slag. This section is densely populated and the villages seem to melt into each other and often it's difficult to know where one begins and the other ends. This section, the vital pulse of German industry, was heavily bombed, and its big cities—Dusseldorf, Dortmund, Koln—all bear the scars of rubble heaps and destruction. Fortunately our little town was not badly damaged, but it too feels the result of war. Since 1945 it has doubled its population with the influx of refugees, and now every house almost bursts at the seams with people and children who have no other home. They live in small attic rooms, in damp basement quarters—in places which at home one would consider unfit to live in and to raise children.

It was here in Westhofen that the Voluntary Service section of the Mennonite Central Committee decided to locate one of its projects for the summer. Here an organization has been formed so that these refugees who live here may build for themselves adequate and decent living quarters, and after a period of time pay back the debt which they will owe. Our work with them was not only a small help, but also an encouragement.

We who were the first among our campers to arrive in Westhofen came to the schoolhouse where we were to live early one afternoon. School dismissed at 2 o'clock, but we had a full audience remaining to watch every move which we made! By evening the classrooms had taken on a dormitory appearance with some thirty beds and cots. While some left with the jeep to fill the sacks with straw for mattresses, the rest worked to convert one room into a dining room, another into a recreation room, and with our M.C.O. food, the kitchen took on a home-like appearance. By 4:30 we all sat in the kitchen for our first coffee together.

Gradually, as the first days passed, the small camp family grew until we totaled a number of thirty for the remainder of the camp. Our group became more international with several Canadians, eleven Americans, one Czech refugee, a Sumatran, five Dutch and eleven Germans. Little did we realize that from such a potpourri of nationalities could grow the deep and abiding fellowship and harmony which we felt at the end of the camp. Several of our Germans were young miners from nearby Dortmund. Our Czeck had been a political refugee who, with his family, fled the communistic government in his native Prague. The Sumatran chap had quite accidentally met one of our M.C.C. workers in Java. Among our Dutch we had three Mennonites, one from the Reformed Church, and one who is not yet a Christian. Among our Germans were law, theological, architectural, language, sociology and other students. We Americans were also a variety of students, teachers, and a few professional people. Thirty—from six nations—coming together with many interests, but under one banner, "In the name of Christ."

Not all young people come to work camps out of Christian motives. Very often they come out of a hunger for contact with people from other lands. Especially are the Germans eager to learn ideas and opinions of others from the outside world. Some come for the camp experience itself. Some come out of a Christian desire to serve. Therefore, we were astonished when we found that we were a majority of young people with Christian ideals and interests. Those who had not yet accepted the Christian faith were eager to learn, to see and observe Christianity in action.

Six and a half hours of each day we spent working together. Our foremen were generous in their trust of our unskilled labor, and often left us completely unsupervised. A part of the group met each day at Bahnhof (railroad station) to mix cement for the stones, or bricks. All day long they shoveled by hand, mixing the exact ingredients of sand, cinders, cement and water. By pressing this through a "Steinhexe" and letting it dry for three days, were formed the bricks for the house. The other half of the group worked at the house—shoveling, digging a shallow cellar, a few trenches, pouring foundation, and finally laying the bricks. Work often went faster while we were singing or discussing. Each afternoon we returned, sometimes hot, tired, very dirty, but with a sense of satisfaction.

There were days packed full of intense "living." Our evenings and free time were filled with lectures and discussions—"Postwar Germany and its problems"—"Christian Nonresistance"—"The doctrine of the Mennonite Church"—"Dostowjewski the Russian poet." Each week included in it a Bible study, centering with a discussion on the "Sermon on the Mount," which our friend, the local minister led. Extra discussions were sandwiched into the busy days as we felt a need for them. Twenty minutes were set aside each morning for worship and singing, and three nights a week the separate dorms met for their own devotions. Through our own church services and attending the local church, our Christian thinking was stimulated.

An occasional day on our calendar called for an "Ausflug." Our old curious MCC bus, which was nicknamed "The White Elephant" took us to see the Kolner dome, to Bonn to the new Bundeshaus (parliament) and Drachenfels, seven hills overlooking the Rhine and Bonn. In Dortmund we observed steel in the making in one of Germany's largest mills. It was interesting to see the liquid "fire" boiling and bubbling and then being hammered and pounded by great machines into practical articles which would be shipped into the outer world.

With difficulty, we tried to keep one evening a week free. Often campers were invited into homes for tea or coffee or a meal. And for us from the "ausland" it was a privilege to come into their homes and learn to know the people in a first-hand way. Other times were given to social times, bonfires and singing, an American taffy pull or popping corn, or playing an international round of games.

Perhaps one of the most interesting evenings each week was that which we spent with the community. One cannot drop thirty people from the "ausland" into such a small village and not expect in some way to create an intense curiosity over these people. In a German village, a dark-skinned person is always a walking attraction, and people virtually stop and stare. If they knew none of the rest of us, all knew "Jeff" by name. Many wondered about the Mennonites—and so to acquaint ourselves with our community friends, we made one night a "Gemeindeabend." At the first we introduced ourselves, told of these strange people, the Mennonites, told the purposes and motives of Voluntary Service and explained we were there "in the Name of Christ" to help those in need. The people enjoyed, too, the folk songs from different nationalities. A second evening we showed slides of our Mennonite church work, farm life, and life in general in America. We had forgotten to announce this Abend in the Sunday morning church service. That afternoon we placed around town five small posters, but the Gemeindehaus that evening was filled to capacity. After the program, the people always remained to talk with the campers over cups of tea and cookies.

The church bells tolled in our evening Gottesdienst—an eccumenical service with all of our campers bringing the entire service. Noticeably absent in most German, Evangelisch churches are the young people, but they came faithfully to all of our Abends. One lady remarked later, "That shows us what our young people should be doing." Our last evening with the community was a heart-warming gathering. Almost 200 people, no doubt some out of curiosity, joined with us at our work project at sundown, beside the house we had begun. Marijke for the Dutch, La Verne for the Americans, Hannes for the Germans, and Ivo as a Czech, expressed to them our thanks for being taken into their hearts and homes during the month. They in turn returned the gratitude for the help we had given—and again expressed appreciation for the spirit "In the Name of Christ" which had constantly come to the fore during the month. A Posaunenchor played, our camp choir sang. We felt very humbled when we shook hands with people with tear-filled eyes who said they would never forget us and why we came. Others who perhaps did not understand the underlying motives, still could appreciate the fact that young people from America, Holland, and Germany were willing to help them when they themselves did little for their own refugees.

Perhaps best expressing the understanding of the people was a letter which was written to America and was translated from German into English by a friend of one of the campers. This paragraph was given to us to read. "There are Mennonites here in Westhofen. They come from Canada, California and Pennsylvania. They have come to build houses. Well, it is interesting to know that there are still some people who do things out of Christian love." The people of the town were generous in their hospitality, and the ladies from the congregation brought gifts of vegetables and fruits from the garden.

Around our schoolhouse, and ever with us were a host of curious children. Often we felt like the Pied Piper of Hamlin, for when we went anywhere, there were surely a half dozen or a dozen children clamoring to go along. They sat constantly in the jeep, climbed into the window sills and recorded for them and their families everything that happened. But they too were our friends. A group of eighty came twice a week for a Spielstunde. Anneke, Bart and Fritz spent time playing, singing and telling them Bible stories. The last afternoon they had a delightful "Kinderfest" planned. The children came to sing for us, brought us flowers. They were our very good friends.

Of greatest importance to all of us, however, was our own fellowship and camp life. Despite the differences of opinions, in beliefs, we were as one family. In so many ways—in work and perspiration at the project, discussing our religious beliefs, playing, through working together in the kitchen—the spirit had grown. One sensed it keenly during our last Sunday together, at the last campfire on a hilltop overlooking the lights of the village as we sang, prayed and then audibly told what camp had meant to us. The climax to our Christian fellowship came early on our last morning together. At 7:00 those who wished, gathered in our "upper room" to observe the Lord's Supper. Our voices lifted in "Dear Lord and Father of Mankind," several German chorales, and "Take My Life and Let it Be." Serving the groups of four, the minister gave the communion sacraments. Indeed, seeing our friends, a Dutch, a German, an American, standing there together, one in Christ, the truth of the words "In Christ there is no east or west" were revealed anew. It was a solemn, deeply meaningful morning for all of us.

"Love of Neighbor"

DEVOTIONAL TALK ON SUNDAY, SEPT. 3, 1950, AT MCC CENTER, KONINGSLAAN 58, AMSTERDAM

Read: Matthew 22:34-46.

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

When we want to follow this commandment from Christ, we have to realize that Christ speaks about our neighbors without making an exception. So, it means not only the neighbors we love, but also the neighbors who are unkind to us. With the first group it is rather easy because we can expect that the goodwill is on both sides so that our love will be answered by our neighbors. But it is difficult when those neighbors are unfriendly to us, when they hate us, and when they sport with our best intentions.

For our Dutch people, perhaps more than for our American friends, we have to take into consideration the circumstances existing in our German neighbors. We cannot yet forget the things the Germans inflicted upon us in the past years . . . how they have insulted us, starved us, how they simply killed the best of our people. Only slowly the wounds they inflicted upon us will heal and only very slowly will it be possible for us to forget and forgive all this. How difficult it must be for some of us! For Christ demands of us that we should love those people as we love ourselves! Therefore, much strength and prayer is needed to come to that.

For this purpose we must in the first place make contacts again with the Germans, to see things that do not separate us, but which bind us. Therefore, the camps organized by the MCC are of such great importance for Dutch young people because we meet there again Germans and we notice that, at least individually, there is much that binds us and that when we all live with Christ, there is a possibility for going together. Then it will be easier for us to follow this commandment from Christ to "love our neighbors."

If the camps would only have this result, then our work in the camps has not been in vain.

—Rund. Boon

Rund. Boon was a member of the MCO International work camp this summer at Donaueschingen, Germany.

And then it came time to say good-bye. Each train-time our old jeep rolled through the familiar cobblestone streets with its load of campers and baggage. At the station, midst the many good-byes, we sang our favorite folk songs and just before the train came, parted with "My Jesus as Thou Wilt."

The time had gone much too quickly and suddenly it was time to part. Words seem plain and undescriptive when one tries to pass on the feelings that came within one during this month. But perhaps this will help you to understand why this time of learning, sharing, working, praying, singing and fellowshipping made "Westhofen" an experience in vital, practical, present-day Christian living and opportunity.

The letters which have come from various campers tell better, perhaps, than we what this time has meant for us:

"This camp helped me to see in Christianity a reality. The fellowship we created was a great experience for me."

"I am also very thankful for this camp. I received a great deal and I have been moved much more than it might have seemed and more than I could express when we parted. From this camp I had a great improvement for my life. I did mean to express gratitude of our German students by the last fire, but I didn't find the right words to speak them out and I merely thought them within my heart, hoping you might feel them. . ."

"I want to thank all of the other campers for the love, friendship and fellowship I got and felt in camp while we were working, praying, and discussing together. What this meant and means to me I feel now being alone. I often remember the hymn I learned in camp "I need Thee, O I need Thee." I know I can't live without Him. But I know that camp was a great help in recognizing this and also a help for going the Christian way of love, helpfulness and belief. Camp brought me more than one friendship and it was one of the biggest and most important events I had."

"Our living together and working, was really a pure fellowship. . . These four weeks have given me strength for the many difficult days ahead. It has helped to renew my faith in humanity to see that there are still people who want to do good. . . "

And from the minister—"I don't want to speak of the material contribution—I would like, however, to thank you for the enrichment this camp was in our congregation. . . "In the name of Christ" stood throughout the activities. It was wonderful how quickly a real fellowship grew, furthered by the personal contact between the campers and our families. The sign of Christian love which was erected in our midst will remain in the hearts of people of good will. . . "

To God we give our thanks and praise! May His blessing rest on that which was done.

Beyond Our Own

Washington— President Truman wished Southern Baptists and other denominations who are planning for an evangelistic campaign "the blessing of God" in their efforts to bring about a spiritual awakening in this nation. A campaign is being planned for March 25-April 8, with 18,523 churches of 11 states and the District of Columbia taking part.

Bedford, Virginia— Approximately 700 persons from 30 churches planned this years year-round program of the new Bedford County Cooperative Parish, held here recently. One of the main speakers, Rev. James W. Sells, executive scretary of the Southeastern Jurisdictional council, stated during the conference, "As life in rural America goes, so goes America."

Rome—A noted Catholic journal, "The Catholic World," states that the next Pope may be an American. It is significant, that if Cardinal Spellman, the man being considered, is designated, he will be the first Pope in 500 years who is not an Italian.

Please enclose this label when writing.

New York—State weather control has been conceded by New York state farmers now to be both practical and possible. Edward S. Foster of Ithaca, general secretary of the southeastern section of the state farm bureau federation, announced that properly regulated rainmaking would be a great help to farmers.

The Hour of Decision, a weekly broadcast by Dr. Billy Graham, will begin November 5, over the ABC network. Each program is costing $8,000 which he believes his listeners will contribute during his 52 weeks of broadcast.

Billy Graham has just finished a three-week Minneapolis for Christ Mid-Century Crusade with 283,600 persons packing the grandstand of the Minneapolis State Fair Grounds. Total decisions, from all parts of the state, added up to 5,700 during the three-weeks period.

New York—Father Rev. Thomas A. Donnellan of St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York recently explained why free use of Bibles among laity of the Catholic Church is not encouraged, saying, ". . . the Church as guardian of truth, cannot permit each individual to interpret the Bible as he wishes."

Richmond, Virginia— ..A decision handed down by the district court at Charlottsville recently permitted negroes to secure a post-graduate course of study in a state institution, for the first time in southern history. The decree only applied to graduate schools but it is probable that many Negroes will now enroll for graduate or professional instruction in Virginia's tax-supported institution.

Washington— Credit is given to the park police, life guards, department of the interior and superintendent of the District of Columbia police force that no trouble resulted during the entire summer in the city's six interracial swimming pools. Last year the city's only interracial pool was forced to close early in the season because of serious racial disturbances.

Korea—A plea for more missionaries for Korea has been sent out by the Korean Presbyterian mission to the Presbyterian, U.S.A. Board of Foreign Missions. Much of the funds and personnel for the work among the 600,000 Christians south of the 38th parallel before the Communist invasion came from Presbyterian, U.S.A., sources.

Mt. Pleasant, Iowa—More than 12 denominations, 44 states and several foreign countries were represented in the annual meeting of the American Association of Women Ministers held here August 8-10.

Jackson, Mississippi— The Clarion Ledger of Jackson and the Greenwood Morning Star, have both taken an editorial stand for more missionary activities in foreign countries. One newspaper stated, ". . . we spend billions for bombs, but only a pittance for missionaries to promote good will."

Several boards and committees showed good gains during September. Your faithful support of your Conference work is indeed encouraging. We know you will give of your best to help your Conference reach its 1950 goal. Three months yet remain!

Tto each of you again a hearty thanks for your support of your Conference. Each board and committee sincerely appreciates your cooperation; they are deeply grateful for your prayers, your interest, and your gifts. May God bless us all as we share His work together and may He direct our interest and prayers to do His will.

Very sincerely,

LARRY GARA SENTENCE UPHELD

Larry Gara, the former Bluffton College teacher who was convicted of advising a student to stand his ground as a conscientious objector, lost out in the Supreme Court, October 23, by a vote of four to four. Justice Clark, who had been Attorney General at the time of the trial, took no part in the case. A tie vote customarily upholds the lower court decision.

Beyond Our Own

A genuine movement for peace is gripping thousands of Christians throughout the nation. Many are expressing their concern in some plan of united prayer. In a little coast town of Florida, residents offer prayer for peace daily when the town siren sounds at 10 a.m. A quarter million inhabitants of Sacremento, California have concluded the first month of daily prayers for world peace. In Tennessee there is a "Prayer Keys" movement that has already spread to ten states and four foreign countries. Begun in Topeka Kansas a Volunteer Prayer Army is enlisting thousands of members in the midwest. In Washington twenty-eight Senators of both parties recently called upon President Truman to start a total "psychological and spiritual warfare against the Kremlin". Many church groups are asking the president to proclaim a national day of prayer. "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of".

RELIEF WORK—The Church of the Brethren is already preparing for relief work in Korea just as soon as the fighting stops. A part of their program calls for a fifteen-men emergency unit to offer its services to the United Nations in the rehabilitation of unfortunate Korea.

IT IS only eighty years ago that Christianity was first introduced to Japan, yet the gospel has gained a firm hold in the minds and hearts of many of her people. The progress is all the more remarkable, inasmuch as the total gifts for missionary work in Japan, from all American denominations, in all these eighty years, is equal to the cost of only one battleship! —Gospel Banner

PRESBYTERIAN LIFE, the church paper of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. For the second successive year there has been a gratifying decline in the number of divorces in Canada. In 1949 there were 5,911 divorces granted in the Dominion, which was 2,288 fewer than the peak year of 1947 and 970 fewer than in 1948. In Ontario the number of divorces dropped to 2,373 in 1949, which was 734 less than in the previous year and 1,128 below 1947. In 1949 there was one divorce in Canada for every 2,228 people in the country. This compares with one divorce for every 1,869 in 1948 and one for every 1,531 in 1947.—United Evangelical Action

THE THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION

As is done every year, the President of the United States has issued his Thanksgiving Proclamation. Such proclamations may not be taken very seriously by most people, but in the one just issued there are several requests to which the Church should give earnest heed. After the usual setting of the specific day for thanksgiving, the President makes this request: "Again I ask all my countrymen to appeal to the Most High, that the God of our fathers who has blessed this land beyond all others will in his infinite mercy grant to all nations that peace which a world cannot give. I entreat them, in church, chapel, and synagogue, in their homes and in the busy walks of life, every where, to pray for peace."

Two points are worthy of special note: the admission that the world cannot give a lasting peace; and the call upon all men to pray daily for peace. Perhaps the President is stressing something that preachers neglect to tell their people again and again. The world cannot bring real peace; that comes only through the power of God in the lives of men. Neither can real peace come unless people want it so earnestly that they will pray daily for its coming. Surely if Christians prayed everywhere and every day for peace—really prayed—something would happen.

We should heed this proclamation. Thanksgiving Day should be a day of real religious significance and not merely a holiday or a hunting day. We should pray that wisdom be granted in dealing with our fellowmen, as the president also requests; that the peace of God which passeth all understanding and which the world cannot give, should enter into the hearts of men. We should take seriously the request: "every day and everywhere to pray for peace."

TROUBLING THE WORLD

A NEWSPAPER editorial made this comment on the life of Ghandi of India; "He troubled the world with his goodness." In the early history of the church we find the disciples were accused of "turning the world upside down." These quotations would seem to indicate that goodness can be very uncomfortable and upsetting.

The world is already so troubled and upset; should goodness disturb it yet more? Now it is troubled largely because of its sin and wrong living. It has not troubled itself enough in times past about its way of life. Unless we become deeply troubled about our sins we will probably not make much effort to change. Perhaps we need to be still more troubled in heart and conscience until our eyes are opened to the real causes of our difficulties.

It is a fine thing to be a soother of the world. But it may be necessary to trouble the world first. Evil should be very ucomfortable because of our lives. Do we trouble the world by our goodness?

"BLESSED ARE THE PEACEMAKERS"

THERE is no higher privilege that can come to human beings than to be children of God in a real sense. A child has his father's ways and habits, his interests and outlook on life. Jesus says the peacemaker is worthy to be a child of the Heavenly Father.

But peacemaking is not a little trick that can easily be acquired. It is a way of life. The peacemaker does more than dictate terms or set up a list of rules to follow. He does not rely only on agreements and treaties to bring enduring peace. He has such peace within that his very presence in society is a living demonstration of what peace can do and be. He is at peace with God, and his whole life fits into the will of God. He loves God supremely and his neighbor as himself. All his ways are peace because the peace of God is shed abroad in his heart. This is the true peacemaker.

RELIEF WORK CAN BE CHRISTIAN

OCCASIONALLY there is objection raised to the work of relief by saying that it is not our business to try to keep people alive, but to preach to them the Gospel of Christ. The article on relief in this issue gives a good answer to this objection. Relief is not in any way to be substituted for mission work, it is to supplement it. But relief work can also be real missionary work if it is always done "in the Name of Christ."

The question is often raised as to whether relief work is still necessary. Those who have investigated this matter thoroughly assure us that there will be need for help for a long time to come. Such need may not be as acute as at one time, yet it still exists in various forms. "If any one has the world's goods and sees his brother in need, yet closes his heart against him, how does God's love abide in him?"

THE PROOF OF FAITH

MANY a man's best loved book is his pocketbook. We may have a great deal to say about faith, but it is "the faith in your pocket" that is really convincing and brings results. Faith must have an outlet else it smothers. One good outlet is through the pocket-book. Here, too, our actions speak so much louder than our words.

It is so easy to make excuses for not supporting God's work more generously; yet it is so necessary that these spiritual works do not suffer from lack of support. There are so many calls for funds pressing in upon us from all sides, that we easily become bewildered. As a Church and a Conference we have undertaken tasks and obligations that need to be supported. We have launched out in faith that these tasks can be accomplished by the full support of the membership. These are our obligations and should be met before scattering our efforts too widely. It is good to have faith, but the faith must get into our pockets.

NOW or NEVER

FOR years, and even centuries, the day of Christian missions has been extended to the Church of Jesus Christ. Heirs of unprecedented missionary opportunities and blessings, the Mennonite Church today is still considering and weighing the gravity of the call and the open fields before us.

Because our great God of grace is kind and longsuffering to a lost world, we still, slowly and cautiously, enter some of these needy fields while others are discussed and often tabled for some future date.

That our omniscient God does work on time, and that the Holy Spirit has ever directed servants of Christ into ripe and open fields at the divinely appointed time, is evident to those who know the Lord. Of all the tragedies of missionary unfaithfulness, our greatest tragedy today may be that we know not the time.

We need to be awakened to the fact that the Holy Spirit through the prophetic Word and through the moving of Providence today, has, and is, reminding us that the time is short. Surely the evening shadows deepening around us today remind us that "the night cometh, when no man can work." Surely the day is here when we can no longer tempt God by asking more time for missions! We dare no longer play the game of time and chance with our missionary opportunities!

Furthermore, the day is upon us when God will hardly continue His mercy and favor to us as a church unless we stop playing missions. We must give our whole soul and life to this agelong program.

We have been trusting long enough in the dry bones of our missionary professions and organizations. It is high time for us to fall unitedly upon our faces in confession and prayer to the end that the Holy Spirit may put new life into our feeble efforts. It is time to seek the Lord and evaluate His great love and power above our own efforts and equipment.

The day is upon us when this poor sin-sick world can no longer exist upon the few missionary crumbs that the Christian Church has been wont to hand out in rather a mechanical and secondhand fashion. The world needs Jesus and chaos will result unless the world is fed the bread of life. Missions are not our sideline but our highest business and calling.

Now, or never, if the Mennonite Church is to be owned and blessed of God, we must learn suddenly and wholeheartedly, that our Christ cannot be satisfied or pleased with our mere spare time, our surplus, or even all the tithes of our worldly income and prosperity. Tithes and offerings are a part of God's will for us, but tithes and offerings of our luxurious living can never be worthy of our loving Christ, and can never feed the lost world with the bread of life.

We who live in America enjoy blessings and good things that are unique and that are above the average of peoples of any other land. We are heirs to this heritage, not because we have had forefathers who spared a little for us and for God, but who as Christian pioneers gave their very life and blood to honor our Christ and bless the world. This spirit of sacrifice and devotion must now be brought into our mission profession and program, if we are yet to be owned and blessed of the same God who blessed them.

We are living in a day when the god of this world is making his last great campaign for the political, economic, and predominantly, the religious world. Millions of men, and women too, who have been born in our religious homes are sacrificing at any cost, occupations, homes, friends, and future homes, to go anywhere on earth for the program of Satan, the enemy of God and of His purpose to bless the world. As a church we have been giving, directly, or indirectly, willingly, or unwillingly, our millions to support the god of this world in his purpose and program. Is it right?

Shall our Christ at such a time as this be less worthy of our loyalty and devotion? Shall our Lord who loved us and washed us from our sins in His own blood and with His own life purchased for us blessings for time and eternity, be honored less than the god of this world is being honored today?

Surely, not tomorrow, but today we must humble ourselves before our loving Christ, our great commander of love and good will to all men, and say, "Thou are worthy" (Cp. Rev. 5). Thou, O Christ, and Thy great program of love to all the world, art worthy of my life, my home, my children, and all that I have. Take everything, Lord, and use it for Thy church and for the salvation of souls! Dear Lord and Saviour of all, I'll go where you want me to go, I'll trust you wherever on earth you call me to go; though it may cost me friends and home, I will be true to Thee.

WESTERN DISTRICT ORGANIZES

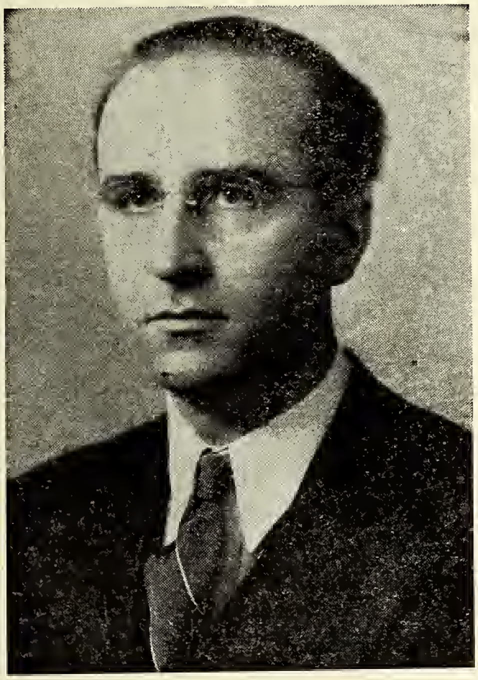
Western District Conference set aside one-half day for a program for the purpose of organizing the men of the district. A Program Committee prepared the outline for discussion and for inspiration. A Constitution Committee prepared a tentative draft of the District's over-all organizations. Elected: President, Clinton Kaufman, Wichita, Kansas; Vice-President, Oswin K. Galle, Valley Center; Secretary, B. Bargen, North Newton, Kansas; Program Committee, Art Goering.

One of the features of the program was a lively, thought-provoking address by Max Schmidt, of Pawnee Rock, Kansas, telling of the possibilities and projects for Mennonite Men.

HUNGRY HEARTS

Walter McDowell*

BLESSED are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." Matt. 5:6. In all of the teachings of our Lord there is a definite note of surety, which gives the reader with an enquiring mind, an assurance that there is One who knows the mind of man; and can satisfy the deepest needs of the human heart. There is in every human being that innate consciousness that he is subject to and dependent upon Someone greater than himself. The mind has a yearning to come into closer contact with that Person whom we know to be God. Those living in heathen darkness do not know what it means to have peace of mind and heart. In their desire to satisfy this basic hunger they expose themselves to excruciating pain or bow to idols of wood and stone, but that which they seek evades them.



WALTER McDOWELL

This heart yearning is not only characteristic of the one living in heathen darkness or the one whose mind has been perverted to believe that God is not a Person but merely an imagination of a disturbed mind. The hearts of those who know God are continuously yearning for a more intimate fellowship with Him. This natural quest for God, however, is not left to follow an undisturbed course to the achievement of rest and peace in Him. The enemy of our souls brings into our path the cravings of a natural heart, sometimes seemingly innocent and legitimate desires. Then with a conflict within the mind, one is often turned from their desire for God and righteousness, to satisfy some secondary objective which our stirred emotions have made us accept as the most important.

There has been no time in the history of our civilization when hearts have been more hungry than in this present time, and in their desperate need many have been deceived to accept some secondary and insufficient method of satisfying their desires. Some are following fanatic philosophies of materialism, which are basically selfish and godless. Some whose hearts have been torn by the sacrifice of fellowship with loved ones called away to serve their country, try to convince themselves that their sacrifice should make them acceptable with God. Others whose hearts are heavy with the burden of sin are told to give themselves to deeds of love and kindness to others, and thus they smother their deeper yearning to be right with God.

How grateful we should be that in our search for heart satisfaction we were not hampered by present day social or materialistic philosophies. To us has been granted the privilege of hearing the answer of God to the cry of weary, torn, and bleeding hearts; "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest" Matt. 11:28. "Ho, every one that thirsteth come ye to the waters—come ye—yea, come," Isa. 55:1. As we follow the leading of the Holy Spirit and feed upon His blessed word, we will find that the Lord Jesus can satisfy the desire of every hungry heart.

The tempests of our life, which at times may drive us in desperation to seek a way of escape, are no more tempestous than the boisterous waves of Galilee, to which Christ merely spoke peace and there was a great calm. The sins of our life certainly can be no greater than the sins of those who fell down at the Master's feet; and He, knowing their greatest need, with words of authority, spoke words of forgiveness, which brought immediate peace. The hunger of our souls can be no greater than the hunger of the multitude whose needs were supplied through His hands and lips. The desire of our heart to come to Him will be fully satisfied according to His promise.

If we hunger and thirst, He will fill our hearts to the full. What a wonderful Savior we have! One who knows better than we ourselves our basic needs and in His love pours into our hungry souls the immeasurable riches of grace. Our load of care, He is always willing to carry. He takes our sins upon Himself, because He went to the cross for that very purpose, and He will fulfill His promises if we will but come to Him with open and receptive hearts.

Don't be satisfied with the philosophy that your heart and soul be satisfied with efforts toward world peace when your own heart does not have the peace of God. Do not be satisfied with programs to meet the economic changes of our

Mennonite Position on Relief and Service

THE Mennonite position regarding relief and service is a part of the particular Christian faith and way of life which has its background and orgin in the Anabaptist movement of Reformation times. This movement, as others before and after, under the providence of God, was a fresh and vital discovery of the living truth and spirit of the New Testament. The experience was so compellingly real that it sought an uncompromising fulfillment of the Gospel in life; it was so powerful that it survived the most obliterating persecution, to persist down to our own times. This heritage, in so far as it still lives in the Mennonite bodies of North America, motivates and guides the service program of the Mennonite Central Committee. Its principles, if accepted and put into practice, become for us in our own time, we believe, a unique experience of fellowship with Christ in loving discipleship and service to others.

1. The central position and authority of Christ and the Bible. While recognizing the hand of God in history and the voice of the Holy Spirit in the experiences of the church and individual Christians, we accept the Bible, particularly the New Testament, as the final authority for faith and action. Relief and service have validity for us only as the motivation, spirit, and methods of work are in keeping with the Bible. We advocate voluntary and sacrificial service because it is enjoined by Christ and the apostles. "If you seek God with all your heart and would not be deceived, do not depend upon men and the doctrine of men, however old, holy and excellent they may be esteemed, for one theologian is against the other, both in ancient and modern times; but build upon Christ and His Word alone, upon the sure teaching and practice of His holy apostles . . ." (Menno Simons)

2. The Christian life as discipleship. The Christian life is a transformed life, separated from sin and the world and consecrated to good works in imitation of Christ. "And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me. He that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it" (Matt. 10: 38, 39). The inner experience will result in outward expression. Christians not only hear but are also "doers of the word." Christian discipleship signifies the total devotion of one's life and possessions to kingdom service. We believe that discipleship includes the welfare of the brotherhood but more especially an unlimited response and continual outreach to the needs of all mankind, both spiritual and material. "Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many" (Matt. 20:28).

3. Relief and service as a Christian witness. As a part of the life and outreach of the Christian brotherhood, relief and service can be a testimony to the redemptive and reconciling power of the Gospel. Because of this conviction, we are concerned about the Christian faith and character of worker personnel. We are equally concerned that the spirit and methods of service and distribution be Christian; that is, that they are spiritual, sympathetic, merciful, without discrimination, and without prejudice. This concern also causes us to use Christian insignia and to speak frequently of the motto "In the Name of Christ." In contrast to some other types of relief, we believe it is important that our own workers be present on the field and represented at distributions. Mennonite relief seeks to be humanitarian plus a Christian witness. Mennonite relief, however, is not mission work in the sense of organized, direct evangelistic appeal to man's spiritual need, but rather in the sense that all of the Christian's life and action is a witness to the Gospel. "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 5:16).

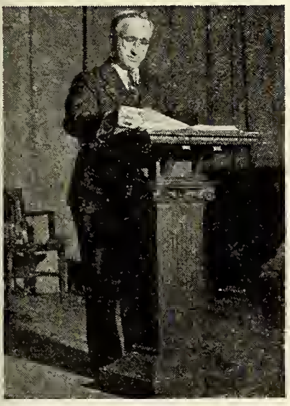
4. The emphasis on Christian love and nonresistance. In common with various Christian groups, Mennonites share the conviction that Christian love and nonresistance are applicable to all human relationships. This conviction finds its basis in the teaching and example of Christ and the apostles. Matt. 5:38-48; Rom. 12:17-21. Relief and service are not only a witness to the way of Christian love but they can become a method of overcoming evil, of reconciling an enemy. "Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good" (Rom. 12:20, 21). Real nonresistance, however, is far more than an intellectual concept or even a doctrinal belief to be proved by Scriptural texts; it is part of a way of life which spontaneously reflects the presence of the indwelling Christ. On the relief field and in service projects love and nonresistance often lead to a special concern for despised minorities, neglected persons, prisoners, political outcasts. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me" (Matt. 25:40).

5. The Christian brotherhood and mutual aid. The Mennonite concept of the church is that of a true brotherhood, a community of believers, as contrasted to that of an organization or institution. The community of believers is necessary to sustain the spiritual life and strength of the believers, to nurture the oncoming generation, to teach new disciples, and to give a corporate witness. We recognize that the brotherhood in itself has no validity except as an instrument of God toward these ends. We believe that we have a primary responsibility, when necessary, to bring relief and service to the brotherhood. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ;" "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith" (Gal. 6:2, 10).—Irvin B. Horst in Gospel Herald.

WE ARE ONE

L. L. Ramseyer

IN our day of a world divided against itself, we are in desperate need of something which rises above all artificial things which divide us, a common standard about which anyone of whatever race, color, or nationality can rally. In spite of all the seeming divisions within Christianity itself it does possess that which can be that unifying element. Its basic principles are such as, if accepted by men, would eliminate social and economic barriers. It is a standard about which all men everywhere can find salvation and a way of life which will bring the maximum of joy in living.



L. L. Ramseyer
President
Bluffton College

358

Basic Christianity can bring unity because it deals basically with what is within man rather than with externals. Because men have within them similar potentialities, Christianity can bring universal unity. Christianity can have this unifying influence in the very areas where disunity and conflict are now most apparent.

1. Christianity recognizes no race or color as superior to another. "God hath made of one blood all nations of men." There are those who would attribute the philosophy of racial equality to communism. That creed does not deserve this credit. They have merely plucked one of the flowers from the Christian garden without taking the roots of the whole Christian doctrine. Essential unity was built into the very creation of men, was taught by Christianity, and is now verified by science.

2. Christianity rises above nationalism. In Germany the writer heard the remark on several occasions, "We are all one beneath the cross of Christ." When we recognize that the Kingdom of God must be supreme over other kingdoms, then we will be reluctant to continue nationalistic quarrels with our Christian brothers.

3. Christianity does not recognize social distinctions. The widow with her mite and the rich man were all potentially the same to Jesus. What He saw was the spirit within them, not the wealth that they possessed. The society of the Kingdom of God is a classless society. There are no socially elite in that brotherhood.

4. Christianity can rise above economic systems. Christianity existed in feudal states, it lives in capitalistic states, and it continues to live in states that have drifted increasingly toward state socialism. The principles of God do not demand any specific economic system, they demand that Christian principles be dominant in any system.

5. There are no educational hurdles to be met in Christianity. Both the unlettered and the highly educated are accepted on equal terms. Whether one is illiterate or the president of a university he must meet the same terms to be a citizen of this Kingdom.

The fact that Christianity has not brought unity is not the fault of Christianity itself. It is because we have not practiced it. Active Christians still display race prejudice, even refusing to worship in the same church with other races. Christians still put the welfare of their own national group above the welfare of all men everywhere. Christians still have feelings of superiority toward those who are not their social equals or are lacking in educational qualifications. Christians still continue to use methods other than those prompted by Christian love in dealing with others.

Christianity can produce a world fellowship. It can be the unifying factor about which all men can rally. If it is to be this, however, men must recognize the superior claim which Christian principles have on their lives, beliefs, and attitudes.

HE DROPPED FIRST A-BOMB

EVER since Nuremberg, we have been asking who is responsible for a given act of war: the man who orders it, the man who carried it out, or both?"

President Truman has manfully taken the responsibility for ordering the dropping of the first atomic bomb. Apparently he has not lost much sleep over the matter, for he has said that he would do it again if he found it necessary.

Not so Mr. Robert Lewis, formerly a bombardier in the United States Army Air Force.

It was Mr. Lewis who pressed the button which brought death to 80,000 people in Hiroshima. Now, according to Le Devoir, a Catholic newspaper published in Montreal, he has entered a monastery because he has "lost his inner peace."

Le Devoir asks pertinently how much inner peace is going to be lost in the next war, and "how many young men will be condemned to blow up whole towns with the hydrogen bomb."

The Faith in Your Pocket

THE official board of First church at Corinth, Greece, had called a congregational meeting to approve the yearly budget. No one present was aware that he was living in the first century of a new era, but it was evident at once that members of the First church, which was downtown in a crowded city, believed in their new faith with all the ardor of recent converts. It was understandable and excusable, therefore, that they spoke their minds so fervently.

It is true that a prolific letter writer of their century liked to call them saints, but what he had in mind was not the stained-glass variety whose unworldly faces were to be suffused with the light that never was on sea or land. These saints were down-to-earth folks with ready wills but sometimes stubborn minds. They had been fooled all their lives by politicians and exploited by rich money-grabbers. It was little wonder they had resolved never to be taken in again, even for the best of causes.

The question before the official board was this: How shall we decide how much we ought to give to the support of the church this year? And Stephanas, whom everybody admitted was a growing member of the First church, cleared his throat as he rose to speak.

"I'm a practical men," he said, and you could see that practical men had a virtue Stephanas admired. "You can always count on me to put a drachma on the plate every time I come. But you don't catch me making a pledge to be paid weekly. These are mighty uncertain times. The Roman Empire is running on deficit financing and—you can depend on it—there'll be a major depression. No, I don't believe in pledging, but whenever I can be here, you can count on my drachma."

He sat down, and all the practical saints present felt like cheering. It was true that the famous letter writer, Paul, who had preacher once in those parts, could never remember whether he had baptized Stephanas or not, but First church, Corinth, was sure, at any rate, that Stephanas had been baptized with a full measure of common sense.

Now Crispus, a man about whose baptism Paul had no doubts at all, rose to his feet.

"I'm for the church 100 per cent," he declared, and everybody knew that here was a man to rely on. "But there is a preacher named James who is a radical. He's written a letter that's being circulated through all the churches, and if his ideas get out into society, he's going to cause a small revolution.

"This church is a new society, and I say we've got to go steady till we get a little stronger. If this radical preacher, James, comes this way, I'm not giving a cent to current expense.

"And then there's Apollos. They expect us to contribute to his support so he can give all his time to Christian work, but everybody knows he can't preach for sour apples—so they've made him a teacher. If the church would only furnish us more men like Paul who baptized me"—Crispus never let you forget that baptism had something special about it—"you could count on my doubling my giving. As it is, you don't catch my money going to the foreign field when we need it right here at home.

"Why, do you know we haven't paid the coal bill for six months, and I don't know what they're thinking of, asking for a collection for the church at Jerusalem when those Judiazing Christians there think they're superior to us! Asking us to support missions, when the interest on the note for the church roof comes due next month. Imagine!"

Crispus sat down. He was the soul of honor—not a man of imagination, but he knew you had to count the cost when you had so many demands. A score of members nodded their heads in eager agreement. Crispus for the moment had carried the meeting.

Slowly a third member, Gaius, a young man with faith and vision, faced the meeting. Like Crispus, he had been baptized by Paul. He was an idealist who knew the missionaries personally. He began to speak with impassioned zeal.

"That isn't it at all," he said, eclipsing Crispus in an instant. "If we don't evangelize, we'll perish. Don't you see—we're all of us products of the Christian mission ourselves, and if we let the coal bill and the interest on the note become the major concern, the missionary advance will be turned into a retreat, the world will die in its sins and never hear of Christ. Every cent of my pledge is going direct to missions. If we don't get the church planted, there'll be some dark ages ahead."

It was at this moment that the friends of Chloe, who was president of the woman's society, precipitated a violent argument about who was the best preacher—Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas (I Cor. 11). One man, who had stood all he could, jumped to his feet and shouted: "I am for Christ!" and bolted out of the meeting, which broke up with everyone's wondering why everyone else had made such a fool of himself.

Stephanas went home muttering darkly that First church had the last drachma it would get from him. Crispus decided he had been pretty well taken in when he agreed to raise an offering for the new church roof. And Gaius, who saw the tremendous need of the Christian mission abroad, decided it was time for him to pull out of this cautious society that couldn't see beyond its own nose, and he resolved to start a new church.

AN IMPORTANT LETTER

It was well that none of them carried out his threat and that their essential fellowship at First church was deeper than anyone dreamed. While they were tossing in their troubled sleep—each of them loving the church in his own way, Paul was writing another letter.

He knew from Chloe's friends in the women's society the story of their cliques. He knew, too, how desperately the world was in need of the lordship of Christ and of a church in downtown Corinth where Christian fellowship would be wise enough to make room for the impulsive generosity of Stephanas, the intelligent caution of Crispus, the businessman, and the impassioned missionary vision of Gaius.

The letter to First church no one would ever forget. When it was read from the pulpit, many a head must have been bowed in shame at the thought of his own impetuous threats. Here was word from a man who had walked half way across the Roman world to tell them of the love of God in Christ.

It was a sarching letter, aware of their sins, but aware, too, of the mercy of God. It soared at last above wise counsel into an anthem of Resurrection that lifted Chloe and her friends, Crispus, and Gaius, and Stephanas right out of their petty lives into a vision of the splendor of God:

Death is swallowed up in victory .
O death, where is thy sting?
O grave, where is thy victory? . . .
Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory
Through our Lord Jesus Christ . . .
Now concerning the collection . . . !
You can easily imagine what happened next.

The people who preferred their inspirations to be maintained in a vacuum all said: "There! Now he's gone and spoiled it all! Why couldn't he leave us in heavenly places with Christ Jesus?"

But those who had the warm, understanding hearts must have answered: "This isn't the anticlimax; this is the mandate of the Resurrection. Sin is meeting its match. God is giving us the victory. Death is swallowed up. Now concerning the collection to advance this victory in First church and throughout the earth!"

Paul told plainly how the members of that downtown church were to support their church. For people who pretend they cannot understand the Bible, here is a word everybody can understand: Our giving is to be systematic. "On the first day of every week, each of you is to put something aside" (I Cor. 16:2). The work of Christ is not to be supported hit-or-miss. It is big business. It is the biggest business in the world.

Stephanas, who gives "when he pleases, what he pleases, where he pleases, if he pleases, and if he is pleased," is a long sea mile away from those whose love for Christ has lifted their generosity out of the realm of their occasional whims.

"On the first day of every week," as the Word of God plainly bade God's people do, they "lay by them in store" to support their church, to make possible a worshipful and clean place of prayer in which to gather, to keep a tight roof and a warm welcome in store for all who came—and to make the same possible for others with more limited means in all the lands.

THE WAY TO GIVE

Those who take the Word of God seriously can plainly see that they are committed to proportionate giving. Clearly we are told to give as God has prospered us. It does not say that when we are prospered, we are to increase our standard of consumption to the point where we toss only our loose change into the collection plate.

Our fathers in the faith took Jesus so seriously that his one passing allusion to tithing, negatively phrased (Matt. 23:23), inaugurated a tithing movement that swept the church into a new day. It was a tithing church that built our great schools, hospitals, and hostels for lepers. It was a tithing church that launched our vast missionary enterprises.

It was in all probability a tithing generation that laid the cornerstones of the church in which you and I worship, and raised up that church to redeem the life in our communities.

When a man's concern for his church grows out of the power of the Resurrection, as in Paul's letter, his faith gets into his pocket, his giving becomes systematic and proportionate.

He can be counted on now, not just for a dollar a week given grudgingly out of a big salary to adjust his income tax, or a fistful of change after a bingo game, but for a man-sized, proportionate share of his income.

The possibilities before the church in this century are unlimited, if we really mean business for Christ. We have a signal history behind us. We can have a more glorious future.

We may have to drop some second-rate things that are dear to us, in order to have more time for worship and more substance to share. But once a genuine Christian stewardship strikes deep into the soul, the Lord will have an opportunity to love a great company of cheerful givers.

day when your soul, which is worth more than the whole world, is hungry for something this world can never give. Hunger is an indication of health. Don't let intellectual or social pride keep your heart hunger submerged in a sea of secondary objectives.

Is your heart hungry? The One who paid for your redemption with His own precious blood, is waiting with outstretched arms, to receive you into a closer fellowship with Him. Why be satisfied with the husks of the world when you can sit at the table of the King of Kings? He will change your hungry heart into a fountain of living water with sufficient nourishment for your own needs and also for others who have not yet found the joy and peace which comes to those who sit at the feet of Jesus.

No happiness without holiness.

100,000 Scholarships Granted Annually

Jewell Casey

DOES it surprise you to learn that each year there are more than 100,000 students who attend colleges and universities on scholarships? Were it not for the $15,000,000 fund disbursed annually, there are many deserving boys and girls who could not possibly attend higher institutions of learning in the United States. Therefore, if you are ambitious to further your education after high school, but do not know just how you are going to manage the financial part, now is a good time to investigate the possibility of securing one of the many, many scholarships awarded annually, and work toward that goal. You may be one of the many to receive a scholarship. Try for one!

Scholarships are usually given on the basis of literary and scholastic ability and attainments, qualities of character and leadership and sportsmanship. Eligibility is decided by scholarship committees and individuals of the numerous colleges and universities. Most schools send a qualified person to visit high schools in the vicinity of the college, to talk with principals and to interview promising young people who show unusual ability in some particular branch of learning or sports.

Inasmuch as there are so many scholarships, it would be impossible to mention all of them. Just a few are discussed in this article to give you an idea of the different kinds.

Practically all of the colleges grant one-year scholarships to the valedictorian and salutatorian of each high school graduating class. So even in the freshman year it is well to keep this in mind and make good grades.

Church and civic groups, including Lions Club, Rotary Club, Optimist Club, Business and Professional Women's Clubs, American Legion, and various lodges are always desirous of aiding local boys and girls of exceptional ability to gain an education that would fit them for careers of leadership and usefulness. One way of doing this is by helping them through college, offering scholarships to those meeting certain requirements.

Philanthropic foundations, such as the Pulitzer Scholarships, give aid to a great many deserving young people. The Pulitzer Scholarship gives to never fewer than forty each year, a stipend of $150 each, available in any American college of the first class.

For those with talents and ability, there are scholarships available. Funds may be lacking, but with application, you can receive the best of training. Now is the time to be thinking ahead and preparing. Perhaps you can receive the training you need by means of one of the 100,000 scholarships.

Rhodes Scholarships, 32 of them, good for two years at Oxford, are given to students in America each year.

General Motors, Pepsi-Cola, General Electric, Westinghouse, American Telephone and Telegraph, and several other big companies give numerous scholarships to advance research in special fields of learning.

For the past five years the Pepsi-Cola Company has been giving each year 4-year scholarships to two high ranking students from each of the United States, to eighteen colored students from Southern states, and to one student each from Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico. Not only does the scholarship take care of the tuition, but it includes transportation to college, and $25 cash per month for incidental expenses.

A science talent search conducted each year by Westinghouse throughout high schools of the nation brings to light many remarkable accomplishments of young people. More than 20,000 students have won Westinghouse scholarships since 1942. To all of those who are selected because of their special ability in science, awards of $2,400 are given. To the next eight best, awards of $400 each are given, and among the next 30, $3,000 is divided.

Annually, General Motors Corporation gives a $5,000 college scholarship to the winner in the All-American Soap Box Derby, and generous lesser prizes to runners-up which which have enabled many students to go to college.

Junior Achievements, Inc., has given many deserving young people 4-year scholarships to colleges of their own selection, because of outstanding work while in high school. A national ice cream company gives scholarships to either boys or girls who save the life of some person at the risk of losing their own lives.

A large electric corporation annually sponsors a contest on time-saving ideas in which 4-H Club members are eligible to compete, and the six top winners are given college scholarships.

Not all colleges and universities have the same rules and regulations governing their scholarships. For example, Southern California University gives a scholarship annually to a descendant of a soldier, sailor, or marine who served honorably in the Union Army. In Cornell, there are scholarships which only Indians are eligible to receive. At Vassar there are two funds to aid in the education of: (1) daughters of Baptist ministers; (2) daughters of college professors.

At Harvard University, included in scholarships made possible by individual donations, are the following unusual requirements for eligibility: (1) Deserving boys who at one time sold newspapers; (2) Students who live in the northern part of Alabama; (3) Any boy whose surname happens to be Murphy!

Only boys who are physically handicapped are eligible for certain scholarships in Princeton University, as are "sons of Pennsylvania Railroad employees."

It is interesting to recall that some of our greatest scientists, lawyers, teachers, doctors and musicians owe their start to scholarships. Yet it is much more thrilling to read of teen-agers who have only recently won various kinds of scholarships. A few of the outstanding are as follows:

Seventeen-year-old Roger Nelson, of Spring City, Utah, amazed scientists with a color camera he patented. Not only did he receive a Westinghouse scholarship because of his camera, but he also received scholarship offers from 210 colleges.

Dwight Taylor, of Altadena, California, another science scholarship winner, collected 120 different species of mollusks off the New England coast, whereas only 46 had been known before. His survey furnished valuable information about climate changes on the island, and won for him a scholarship to any college of his choice.

Louis Hanson, high school senior of Helena, Montana, won a 4-H Time-Saving award, which was a college scholarship. By studying time and motion spent in using wood or coal cook stoves, and by replacing the same with an electric range, she showed an annual saving of 99 miles of walking.

Irvin Herman, of Middleton, Ohio, was given a 4-year, $1,200 a year, Editors' Scholarship from Junior Achievement, Inc., because of outstanding work he did while editor of a newspaper run by and for teen-agers. Upon graduating from college Irvin has awaiting him a good paying position on Junior Achievement Magazine.

Boys' Village

"WHY DO YOU STAY HERE?"

YESTERDAY, as one of the boys from the group I was supervising and I were hoeing together in the garden, the topic of conversation swerved from the usual subjects of baseball and "When do we quit?" to why I was serving at the Village.

"Why do you stay here?" he asked. "You aren't even gettin' paid for it. Is it for publicity?"

I told him it was not for publicity we stayed here. I was at a loss, however, to explain our real reasons for being here because one of the boys had already said, "We ain't much for this religious stuff." Then I got the idea that I could explain it by telling him that I was here for the same reason that his mother got up early every morning, made his breakfast before she left for work, and helped him—then I remembered that the reason he was at the village was because his mother hadn't wanted him.

Finally I explained that I was here because I wanted to serve—just as men wanted to go into the service in wartime because they loved their country. The only difference was that our unit wasn't serving only one particular country but people of all countries, beliefs, color and conditions. The explanation caused little comment, but I more fully realized my reason for being at the village was not only love but to teach these boys what love for one's neighbors is.

Like voluntary service personnel all over the world we believe that there is no way to love God without serving others. As Christ told Peter, "If you love me, 'feed my sheep'." If, when we came, we had only hazy ideas about love and service, they are being crystallized now. We are finding out exactly what it means to serve and serve with love in our hearts during annoying situations. We are making slow progress towards our goal because

I WONDER

Willadene Keeney

FOR a few minutes no one is waiting at our "shoe store" for shoes. So I turn to watch the people at the table who are checking out the garments that they have received. First to come along is an elderly man whose face is lighted with gratitude for the warm coat he is carrying under his arm. I am sure that expression and eager handclasp say more than the few words of thanks I can see him speak. If only the person who gave such a lovely coat could be in my place just now and see this gratitude which rightfully belongs to him.

Next in line is a lady with two young children. Does she have a home for them, and how many more may be at home to care for? I feel that she too is grateful for the bundle of clothing she is carrying and yet she has a questioning look as if to say, "But when the children grow out of these, what next? Will there always be some way to care for them or is there no future in hoping?" That we may have encouraged hope and kept alive love in this heart is my one desire for this woman who appears quite young and yet who seems to know so much of the worst of life.

And now comes a family who seem to express little thanks in look or word. In fact they seem only partly satisfied for the things they have received and may even be asking for more. They may say, "Why work to earn a living when it will all probably be snatched from you in a year or so anyway. Society is to blame for our present circumstances, now let them take care of us." If we could only make these people feel that someone does care for them. If we could only make them know that we understand that they have been treated unjustly, but that life would be more worth while if they would try to help society prevent a recurrence of such events rather than cooping themselves up with bitterness and cynicism.

Approaching the table now is that couple who carry a very cultured air about them, although their clothes are mended and their shoes very worn. It seems they are in a hurry to pass the table and be on their way. I wonder if they too are not happy with the clothing they received and especially that cheery warm comforter. But perhaps they are ashamed to be "beggars." Circumstances may have forced them to the place where they must ask for clothing, but now they want to be done with it quickly and be off. What it has cost them in pride and self-respect, we many never be able to guess. I wonder if we could have done more in making them feel that we do not consider them beggars, but that in Christian love all persons are important not for the way they can dress and live, but for what they are and have the possibility of becoming.

"Schuhe, bitte." These words spoken by one of the helpers brings me back to the shoe department. But as I turn to the task of fitting shoes again I cannot help but think, may God help us to never merely "hand out clothes."

of the type of work, but our Christian faith is being strengthened by experiences that we will never forget.

We are here because we do not believe that merely social or humanitarian work can accomplish the task or have the effect that service in the name of Christ has. Service motivated by Christian love serves all races and classes, serves without reward to the extent of sacrifice. It is a consecrated effort made in the spirit of Christ to fulfill the needs of others. To serve in such a way, we must share the suffering of those in need and show our happiness in being able to serve so that the one in need might also want to become a child of God.

We are here because we want to love as Christ loved. No, it's not practical to serve without reward—Christ wasn't practical either; He ended on the Cross. "Love thy neighbor." "Who is my neighbor?" Not only the man you borrow lawnmowers from, not only the heathen convert of the missionary, but those who hate you or are indifferent, who would like to steal your car if they had the chance. Love them. Help them.

"No, Al, we aren't here for the publicity.

Satisfied

Has the sun descended behind the hill?
Have the clouds formed overhead?
Would you rather walk the night away
Than surrender to your bed?
Is there nothing ahead but darkness?
Can you not forget though you've tried?
Are your sins all left behind you?
Are you satisfied?
There's a cross upon a hillside
There's a Saviour waiting there
With His arms outspread in mercy
He asks to let him share.
Are you weighted with the burden?
Have you tried for every goal?
Have you given up in deep despair?
Is it still upon your soul?
Why not tell it all to Jesus?
Why not throw away your pride?
He is ready to receive you
Are you satisfied?

An Old Colony "Verlobung"

The Wedding Customs of "Old Colony" Mennonites in Mexico

As June is the month of weddings to so many Canadian or U.S. brides so August and September are the months of weddings for many Old Colonist brides. Customs are quite different from what we know them. But they are proud of their celebrations although they are not in any way elaborate. The bride wears no special clothes for the occasion. Her head is bare one of the few times in which the Old Colony girl shows her long braids put in a knot on the back of her head.

"Verlobung" is celebrated rather than the wedding. It takes place in the brides home on a Saturday. On Sunday morning the minister announces that they are going to be married the following Sunday after the regular church service. During the week the couple go to visit the relatives and friends. These visits are made in order to get acquainted with the relatives on both sides of the family.

Two meals are usually served at the "Verlobung," dinner at noon, "Faspa," and supper is served to friends who live close enough to come back for it after the chores are done. I was sorry that I arrived late for dinner at the "Verlobung" of my cousin, to which I was invited. I would have loved to get in on the "Plume Moss en Schinke Flesch oda Rindflesch," whatever the case may have been.

On Friday morning a group of lively girls, friends of the bride, gathered at the brides home, bringing with them milk or butter to mix the dough for the famous "Gaustgebott Tweeback en Kringel." When the dough is mixed it is made into several small pieces and taken around to the different friends to bake. In the evening someone goes around from place to place to gather the baked "Tweeback en Kringel."

They have more organization at their "Gaustgebott" than the Mexicans at their "Fiestao." Dinner is served early, they're finished around 12:00 noon. They then sit around and talk, the women inside and the men outside in the shade under the trees. At one o'clock they all go into the "Groteschtov" and when everyone is seated someone calls the bridal couple out of the "Summaschtov" where they have been sitting with the Jugend.

The bride leaves first and the groom follows. After two hymns have been sung the couple goes back into the "Summaschtov" to join the young people. Then the men file out. At 3:00 the benches are taken out and table brought in. The women then quickly prepare "Faspa" which consists of the "Tweeback en Kringel," lump sugar and coffee. The men eat first, then the women and children. The dishes are always washed between each setting. When everyone has had his fill, the benches are again arranged in the rooms and everyone comes in and a Thanksgiving Hymn is sung. This concludes the "Verlobung" and everyone leaves. Their horses are hitched to the wagons and buggies, the people scatter in every direction, hurrying to get home to do the chores.

When I sat among them during the singing of the hymns which are sung so differently, memories came to me of the days when I knew only the Old Colony customs and ways. I felt quite at home. My heart went out to them. I felt that I didn't need to tolerate them, as some people call it, but that I could love them.

Book Notes . . .

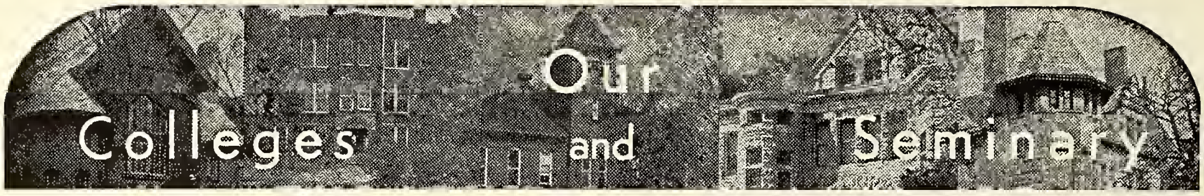
HOW TO STUDY AND USE THE BIBLE, by Park Hays Miller. W. A. Wilde Company, Boston, 1949. 142 pages. Price: $1.25.

The author of this small volume (140 pages) seeks to reach his goal of helping others study the Bible efectively in at least 3 ways: (1) He first seeks to help others see the Bible as a whole and then the relation of various passages to its central message. (2) He further seeks to help readers "appreciate the way in which the Bible tells the story of God's soverign purpose in the world." (3) Then the author suggests at least 8 tools to aid the student in his study of the Bible. These are: translations of the Bible, marginal references, a harmony of the gospels, a concordance, a Bible dictionary, a Bible atlas, a commentary and a study Bible.

To further aid the student, Miller then takes an Old Testament book (Amos) and a New Testament book (Philippians) and applies the suggestions he has given. A final chapter is devoted to practical suggestions for those who serve as teachers of the Word.

This book is not a short-cut to a thorough knowledge of the Bible. That comes only with persistent study. The book will therefore be rewarding to its readers only as the suggestions given are actually applied to a study and use of the Bible.

THE CHRISTIAN'S SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE by Hannah Whitall Smith (250 pp; $1.75) This is a very helpful book for those entering on the Christian life. It is an old book, as books go, but popular demand required it to be reprinted. As the preface puts it, the message is "plain, practical, personal and powerful." It is a book that lends itself to reading over and over. The three parts are, The Life, The Difficulties, and The Results. Next to the Bible itself, no book would be more helpful in deepening and enriching the spiritual life of the reader.



CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

THE largest attendance in the history of our spiritual retreats took place Friday and Saturday at the Community Center Foundation at Palos Park, Illinois. Dr. David J. Wieand, of the Bethany Faculty, led our retreat in the superbly beautiful Palos Hills, a large forest reserve of ten thousand wooded acres.

The Seminary Women's Fellowship met Thursday evening with Mrs. Rufus D. Bowman, as the special speaker, and with Mrs. S. F. Pannebecker as hostess assisted by Marjorie Glick, Frances Funk, Lucile Graber and Carol Shelly.

President Pannabecker has announced the itinerary of Andrew Shelly, our Field Worker. He has just concluded a series of messages and contacts in the Western District Conference and from October 29 to November 10, will be in the churches of California followed by November 12 to 16 when he will be in the churches of Oregon.

We were very happy to have our Conference President, Rev. Olin Krehbiel serve as evangelist at the First Mennonite Church, October 22-27. He was assisted in these evangelistic services by Professor Marvin Dirks, Rupert Hohmann, The Seminary Octette, Vernon Neufeld, The First Church Junior Choir under the direction of Marjorie Reimer, Elaine Waltner, and the First Church Senior Choir under the direction of Vernon Neufeld.

We were happy to have Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Franz here from Lind, Washington. Two of our students, Hanno Klassen and Helmuth Dyck were working on his large farm last summer during the wheat harvest. Mr. and Mrs. Franz did something which we are very delighted to report and to invite others to do likewise. They spent an entire day visiting classes and attending the chapel service in which Orie O. Miller was the speaker. It gave them a direct insight into the work we are doing in the school, into the exact emphasis which is taking place in the class room, and in the general spiritual and educational climate of Mennonite Biblical Seminary and the affiliated school of Bethany Biblical Seminary.

Our Business Manager, John T. Neufeld, has returned to his work on a slightly lighter schedule than formerly, and we rejoice in his ability to resume his very important tasks here at the school.

The Editorial Committee met here October 26-28., under the direction of Ronald von Riesen, Executive Secretary of the Board of Education and Publication. October 31, the Seminary Board of Trustees held its annual meeting. Preliminary plans have been started for the Annual Council of Boards meeting to be held Nov. 30 and Dec. 1.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

THE "Mikado," one of the best of Gilbert and Sullivans well known and popular operettas, will be presented in Pioneer Hall of Freeman Jr. College, Freeman, South Dakota, Nov. 2 and 3. It will be produced by the students of Freeman College under the direction of Miss Elvera Voth, Instructor in Music and Choral Director. Freeman College is not without experience in the producing of Gilbert and Sullivan, having given "Pinafore" and "Pirates of Penzance" in the past two years which were both received by capacity crowds. The cast of 9 principal characters is supported by a well balanced chorus of 35 voices costumed in authentic oriental dress. Playing the part of the Mikado will be John Suderman of Mt. Lake, Minnesota; the Lord High Executioner will be played by Joe Graber of Freeman; Ruby Tieszen of Marion as Yum-Yum; Marlyle Groves of Freeman as Nanki-Poo.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

IN accordance with the Constitution of the Student Assembly, elections for officers serving in this assembly were held on Wednesday, October 18. Those elected were, Edward Enns: Vice President; Dorothy Schmidt: Secretary; Korny Martens: Chairman of the Deputational Committee; Peter Kehler, Chairman of the Devotional Committee; Paul Peters: Chairman of the Social Committee. The President of the Student Assembly, Rev. Abe Neufeld, had been electd previously.

The three committees represented in the Assembly carry the responsibility of directing the extra-curricular activities of the students. Each Sunday groups of singers from the College are sent out to visit the sick, the aged, and the maimed in various hospitals and nursing homes. These visitations are prearranged by the Deputational Committee. The Devotional Committee is in charge of the Student Chapel Services held every Wednesday morning. To keep the social activities of the College at a level which befits a Christian institution, socials, outings, and recreation are carefully planned by the Social Committee.

Besides these three committees, there are three other organizations which play an important role in the College. One of these, the Missionary Fellowship Band, is already well under way. It meets twice a week for the purpose of studying the various mission fields (this includes work being done in the city) in order to become acquainted with them, and above all, to support them in prayer. The remaining two are the Music Society and the Literary Society.

Jottings

CANADIAN DISTRICT

—North Star Church, Drake, Saskatchewan: October 1, we had our harvest festival and missionary Sunday. J. Warkentine of Herschel, Saskatchewan, was guest speaker. The offering amounted to $1482. A number of young people motored to the Bethany Church at Watrous to give a program October 15.

NORTHERN DISTRICT

—Bethesda Church, Marion, So. Dak.: Twelve Goodwill Christmas bundles have been prepared this year. Our pastor, T. A. van der Smissen, is beginning a series of Bible study on Revelation. A young people's class has been started during Sunday School, to discuss the problems of everyday life. It is conducted by our pastor.—Amelia Becker, Corr.

—Gospel Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: Communion service was held October 8. Pastor Suderman has been basing his series of sermons on the second coming of Christ. The C. E. Society and the Mission Societies had their semi-annual interchange program at the Immanuel Mennonite Church, Delft, Minn. A welcome service was held October 11, for Marie Lohrenz, returned voluntary service worker from Mexico. After a short program and pictures from Mexico, a fellowship lunch was held. The Men's Chorus is giving programs in neighboring towns.—Corr.

EASTERN DISTRICT

—Zion Church, Souderton, Pennsylvania: A youth choir was organized this fall. This gives us three active choirs including a junior choir for those in grades 4-8, a youth choir for those in high school and a senior choir for those of post high school age. These three choirs will help with both morning and evening services. A special musical program is planned for Sunday evening, November 19. All three choirs participate and the youth choir will wear their new robes for the first time. —Corr.

WESTERN DISTRICT

—First Church, Burrton, Kansas: Two weddings have been held in this church recently—Elizabeth Ann Regier was married to Pete Klassen of Canada, and La Verne Schrag to Janet Darrow of Kansas City. The new Sunday School officers took over on October 1. The C. E. officers were installed October 8, with a social hour held after the program. The Mission Society met with Mrs. Paul Schrag, October 19, to study missions in India.—Mrs. C. F. Epp, Corr.

—Lorraine Avenue Church, Wichita, Kansas: Our pastor, George Stoneback, was guest speaker at Bethel College the first week of October for the annual observance of Christian Life Week. We observed worldwide communion Sunday with communion and reception of members. In the evening the sound film on Latin American Missions, "Out of the Dusk," was shown. A youth choir for boys and girls, ages eight through fourteen was reecntly organized. Miss Ann Adrian who taught in Japan for a year, spoke and showed pictures Sunday evening, October 8. She also displayed her collection of Japanese items. The weekly Bible School which meets in our church during the school year now has an enrollment of 240 children with seven teachers. —Mrs. Waldo Leisy, Corr.

—First Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: At a recent business meeting it was decided that we arrange for a Leadership Training Course during the Sunday school period and encourage our young men's class to study our peace principles. It was also decided that we have a special series of services this fall, stressing missions. The Beatrice Ministerial Association observed Christian Education Week in this community with a mayors proclamation, special messages over KWBE during the morning devotional periods, and an all Sunday School workers dinner Tuesday.—Mrs. Abraham Jantzen, Corr.

—Hebron Church, Buhler, Kansas: Our church observed Communion Sunday, October 1. Cottage prayer meetings are starting this week with meetings in three different homes. In a pulpit exchange with the Buhler Mennonite Church, Franzen brought us the message October 11. The funeral of Mrs. J. J. Enns took place October 11, Koontz and A. J. Dick, officiating. Also on October 11, the Mission Societies sponsored a program in this church with Mrs. A. M. Lohrentz giving a report of her work in Europe.—Mrs. Wall, Corr.

—Grace Church, Enid, Oklahoma: August 22, Pastor and Mrs. Unruh left for the General Conference; two passengers included Mrs. H. Neumann, Enid, and Miss Enns from Meno. September 10, they brought reports from this conference. September 15, J. J. Esau, from Omaha, delivered an inspiring message. The Mission Circle met September 14, for quilting. August 25, Norma Jean Unruh, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Simon Unruh, Enid, Oklahoma, was married to Robert Shaw, of Enid. August 27, J. J. Gerbrandt of Meno brought the message in absence of our pastor. September 24, Missionary Steven Van Egdom, Mrs. Edgom and their son, from Cali, Columbia, South America, were with us for the morning and evening services.—Mrs. J. F. Kliewer, Corr.

—Johannestal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: The Sunday School held its annual business meeting October 15. William Juhnke, superintendent of the Lehigh schools gave a talk and showed a movie recently. The coming marriage of Janice Joyce Janzen and Abe Junior Plenert was announced here October 8. The church is completing plans for a Harvest Thanksgiving celebration October 29.—Mrs. Ed. Plenert, Corr.

Into the Beyond

MRS. MAY JAEHDE, Ransom, Kansas, member of the First Mennonite Church, was born July 11, 1882, and died October 14, 1950.

AARON GEIGER, Bluffton, Ohio, member of the Ebenezer Mennonite Church, retired farmer and cabinet maker, was born December 3, 1858, and died October 18, 1950.

WALTER H. HARMS, Newton, Kansas, born January 24, 1895, died September 23, 1950. He was a member of the Gnadenberg Church.

JOHN Z. HARMS, Whitewater, Kansas, was born July 23, 1874, and died October 18, 1950. A member of the Gnadenberg church, he was the youngest of the Michalin group to come to America.

Jottings—Continued

—Eden Church, Moundridge, Kansas: August 5, we heard a report on the work being done in the Kansas State Mental Hospital. The following Sunday Brother Cummings of the Interdenominational Mission in India reported on his work. August 13, he showed slides of this work and preached to us. Other recent speakers in this church are Brother Dyck, from this church; Paul Goering, from Washington, D. C., telling about the C.O. position; L. Palmer of the Gideon Society accompanied by the Hershberger Quartet, telling about the work in hotels, hospitals, etc., where they place Bibles; and Brother Waltner from Newton, Kansas, holding a special Bible study meeting. We have had several weddings this month, one of which was followed by the death of a young brother. The Alexanderwhol Church choirs gave a program here recently.

—Friedensfeld Church, Turpin, Oklahoma: Seven young people from this church attended the young peoples retreat at Hydro, Oklahoma, recently. Pastor and Mrs. John Unruh, attended the Conference at Freeman, South Dakota. Martin F. Classen took over morning and evening services, October 1, while Brother Unruh attended a conference at the Go Ye Mission Camp. Our mission festival held October 8, was well attended. Speakers were S. Mouttet, founder of the Go Ye Mission, and Edwin Duerksen from Avon, South Dakota. Duerksen served here 24 years ago. He conducted revival meetings here a few weeks ago. October 5, the ladies packed clothing and comforts for relief.—Mrs. George H. Plett, Corr.

MIDDLE DISTRICT

—Zion Church, Donnellson, Iowa: The Ladies Mission Society packed and shipped a barrel of canned fruit to the American Homefinding Association at Ottumwa, Iowa. A box of good used clothing was also packed and shipped to the Mennonite Central Committee. Pastor Basinger and the choir broadcast a worship service over station KXGI, Fort Madison, Sunday, October 15. The annual Harvest Home Festival was held Sunday, October 22, with services in the morning, afternoon and evening, with a basket dinner at noon. Missionary W. C. Voth from China, who recently returned from a trip to Japan, was the guest speaker.—A. D. Krebill, Corr.

Please enclose this label when writing.

—First Church, Chicago, Illinois: Sunday, October 15, Grace Liu, China, and Franco Cosco, Italy, students at the Seminary, spoke to us. Miss Liu sang songs in Chinese and English and related her life story in China. Franco, a Waldensian, told how he became a protestant Christian. Evangelistic services were conducted here October 22-27, with Olin Krehbiel, Berne, Indiana, giving the messages. His subjects were "Christ's World Wide Program," "What Seek Ye?" "Are You Rejoicing?," "How Do You Walk," "What Holds Your Affections?," "Which Way Shall I Take?" and "The Harvest is Past, The Summer is Ended."

—First Church, Summerfield, Illinois: Our congregation joined with churches throughout the world in the Worldwide Comunion service October 1. Sunday School promotion exercises were held on the same day. Our choir has begun preparation for a Christmas music service. We expect to have our church house completely redecorated soon. The Women's Bible Study Club has purchased a beautiful carpet for the pulpit platform. Thursday, October 19, a Men's Brotherhood was organized. Thirteen men were present for this initial meeting, the youngest twenty years and the oldest eight-five years. We hope to make this organization a real help in the work of the Church, with regular monthly meetings. All men in the church have been invited to attend.—A. S. Bechtel, Corr.

The per-capita consumption of whiskey in the District of Columbia is the highest in the nation, according to the report of the Board of Temperance of the Methodist Church. This may well be a cause for alarm. In 1949 the per-capita consumption of those over 15 was 4.44 gallons.

COUNCIL OF BOARDS MEETING

The annual Council of Boards meeting will be held at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago, November 30 and December 1. The Executive Committee, as well as the boards and committees, will already meet in the early part of the week to do such preliminary work as needs to be done before the General sessions of the Council.

The meeting this year will be of more than ordinary significance since it will cope with the problem of making the transition from the old system to the new, as set up by the constitution adopted at the last session of the General Conference. This will require much wisdom and foresight in order that the work of the Conference in all its areas and phases may go forward effectively under the blessings of God. The need of the hour is for much fervent prayer by both ministers and laymen alike that the Spirit of the living God may guide everything in the way of wisdom, insight, and understanding.

Funds Needed for Bibles

Urgent requests come from various units on the relief field for Bibles, hymn books, Bible school and Sunday School materials, and other religious literature. This need is given on a more personal basis, accompanied by a stronger spiritual emphasis. Contributions for this special literature fund should be so designated.

CONFERENCE REPRESENTATIVE TO INDIA

Rev. J. N. Smucker, editor of THE MENNONITE, and possibly Mrs. Smucker, as well as Dr. and Mrs. H. R. Schmidt, of Newton, Kansas, are planning to leave by plane for India on November 25. Reverend Smucker will represent the General Conference and the section of the Board on Foreign Missions at the India Jubilee Celebration, commemorating fifty years of mission work in India, to be held December 25 to January 1, 1951. They will spend the major portion of their time in India. However they also plan to visit different Mennonite relief centers in Europe, returning home by approximately January 25 of the new year.

BLINDED BY BIGNESS

HOW easily we are impressed by bigness. Americans boast about having the tallest buildings, the largest farms, the biggest business until they are labelled by other nations as the biggest braggarts. Just now we are boasting of most destructive bombs, the greatest navies and the richest and most powerful country on earth.

But God does not seem to be impressed by bigness. When He wanted to reveal Himself more clearly to man, He did not do it by terrifying displays of His power; He sent a tiny Babe into the world, and the Kingdom began as a very small movement.

God does not make a tree with a blinding flash of lightning; He starts with a little seed and takes years to produce a mighty oak. He does not even expect us to become mature followers in one instant, but being born again, He expects us to grow in grace. Jesus spoke of the power of faith even so small as a mustard seed. and He said those who would enter the Kingdom must become as little children.

When we want to accomplish a task, we appoint a committee; when God wants to work some transformation He plants a seed. Can we not learn the importance of little things? Have not all the great religious movements begun as seeds sown in a ready soil? This would suggest that we can accomplish more by being seed-sowers than by doing some great administrative work. A thought dropped into the ready soil of a soul may work a transformation. A kindness sown in a rough heart can be the beginning of a fine flower. A seed of hope and courage dropped into a discouraged heart can bring new life. And a vitalized germ of Christian love can transform a world!

SHOULD WE HAVE A GRUMBLING DAY?

IT has been suggested that instead of having a special Thanksgiving Day, we have a Grumbling Day. Of course the suggestion is not a serious one, but it does have a point. It would certainly be better to complain only one day in a year, and be joyously grateful every other day, than to drag our grumbling through most of the year and then on Thanksgiving Day try to brighten up, and count our blessings.

We are too inclined to criticize, find fault, look on the dark side, and too little given to expression of gratitude and praise. We may be pleased with the things we like but unhappy when thinks do not go our way. This is not the Christian attitude. Paul tries to teach us that in everything we should give thanks.

But Thanksgiving Day can be made a special time of recounting our blessings; a time for reflecting upon the goodness of God; a time for cleansing from all ingratitude and complaining; a time to decide to be more grateful through all the year. "In everything give thanks."

THE SUPREME COURT AND LARRY GARA

IT seems unfortunate that the final decision of the Gara case was locked up in a tie vote. Such a vote is uncommon, but in this case Justice Clark, who was the U. S. Attorney General when Gara was on trial, did not enter the case. A tie vote means that the decisions of the lower courts are not reversed. The Court also has a ruling that in a tie vote no written opinions will be released, neither will it be revealed how the judges voted.

But at least this is certain: In the highest court in the land there were as many judges who thought a man had a right to express his Christian convictions on the matter of war, as there were judges who thought otherwise. This is hopeful, for Larry Gara's conviction came about because he had encouraged Charles Rickert to stand true to his convictions. As one editorial writer puts it, "But hadn't he done only what a red-headed Quaker who thought as he did would have to do?"

If it is an offense to encourage another to stand true to his Christian convictions, then what true Christian minister is clear?

AFTER-ELECTION OBLIGATIONS

ONE fine thing about our system of government is the fact that we do not resort to revolution to overthrow the results of an election. If the man of our choice is elected, well and good. But if not, then we decide to make the best of it.

But Christians have an obligation even after election, an obligation we often overlook. The Bible enjoins us to pray for those who are in office. If Christians really took this seriously, we would have much better government. For "more things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of." Why not fulfill our duty toward the state by offering special prayers for those in office and in places of great influence. The election is over but let our praying for them continue.

CHAIN REACTION

THE explosion of an atom is not the only example of a chain-reaction. What power lies in a cheery word, a bright smile, or a kindly deed! Many a day may be entirely changed because of some kind act or unexpected generosity. The one blessed by such goodness unconsciously passes it on to another; and that one to still others, and so a chain-reaction of goodness has started; and on and on it goes and where it will end nobody knows.

Everyone whose life we touch will be a little better or a little worse for the contact. How important to keep right with God, that we may start a stream of goodness.

"Japan - White to Harvest"

It seems to me I have never before realized the full meaning of that cry of pathos from the lips of the Lord. The yearning of His great heart of love is only fully realized when one stands and sees the teeming millions who have never heard. Surely they are as "sheep without a shepherd."

It is rice harvest in Japan. Whole families are out in the mud covered rice fields so careful that not one stalk is left ungathered. All along the roads and throughout the fields, one can see the great drying racks as the grain is being prepared for the threshing floor. Then, here and there the poor improvised little rigs that thresh the grain. How hard and faithfully they work to gather the grain before the storm. I watch with interest.

As I watch, my heart again and again is drawn to the words of the Lord. "The fields, white unto harvest, but the laborers are few." How true the words of Jesus. I came here to Gifu yesterday, a city of 160,000 persons. There are three Protestant missionaries here and one Catholic. In all there are about 400 Christians. At least 90 per cent of the people have never heard. I say to myself, isn't there something that can be done? The people are so ready to hear, but there is no one to tell them. Any place you stop the truck with the P. A. system, a crowd gathers quickly. They stand for long periods of time to hear the message that is absolutely new to them. One's heart is stirred within as you speak to them, hungry and longing to be fed.

Last night we had a service in front of the R. R. station. A large crowd gathered and most of them stayed for one-hour-and-a-half to hear the message. At the close of the message when the invitation was given a large group from all over the crowd raised their hands, saying by that they wanted to accept Christ as their Saviour. We asked them to come forward and bow in front of our platform on the Jeep. What a sight as that group knelt on the gravel street and confessed their sin, receiving Christ as their Saviour. They don't understand it all, but each of their names is taken and personal contacts are made in their homes. Only there aren't enough people to do the task as it ought to be done.

The simple message, blessed by the Holy Spirit, is all they want. In any of these cities, at almost any location, one can expect that ten out of every one hundred and more will accept Christ, even the first time they have ever heard. This is supposed to be a strong communist territory, and our percentage here is even greater, than that. My heart burns within me. Will Jesus be able to say I have done my best, when such a challenge is before me today? It's the field, white unto harvest.

We had a service in front of the largest rail station in Tokyo last Tuesday night. A crowd of approximately a thousand people gathered as the word was declared. The Spirit of God was mightily manifested. Among the group of seekers was a fine looking girl. After the altar service there on the street, she told one of the personal workers that she was on her way to work. She was attracted by the service, and stayed, missing her work. There was such a warm smile on her face as she said, "I'm so glad I stayed and I found Jesus tonight." I couldn't understand her language as far as her speaking was concerned, but I could recognize the language of her soul. Thank the Lord!

As I see the harvest field, the words of the great Apostle strike me with renewed impact. "What things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord." How fortunate we are that we have heard, but how responsible it makes us that we catch the vision of true values and give our best for the gathering of the 'whitened harvest.'—S. F. Wolgemuth in Evangelical Visitor.

The Individual and World Peace

by Dorothy Hurley

What is my responsibility as an individual, toward the attainment of world peace? One of our beloved American writers, Walt Whitman, has said that no matter what subject we treat, whether it is politics, religion, or anything else, sooner or later we come down to the single, solitary soul. Everything that is ever done, be it evil or good, originates with the individual. War is not begun by one man or one nation, nor is world peace achieved by one particular group. No, the individual, you and I, we are the ones who will make this peace, or will allow another world war more devastating than any we have yet witnessed.

The first step in accepting my responsibility toward peace, is to have peace in my own heart! The only way I can have this peace is to acknowledge Jesus as my own Lord and Savior. Why is it so important to have peace in my own heart when I am concerned with the peace for the world? If your child was sick unto death, you would not call an ailing, incompetent physician. World Peace lies dying at our feet. Can we bring it back to life if within ourselves we do not have that blessed assurance of Peace?

The second step in the acceptance of my responsibility toward world peace, I believe, is what Albert Schweitzer calls, "The Reverence for Life." We must love our neighbors. Who is my neighbor? The man living next door, or across the field, the people who belong to my church, my state, the people of my country, or of my color? Yes, these are all my neighbors. But these make up only a small part of my brethren! My reverence and my respect for life must include all of God's children, no matter who they are or where they are. I cannot say, "This one deserves to live, but that one is not worthy of life." That is for God alone to judge.

The third step in the acceptance of my respon-

A Forgiving Spirit

Ellis Graber*

THE Christian way of life is that of a forgiving spirit. Have you ever carefully considered how Christ taught this by both word and deed? Many incidents illustrate this truth.

You remember that Jesus had his difficulties with Peter. Surely there comes a time when it is hard if not impossible for a man to forgive!

Or again, remember the time Peter took up the sword and the master had to rebuke him. "Put up thy sword for they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." It was a difficult truth for Peter to grasp—deal with the sword and men will use the sword in dealing with you. Be of a forgiving spirit and that spirit will spread to those about you.

Then there was that incident centering about a woman taken in adultery and brought by the Pharisees to Jesus. They quoted scripture, "Moses in the law commanded us, that such should be stoned. What sayest thou?" He wouldn't answer. They insisted. Then Jesus looked down in the clay and wrote in it while saying, "He that is without sin, let him cast the first stone." One by one their conscience accused them and they left so that Jesus could say to the woman, "Neither do I condemn thee. . . " What he did was reveal the power of a forgiving spirit.

So one could continue. The prodigal son and a forgiving Father, the King forgiving a debtor, these and other incidents make it clear where Jesus stood in this matter. He taught and practiced a forgiving spirit to the point where on the cross he could say of his murderers, "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do."

There is abroad in the world today a harsh, bitter unforgiving spirit. It flares up between Jews and Gentiles, between races, between capital and labor, in our personal day by day relationships. It is a destructive spirit that breeds crime, juvenile delinquency, divorce and war. How we need a forgiving spirit! No man can go through life with an unforgiving spirit without harming himself immeasurably. Hatred in his heart, judging, conniving, condemning—that gives a man a bitter outlook, twists his personality, and severs his relationship with God.

Our plea today is for a forgiving spirit. We need it because no man can live without it. That sergeant gunner, one of the Doolittle fliers, discovered that truth in the last war when he was captured and spent 41 months in prison. At first he had hatred in his heart, a revengeful spirit, a bitterness which made him sick both in body and soul. Then one day he opened his New Testament and read the words of Jesus, "Love your enemies. . . do good to them that hate you." It was then that he experienced the truth and blessing of a forgiving spirit. That thirty-two year old man didn't really live again until he let love come into his heart so that he could do good to his so-called enemies.

Gilbran is so right and accurate when he puts on the lips of Jesus the words,

> "Only the weak would revenge themselves.
> The strong of soul forgive, and it is honor in the injured to forgive."

The forgiving spirit also does something to the person who is forgiven. Forgiveness did something to Paul at the stoning of Stephen when we heard him praying for forgiveness of his foes. Forgiveness did something to sword-wielding, to quick-tempered, Christ-denying Peter. Tradition has it that he was not content to be crucified for his Lord in the customary manner but instead insisted on being crucified head down. The forgiving spirit made a Mary Magdalene out of an adulterous woman. Yes, forgiveness affects not only the one who does the forgiving but the one forgiven. To all it sets flowing a stream of love, good-will and peace of mind.

Perhaps you have heard someone say, "I'll forgive him once but if it happens again I'll never forgive him." Or you may have heard the expression, "I'll forgive him if he forgives me." Perhaps you have even said yourself, "I can forgive but I can't forget."

If that mood ever overtakes you, if you feel like a sword-wielding Peter or a stone-throwing Pharisee, then the words of Jesus are for you. Remind yourself of the spirit he had. Think of how he taught us to pray, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us." When we utter those words we ask God to forgive in the same measure that we have forgiven others.

Whether old or young, sick or healthy, rich or poor—we dare not hold a grudge. We cannot afford to have it "in" for somebody. We cannot stand the poison of hate. We must have a forgiving spirit even as Christ had and taught. Only with such a spirit in our own lives can we hear the assuring words of our master,

> "If you forgive others when they offend you, your heavenly Father will forgive you too."

Thank the Lord! With bounteous measure
He doth fill our faithful land!
All we own and all we treasure
Is the gift of his good hand.
Thank the Lord! Our life He gives us,
Gives us food and fruitage rare.
O who would not sing His praises,
Glad His goodness to declare.
Thank the Lord, thy loving Father!
Ne'er forget, O soul, His grace!
Grow more like Him, and His mercy
Make thy theme of constant praise.

Our Book of Remembrance

IT was a custom among eastern monarchs to keep a book of records into which were recorded the deeds and misdeeds of the subjects. Without being aware of it, each person was writing his own record; his own book of remembrance.

We are all writing our autobiographies, year in and year out. What do we record? What do we omit? The Thanksgiving season is a good time to check our books of remembrance and note whether we are remembering the right things. Our depth of gratitude will depend upon our selection of material for our life records. If we habitually record the dismal, the dark and the dreary things of life we may feel that we have nothing to be thankful for. But if we have been recording the fine and good and beautiful, our lives will be filled with gratitude and praise. Thanksgiving can be a time of appreciative and joyous expression or it may be just another dreary day.

What Shall We Omit?

It would be well to omit from our book of remembrance all fault finding and complaining. Some-fill their records with such doleful notations that when they open the records to see what has happened they find no reason for gratitude.

We should omit our common complaints about adverse circumstances. To be sure we find ourselves in all sorts of unideal situations. It is so easy to lay our failures to our surroundings; but really, a man's life does not depend so much on what goes on outside of him but on his reactions within. He who looks for matters about which to complain can always find an abundance of material to record, but he poisons his soul in doing it.

We should omit any slights or unthoughtful treatment from others. It is surprising how we can multiply this list if we are so minded. But to record and treasure up each seeming ingratitude from others is to render ourselves incapable of true gratitude and forgiveness. We all have our faults; if others point them out to us, even though unkindly, we may profit by such criticisms, without bitterness.

Perhaps there have come losses and failures which we record and brood over. But there seems to be no direct connection between what a man has and what he is. Even though we are not in the best of health, when greeted with a hearty "how are you?" it is not necessary to go into details about our misfortunes. We may wisely omit the failures but profit by the experiences.

There are always failures in attaining our ideals and goals. We have sinned; but it is not necessary to fill our records with these unhappy occurrances. God in his great love can forgive us and blot out all our transgressions. He promised that He will remember them no more, why should we insist on keeping a prominent record of them. Let us rather record the forgiving love of God and there will be real cause for thanksgiving.

We may also omit our successes. Occasionally we find people who have done something fine and worthy—and then spend the rest of their life talking about it. We should not turn a promising autobiography into a pompious autobraggery. To emphasize our successes and worthy deeds tends to make us complacent and proud. We need to look forward, not live in past deeds.

WHAT SHALL WE RECORD

THERE are so many worth-while matters to record in the book of remembrance. For one thing there is still so much of beauty all about us and available to those who search for it, that we should make large records of it. This is our Father's world and the beauties of the seasons—and the beauties of earth and sky, of sea and mountain, of fine art and great music can fill our records and our lives with their uplifting influences.

Then we should record the goodness of people about us. Those who have lived long ago have made it possible for us to enjoy many fine things of life. Those who are living now can mean so much to us if we prove ourselves friendly. The influence of Christian parents, the patience and faithfulness of life companions, the concern and thoughtfulness of friends, far outweigh the gloomy picture some insist on painting. May we thank God for our friends. How poor we would be without them.

But this above all, let us faithfully record the goodness of God. His fatherly love and deep concern for each of us, His presence in every need, His help in every crisis, His guidance at every fork of the road, His strength for every weakness. No wonder the poets grow enthusiastic and declare that if the whole ocean were ink and the spreading heavens a scroll that would not be enough to write of His love and goodness!

If we adopt for ourselevs the motto often found on sundials and "record only the sunny hours," it will surprise us how bright life can be. If we count our many blessings it will surprise us what the Lord hath done.

Thanksgiving is not something to be done one day in the year; it is writing every day of the blessings of God in our book of remembrance. On Thanksgiving day we should pause and read from these records of the goodness of God. Then our whole life will be filled with gratitude and overflowing praise. Thanksgiving is thanksliving.

Thanksgiving for a Day

Mrs. H. N. Harder

"O Lord my God, I will give thanks unto thee forever." Psalm 30:12b

AGAIN we are planning Thanksgiving programs, thank offerings, family dinners, and other means of showing our thankfulness. It seems that annually, after the summer's crops have been garnered in, we make it our business to thank God for the material blessings He has given us. We say to God with all our hearts, "Thank you, Lord, for thy great goodness to us." It is a wonderful custom that has been passed on to us as a nation by the Pilgrims, to set one day aside for special thanksgiving. However, on a Thanksgiving Day many years prior to the first one on our continent in 1621, the Psalmist said, "O Lord My God, I will give thanks unto thee forever."

Unthankfulness closes the door against deeper blessings of life. As we draw near our Heavenly Father, through His Son Jesus Christ, in thanksgiving, we are in a position to receive ever greater spiritual blessings. Are we not commanded to "come before His presence with thanksgiving" and ". . . with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God."

It is comely for the Christians, saints of the Lord, to give thanks and sing praises to Him in all situations of life, every day of our lives. "Blessed be the Lord, who daily loadeth us with benefits." Psalm 68:19. These benefits may be occasions for joy and happiness, of which there can be none greater than the gift of divine forgiveness of sin, and the grace of God that gives salvation by faith.

These benefits may also be burdens that steady us and in the end strengthen us inwardly if we ask Him to help us bear them. These burdens may take various forms as: impaired health, loss of loved ones, adversity, hard work, or difficult obligations. Christians are not spared of troubles. But troubles do not rob them of their joy if its source is in God. Through them we can draw near to God in prayer, count our blessings and say, "God loves me with an everlasting love" therefore "will I give thanks unto Him forever."

MEN NONITE for CHRIST MEN

Have you read the constitution of the Laymen's Organization, "Mennonite Men?"

It appeared in THE MENNONITE in the issue of August 1, 1950. With minor exceptions it gives a pretty clear idea of the purpose and the membership of our General Conference Laymen's Organization. Help to make it a good one!

The First Thanksgiving Proclamation

WHEREAS it is the duty of all nations to acknowledge the providence of Almighty God, to obey his will, to be grateful for his benefits, and humbly to implore his protection and favor; and whereas both houses of Congress have, by their joint committee, requested me "to recommend to the people of the United States a day of public thanksgiving and prayer, to be observed by acknowledging with grateful hearts the many and signal favors of Almighty God, especially by affording them an opportunity peaceably to establish a form of government for their safety and happiness";

Now, therefore, I do recommend and assign Thursday, the 26th day of November next, to be devoted by the people of these States to the service of that great and glorious Being, who is the Beneficient Author of all the good that was, that is, or that will be; that we may then all unite in rendering unto him our sincere and humble thanks for his kind care and protection of the people of this country, previous to their becoming a nation; for the signal and manifold mercies, and the favorable interpositions of his providence, in the course and conclusion of the late war; for the great degree of tranquility, union, and plenty, which we have since enjoyed; for the peaceable and rational manner in which we have been enabled to establish constitutions of government for our safety and happiness, and particularly the national one now lately instituted; for the civil and religious liberty with which we are blessed, and the means we have of acquiring and diffusing useful knowledge; and, in general, for all the great and various favors, which he has been pleased to confer upon us.

And, also, that we may then be united in most humbly offering our prayers and supplications to the great Lord and Ruler of Nations, and beseech him to pardon our national and other transgressions; to enable us all, whether in public or private stations, to perform our several and relative duties properly and punctually; to render our national government a blessing to all people, by constantly being a government of wise, just, and constitutional laws, discreetly and faithfully executed and obeyed; to protect and guide all sovereigns and nations (especially such as have shown kindness to us), and to bless them with good government, peace and accord; to promote the knowledge and practice of true religion and virtue, and the increasing of science, among them and us; and, generally, to grant unto all mankind such a degree of temporal prosperity as he alone knows to be best. Given under my hand at the City of New York, the third day of October, 1789. —George Washington

Do right because it is right, and not because you are afraid to do wrong.

The Heart of the Church's Life

Jacob T. Friesen*

YOUR child atends school from 9 A.M. to 4 P.M., five days a week, nine months of the year, for twelve years. From breakfast until bedtime your day is planned to give your child his education. Education is considered essential and has been made compulsory. Your child's future depends upon it.

Within walking or driving distance of your home another school is provided for you and your child. You are invited to attend twelve months of the year, one day a week, for one hour. Attendance is voluntary not compulsory. The subjects are essential to worthwhile living and true success. The teachers are devoted though not salaried. The facilities are good considering the contributions we have made for their improvement. This place aims to have you and your child become a personal friend of the greatest Person who ever lived and is living today.

Yes, you are right. This is your church school, the heart of your church's life. It is not an auxiliary or a place for your child to go until he is old enough to appreciate the regular morning service. It is a place where you feel the pulse of your church's on-going program. The Gospel is here translated into character, ideas into acts, youthful energy into purposeful activity.

Your church school stands at the center of your church's life and program primarily because it is carrying out the central task of our Lord's Great Commission. "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Matt. 28:19-20 In this concise and carefully worded commission our Lord placed his finger upon the pulse of His kingdom work by repeating the injunction, "teach all nations. . . teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you.

The word "teach" in the broadest sense is moving the will, leading to Christ, and urging commitment to Him as well as the transmitting of facts. "Teach all nations" is an unqualified statement of fact. Here is an unmistakable charge! The only way to teach all nations is to teach first yourself and your own child. To fail in this task is to fail as a church.

The subject matter of our teaching is stated by our Lord's second reference: "Teaching all nations whatsoever I have commanded you." We are to teach what Christ taught. This includes God's complete revelation. The aim, to be sure, must remain to win the individual to Christ and active participation in the program of His church. The word "teach" in the great commission has this aim at its center. Therefore, teaching through the church school is the heart and life of a living church in its on-going teaching ministry motivated by the love of Christ and guided by the Spirit of God. Every function within the church must contribute to this central concern to be worthy of the name "church function."

A further reason why your church school stands in the center of your church's life is its primary contact. Even before your child enters elementary school he should be a student in the church school. Your child is welcomed when his name is placed on the nursery role. A remembrance at Christmas and possibly on his birthday reminds you as parent that the church school is interested in your child. At two and one-half or three years of age your child is ready to paticipate actively in the life of the school. From now until baptism and adulthood he should receive continuous instruction, guidance, and inspiration from your Sunday School superintendent, teacher, pastor, and fellow students. Bible stories are repeated, Scriptures are memorized, hymns sung, prayers prayed, projects are carried out to teach the lesson. Character is molded, values are established, and standards of life and conduct erected in the light of Christ and His total message. In the presence of this atmosphere the claims of Christ can be presented convincingly.

This is the heart of your church's life, the growing edge of tomorrow's church. Do you want to know your church? Then visit your church school. Would you serve where words and ideas are given hands and feet, life and breath? Then give of your best time and talent as an officer, teacher or student in your church school. Would you bring new life into your church? Begin by bringing new life into your church school, the heart of your church's life. You cannot afford to be without the teaching ministry of your church. Today adults as well as children depend on this ministry for continued and systematic instruction in religious truth. The morning worship service and sermon have teaching value to be sure, but in the informal atmosphere of a classroom ideas may be exchanged, personal convictions may be expressed and clarified, revealed truth and common work-a-day living clasp hands. You need your church school. Bring your children to Sunday school and stay yourself.

You have repeatedly heard the invitation. "See you in church Sunday." Let us add one word and say, "See you in church school Sunday." You need the church school and your church school needs you.

O come, let us sing unto the Lord:
In his hands are the deep places of the earth:
The strength of the hills is his also.
O come, let us worship and bow down:
Let us kneel before the Lord our maker.
Let us make a joyful noise to the rock of our salvation.
Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving.
And make a joyful noise unto him with psalms.

A Guide to Decisions

Abe M. Wiebe*

DAY after day we make many decisions—shall I wear brown or black shoes, eat pork or fish, drive or walk to work, etc., etc.? Daily we face countless issues which affect our lives and at times the lives of others. We decide and dispatch many such issues without much forethought or afterthought. All of these acts lie in the area of life we call adiaphora (amoral). They are things that are not specifically commanded or forbidden by God. These issues are left to the Christian's own judgment and thus lie in the domain of Christian liberty.

Paul faced such a question in the Corinthian Church with regard to the eating of meats offered to idols. The amoral question was, "Should Christians eat or refrain from eating such meat, either when offered for purchase at markets and eaten at home, or when served in idol temples?" Some at Corinth felt it was wrong to eat this meat. Others (Paul was one) said the meat was not defiled, since idols were nothing, and therefore, it was all right to eat this meat.

Paul's problem is not so remote, since we also face similar questions. What would Paul have said to us today? No doubt the same thing he says in I Corinthians. He gives three guides (measures) which will help us to decide these questions of life.

1. "All things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any." I Cor. 6:12b ALL THINGS refers only to amoral issues: not moral issues; not moral issues which God has expressly forbidden, such as licentiousness, idolatry, adultery, drunkenness, theft, etc.. So Paul's first guide is, "Does this deed or act enslave me?" If so, I will refrain, for such enslavement means I cannot be a servant of Christ. Christians cannot have two masters. Are some people slaves of tobacco? One person I know is, for he cannot stop this habit.

2. "But take heed lest by any means this liberty (to eat idol meat, go to shows, etc.) of yours becomes a stumblingblock to them that are weak." I Cor. 8:9 The second guide Paul states is, "Will my acts be the spiritual downfall of another's?" What I do may not harm my spiritual well being, but what does it do to others—especially those who feel it is wrong but see me doing it? They may be tempted to indulge, and thus failing to obey their conscience, they sin. Our love for the spiritual well being of our neighbor should constrain us.

3. "All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient. . . all things edify not." I Cor. 10:23 The third guide—"All things I do are to be of spiritual profit or benefit to myself and others about me." Whether we eat or drink, or refrain from eating and drinking we do all to build the spiritual lives of others and our own. We are not to be satisfied by not destroying, but are to be constantly building.

Here we have our measures—the length, breadth, and depth—of making wise choices. Let us use Paul's formula in order that our actions may neither enslave us, be a stumbling block to others, nor prevent spiritual growth.

A BEAUTIFUL story is told of a woman who complained that her burdens were too heavy to bear. One night she had a vivid dream, in which her Lord appeared and relieved her of her cross. He led her into a large field filled with many other crosses, of every conceivable size and shape.

Her Lord said, "Everyone must bear a cross, and bear it alone. Since your cross is more than you can bear, go and choose one you think is not too burdensome, yet worthy of your strength and courage."

The woman went in to the field of crosses, and searched diligently for the cross she thought she could bear. At last she choose one, and said to her Lord, "I have found the cross I can bear—it is neither too heavy nor too light." So her Lord gave it to her, and when she picked it up, lo, it was her own cross, the very one she had returned to her Lord.

THE INDIVIDUAL AND WORLD PEACE

sibility toward world peace is that of disciplined intelligence acting in cooperation with others. I must refrain impatient thought, from thinking something just because everyone is doing so, or taking a particular attitude just because everyone else is doing it. I cannot compartmentalize my thinking and say, "Today is Sunday, so my thoughts and deeds will be in accordance with this day. When tomorrow comes, it will be alright to forget these pious Sunday thoughts, and get down to reality."

There are three fatal fallacies in today's thinking toward peace: the notion that we can achieve peace by military power; the theory that we can provide equal but separate opportunities for racial and cultural minorities; the conviction that we can secure prosperity through the pursuit of self-interest. The Christian must detect these popular notions and take it upon himself to do something about them.

The fourth step is that I must have room in my thoughts for creativeness. My mind must be clear of the destructive cobwebs of evil thought and indifference. And when I am fully desirous of something worthy, then that thing will consume my interest. If I desire world peace, then I must be free to think of how I can contribute the most toward this goal.

There is much that we can do. We must pray to God that we will accept our responsibility, to do His Will according to the light that He gives us.

Thoughts of Thanksgiving

by Donald Isaac

"Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise: be thankful unto him and bless his name. For the Lord is good; his mercy endureth to all generations." Psalms 100:4, 5.

THESE two verses might well be the theme of our thinking as we approach the Thanksgiving season. At this time we think of God's great out-of-doors clothed in its autumn hue. Some of the trees have a red and brown tinge while other trees have lost practically all their leaves. The fields are ready for next year's crop. To some it means that winter is right around the corner while to others it might mean an Indian summer. We look forward to that Thanksgiving dinner with eager anticipation. But we must not forget to praise God for everything. The true thanksgiving spirit can make the life of the Christian richer and fuller. Paul, in Ephesians 5:20, expresses it in these words, "Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." To my mind comes the beginning of the hymn that we sing at this time of the year, "Come, ye thankful people, come, Raise the song of harvest home: . . ."

I feel that we Mennonites of North America have been fortunate in that God has provided our daily necessities of life. We have not lacked any good thing. It is true that some of us had to be more saving and do without the non-essentials, but God has provided food, clothing, and shelter. The Lord is good and if we come to him with praise and thanksgiving our lives become more meaningful and at times God lets us have a little extra. But the thanksgiving spirit must also have a spirit of penitence since we fully realize that we are unworthy of much that God gives us, especially when we hear of so much suffering among our brethren in other lands.

One of the aspects that gives such significance to the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers on Plymouth Rock was that they gave thanks to God after their first crop was harvested. They came here seeking religious freedom, lost half their number in the first winter, and yet they raised their voices in thanksgiving to God. Seeking religious freedom and giving thanks to God after enduring many hardships is what makes that incident live in the hearts of everyone today.

In closing I should like to quote the first verse of "The People's Thanksgiving" by William Pierson Merrill which I think summarizes the thoughts I have presented.

Not alone for mighty empire,
Stretching far o'er land and sea,
Not alone for bounteous harvests
Lift we up our hearts to Thee:
Standing in the living present,
Memory and hope between,
Lord, we would with deep thanksgiving
Praise Thee more for things unseen.

Thanksgiving is Stewardship Time

Thanksgiving is time to think about Stewardship. This article is a sample of the Y.P.U. Program Materials and presents the subject of Stewardship for use in youth programs. It was a part of the 1949 November issue of Program Materials. At least one copy of these materials is being sent to each church by the Y.P.U.

Think what a head of wheat means! It represents the miracle of growth. A year before, it did not exist. Nine months before, it was a tiny green plant. Today, out of black soil, rain and sunshine, has come forth this thing. It is for such things that we are thankful. It is over this that we are made stewards!

THE month of November is highlighted with the close of the harvest season and the traditional observance of Thanksgiving. The first Thanksgiving was celebrated in New England by the Pilgrim Fathers. In early New England it was the custom at Thanksgiving time to place five grains of corn at every plate as a reminder of those stern days in the first winter when the food of the Pilgrims was so depleted that only five grains of corn were rationed to each individual at a time. The Pilgram Fathers wanted their children to remember the sacrifice, suffering, and hardship which made possible the settlement of a free people in a free land. They wanted to keep alive the memory of that sixty-three day trip taken in the tiny "Mayflower." They desired to keep alive the thought of that "stern and rock bound coast"—its inhospitable welcome, and the first terrible winter which took such a toll of lives. They did not want their descendants to forget that on the day in which their ration was reduced to five grains of corn, only seven healthy colonists remained to nurse the sick, and nearly half their numbers lay in the "windswept graveyard" on the hill. They did not want to forget that when the "Mayflower" sailed back to England in the spring, only the sailors were aboard.

With the memory of how Thanksgiving came to be an American tradition for Christian people, the theme of Stewardship is most appropriate for thought and discussion and for personal dedication during the month of November. Quite unlike that first Thanksgiving, today America and American people stand as the most prosperous, best-fed, best-housed, best-clothed people in the world. No nation possesses the wealth the United States has at hand. Sometimes many possessions make our heart grow cold when it come to giving thanks. Sometimes ungratefulness stems from a failure to appreciate what is ours to use and possess. Perhaps the highest thanksgiving we can give expresion to in our day is to be devoted stewards of what we have. Thus, stewardship and thanksgiving are bound together in the same bundle.

Suggestions For Planning Your Stewardship Program

First, break the subject into several parts for discussion. For instance, three areas might be:)1 Good Stewards of Our Talents; 2) Good Stewards of Our Time; 3) Good Stewards of Our Possessions. Then, center your attention on any one or all three of these subjects. For the first subject, Good Stewards of Our Talents, you might use Luke 19, the portion concerning the parable of talents, as a Scriptural basis. For the second subject you might use Matthew 25, the parable about the wise and foolish virgins, as a Scriptural basis for wise and foolish use of our time.

Let us consider these subjects in greater detail.

1. Good Stewards of Our Talents. How can we be good stewards of our talents? First, what are talents? They are our abilities, aren't they? The things we are able to do? Some of us can sing, while others can't. Some of us are good musicians. Some are good athletes. Some are good mechanics, while others are good readers and love books. Some like to mix with people and are good at making social life fun and interesting for everyone. Here is a person who is good at managing business affairs, while another is a superb farmer.

The questions we can ask regarding our various talents are: a) How can we use our talents so that they do the most good? b) How can we best develop and put ourselves into the things in which we are talented? How can we most fully realize our abilities? What does it take to be talented? Discuss this at length. c) What do we do if our talents are less than another's? Read Luke 19 and find what Jesus' attitude was toward the less talented. d) Is it as wrong to fail to use our talents as it is to use our talents wrongly? Read the parable of talents again and see what Jesus' attidude was on that.

Finally, try to think of people you know who are noble and good people who have used their talents well. Tell about them and why you admire them.

What do you think of the stewardship of our talents? How can we be good stewards of our talents? Try to thing of instances where there were people you know who have been good stewards of their talents and discuss why they were.

2. Good Stewards of Our Time. Have you ever thought that we can be stewards of our time as well as talents and money? Someone who is a mathematician should estimate how many hours he will have spent eating, sleeping, working, loafing, praying, doing good deeds by the time he is 70. Ask each person to put down the number of minutes and hours he spent during the last week in various activities; then have him multiply this by 3640, and he will know what his 70-year average is.

Here is the estimate which one man, a Swiss, made of how he spent 80 years. This was issued on his eightieth birthday:

> First, he figured that he had spent 26 years, 312 days, 18 hours, and 22 minutes in sleeping—about a third of his life, which is what is to be expected of any man. Work accounted for 21 years, 85 days, 14 hours, and 40 minutes. He was angry or annoyed 5 years, 346 days, and 5 minutes. He wasted 5 years, 302 days, 16 hours, and 45 minutes in anterooms, hotel lobbies and other places waiting for men and women with whom he had appointments. Eating consumed almost as much time—5 years, 346 days, 5 hours, and 12 minutes. Shaving occupied 228 days, 2 hours, and 52 minutes; signing his name, 42 days, 14 hours, and 58 minutes; scolding his children, 26 days, 14 hours, and 3 minutes; tying cravats, 18 days, 12 hours, and 6 minutes; lighting cigars, cigarettes and pipes, 12 days, 16 hours, and 4 minutes; looking for collar buttons, 6 days, 21 hours, and 25 minutes; yawning, 4 days, 2 hours, and 26 minutes; telling barking dogs that he owned during his life, to lie down and keep quite, 2 days, 14 hours, and 20 minutes. He laughed only one day, 22 hours, and 3 minutes!

Analyze this and see what was left out and what was over-emphasized and what was under-emphasized. How many days should this man spend in church, for instance? How many hours could this man have spent visiting sick people and doing good deeds for others? How many days could he have spent in all good works related to that which is eternal, God himself?

Discuss the values of ways of using your time the best you know. What are the values of recreation, of self-improvement through study and practice of skills and arts, of worship and prayer, of work? How much time should each have?

Remember Matthew 25—the story of the wise and foolish virgins!

3. Good Stewards of Our Possessions. Some people possess their possessions. Other people are possessed by their possessions. Which are good stewards?

This is the most common thought, regarding stewardship, that comes to us. Stewardship of our possessions is the first thing we think about. First, what does the Bible have to say regarding possessions? Does it say that possessions are bad or does it say that things we own are good? Or does it say something else regarding our possessions? Look up in a concordance what specific statements there are regarding "possessions" and see if you can find any light on this. It is of basic importance how we feel toward the things we call ours.

Find, in the lives of people you know, ways that possessions have been used. What about the Rockefeller millions which are now being spent for benevolent purposes? Are the Rockefellers good stewards?

a) What is the Old Testament expectation regarding the use of possessions? Should the tithe be the Christian norm for using our possessions? Do Christians give a tithe? Discuss.

Here are nine Biblical references for motives of giving. Discuss them and see which is the best motive.

1. Reward. To secure God's material blessing. (Malachi 3:10 and Deuteronomy 8:18.)
2. Law. Because the religious law requires it. (Deuteronomy 12:6; and 14:28-29.)
3. Justice. Because it is the way to show justice to our fellow man. (Amos 5:24.)
4. Duty. Our first duty is to the Kingdom of God. (Matthew 6:35.)
5. Stewardship. God has appointed us as His stewards. (Genesis 1:28.)
6. Faithfulness. Because we are God's stewards, and faithfulness is expected of stewards. (I Corinthians 4:2 and Romans 12:8)
7. Worship. Because worship of God is expressed through giving. (Genesis 4:3-5; & 8:20.)
8. Consecration. Because giving is an expression of Christian consecration and dedication. (II Corinthians 8:1-5; 9:7 and Acts 20:35.)
9. Love. To express our love for God, because Christ has given everything for us. (John 3:16-17.)

Which of the above reasons are the highest and best reasons for being stewards and generous with our possessions? Perhaps gratitude would be the best reason—gratefulness for the love of God. Discuss.

b) What is the general public's motive for giving of their possessions? Mr. H. B. Demand, professional money raiser, says people give for five reasons:

1. Fear of public opinion; they don't want to to be "stingy."
2. Desire for prestige; that is, "to keep up with the Joneses."
3. To establish a memorial for themselves or for some loved one.
4. Conscience; because "I know I ought to give."
5. "An honest, voluntary concern to share in a thing worth doing, and not caring whether or not his name is attached to the gift." Not one-fifth of the donors give from this motive—the really Christian one!

Analyze these motives and discuss them in the light of the giving in your church. Does your church's giving depend on the first four as well as the fifth motive? Discuss. What is your motive for giving?

c) How do you put to work the things you possess? The soil you farm, the cars you drive, the clothes you wear, the food you consume, the many things you use—how are they used?

Get a copy of "A Primer for Friends of the Soil" by Eugene Smathers for the relationship between you and the soil and your stewardship of it. This booklet is available from Eugene Smathers, Big Lick, Tennessee, at 25 cents per copy. It is worth every cent. Other worthy material on the soil is "The Land We Defend" by H. H. Bennett, U. S. Department of Agriculture, Soil Conservation Service, Washington, D. C.; "From Ridge to River" from the same address; and numerous other materials concerning our stewardship of the soil.

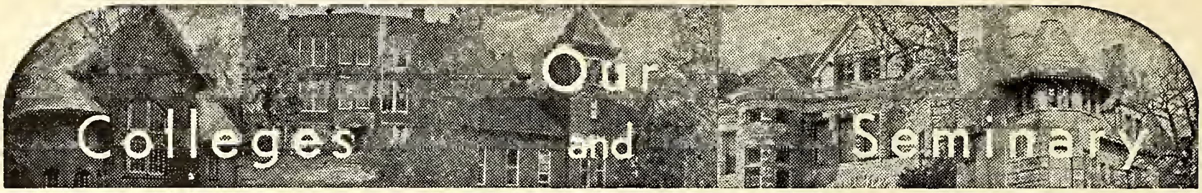
There are different attitudes we have toward the land. One is to make money off of it. Another is to preserve and keep it and pass it on to the next generation in better shape than it is now. Another is to use it without any definite plan or notion as to what is the best method of how to improve it. Which is the Christian view of the land?

d) How do you use your money? Once a man refrained from putting a dirty dollar bill in the collection plate because it was a disgrace to God to have such dirty money. In reality all money is soiled. Think of the dollar you have. Where all has it been? What all has it done? If it has been around at all, it likely has at some time been tainted money. Was the man right in refraining from giving dirty money to God's cause? Discuss.

We have spoken of the stewardship of our time. We may also ask, "How do you use your money?" Out of every dollar you spend, what portion goes for candy and gum, and what portion goes for the feeding of needy people in Europe? Analyze the spending of your dollars the last week or month and see where your pennies have gone; figure it out on the basis of a dollar—see how you spend your money.

What is the best way to spend our money? Should we do it haphazardly or with a purpose? Should we plan our spending or follow the whim of the moment? How much should be used for others and how much for ourselves? Discuss a plan for the use of your money.

How should your church spend its money? Should it have a haphazard program, or should it have a clear plan? How should your youth organization plan its use of money? Socials, others, program material, etc.



MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

A STRONG message by Orie O. Miller, Executive Secretary of the Mennonite Central Committee, visibly moved our combined student bodies recently.

The well known leader of the MCC declared in the expository parts of his message that John 15 helps to explain why the Cross had to be. This verse reads as follows "When Jesus therefore perceived that they would come and take him by force to make him a King he departed again into a mountain himself alone." Here Jesus realized that the people were not understanding his messianic mission to be accomplished by spiritual means, and thus the speaker said, that in the light of Romans 12:21 and Matthew 5:48 he still believes and teaches that the disciple is commissioned to live only by this way of suffering love as he follows the one who is divine and the Lord of our life.

Turning to the American situation Orie Miller then looked at some of the assets of our people. He observed that we have unprecedented material assets— a great amount of wealth at our fingertips. Secondly, he noticed that we have a precious spiritual heritage which has been allowed to develop undisturbed, but a very striking sentence in this section of the message was this: "It is a marvel of God's patience that he allowed us to be introverted so long without snuffing us out." The next part of his message referred to our liabilities in America. Here he listed our unprecedented wealth as a liability even though he had also listed it as an asset. We do not realize that three-quarters of the earth know nothing of the American standard of living. Only a few weeks ago the speaker was in Jericho where there are forty-five thousand miserable refugees living within one half a mile—miserable suffering people. He told of the presence of fifty thousand Jews in the general area of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, with whom very little contact is taking place. He referred to the great difficulties of Mennonite witness among the colored people of America and he made similar remarks regarding the migrants who pick our fruit and vegetables. The next part of his message dealt with his visit to the Orient and he made the very interesting statement that General MacArthur was a kind of modern Cornelius. Then he made a number of searching statements regarding God's will for our people in relation to the reconstruction of battle-scarred Korea.

Concluding his address the speaker declared "May God help us as a privileged, blessed, sheltered, sincere, well-meaning Christian group to help spell out the word 'to give' and to do this in our time as followers of Christ.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

ON Wednesday, October 25, students observed "work day." Jobs were secured in the community and the money thus earned was turned over to the building fund. They had set $800 as their goal for the day. Gene Suter was chairman of the day's activities. Thursday afternoon, November 2, was set aside as "clean-up" day. Students and faculty members join in a clean up of the campus on that day. Thus the buildings and grounds will present a good appearance for Bible Lecture week. One of the chief activities of clean up day is the raking of leaves, which are very numerous due to the wooded character of the campus.

Representatives of the State Department of Education were on the campus Thursday afternoon, October 26, examining the set-up for the preparation of elementary teachers. Four men were in the examining group. It seemed that they were in general quite well pleased, but a written report will be received later.

Education classes plan to visit the University School, Ohio State University, November 6. The director of this school is Dr. John Ramseyer, an alumnus of Bluffton College. Two other alumni teach in the school.

Dr. J. E. Hartzler gave a very inspiring address Sunday afternoon, October 22, discussing his impressions secured from his study tour of five western European nations this past summer.

William Snyder, of the Mennonite Central Committee, was a chapel speaker October 27.

Well-known Mennonite educators and journalists from the United States and Canada will convene at Bluffton College November 16 to 18, for a conference on religious education. The theme of the conference is "The College Curriculum as an Organ for the Teaching of Christianity."

Members of the group of Mennonite and affiliated colleges have been invited to participate in this conference. Colleges belonging to this group include Eastern Mennonite College, Harrisonburg, Va.; Tabor College, Hillsboro, Kansas; Bethel College, North Newton, Kansas; Hesston College, Hesston, Kansas; Upland College, Upland, California; Messiah Bible College, Granthan, Pa.; Goshen College, Goshen, Indiana; Freeman Junior College, Freeman, South Dakota; and Bluffton College.

The Canadian Mennonite Bible College, Winnipeg, Manitoba; Mennonite Junior College, Rosthern, Sask.; the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago, Illinois; and the Biblical Seminary at Goshen, Indiana, have also been invited to attend. The conference is also open to others interested in this subject and desiring to participate in the meetings.

Jottings

MIDDLE DISTRICT

—Grace Church, Pandora, Ohio: A union meeting of the four misionary societies in this area was held October 10, with a pot-luck supper and program. The theme throughout was "We Visit Japan." The first week in October our Bible study prayer group under our pastor, E. J. Bohn, began a study of the book of Job. In August, thirty-five good-will Christmas bundles were prepared by the various classes of our Sunday school and sent to MCC Headquarters for European relief. One of the cabins on the new camp site on Shavehead Lake in Michigan, was recently purchased by our church. A number of our members donated several days of labor there this summer. Our choir director, Lawrence Burkhalter, instrumental music instructor of Bluffton College, will direct a union choir with "The Messiah," to be given December 25.—Susan Steiner, Corr.

WESTERN DISTRICT

—Inman Church, Inman, Kansas: We are happy to have with us our new pastor, Ben Rahn, and family of Paso Robles, California. They arrived October 14, and the following Monday a welcome and social was held in their honor. The installation service was held October 29, with Albert Gaeddert, pastor of the Hoffnungsau Church, Inman, Kansas, officiating.

PACIFIC DISTRICT

—Emmanuel Church, Los Angeles, Cal.: October 22, Peter Klassen brought the morning message, with William Regier of Pratum, Oregon, in charge of devotions. Andrew Shelly spoke here and showed pictures of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago, October 29. Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Regehr are parents of a daughter born October 18. A men's fellowship dinner was held November 3, with Henry Kliewer as guest speaker. Dorothy Schroeder, returned missionary from Africa, was guest speaker at the annual women's missionary program, November 5.—Mrs. Karl Quenzer, Corr.

—First Church, Aberdeen, Idaho: Ooctober 17, Peter Klassen from Brazil brought a message in English, and a report of conditions of various Mennonite groups in South America, in German. Mrs. H. N. Harder later gave the high points of this report in English for those "nicht verstehe." Our pastor has returned from a trip to California where he met with the evangelism committee of the Pacific District Conference.

Into the Beyond

MRS. MARY ELLENBERGER, West Point, Ia., a member of the Zion Mennonite Church, was born September 2, 1859, and died October 20, 1950.

PARAGUAN INTERLUDE, by Willard and Verna Smith (Herald Press—$2.25)

THE authors of PARAGUAYAN INTERLUDE, have been singularly well prepared by training, interest and background for the writing of this book. Some authors write for the hope of financial gain. These have written, without any such motive, but out of a heart filled with warmth and concern for the people who have traveled thousands and thousands of miles for conscience's sake. The Mennonites have settled in Paraguay, not because of the lure for riches, comfort or other advantages, but because this "hinterland" was the only one that offered these pilgrims a chance to establish their homes and live true to their convictions.

The book holds before the reader the power of a conviction and the glory of working toward a God-given goal, regardless of the toil and hardship that might be involved. The analytical mind of the historian and the sharing of the convictions of the people about whom the story is written, coupled with an interest in the cultural background of South America; have all been brought together in presenting to the reader a well-balanced, challenging and colorful story. May the Lord continue to bless the efforts of these people.

The Mennonite Central Com. has been the chief factor, under God, that made this undertaking possible. MCC is made up of every branch of Mennonites in North America. As the story is unfolded step by step, the reader cannot help but be thankful to God that he was able, in some manner, to help these brethren. At the same time the conviction grows that the task is not nearly finished, therefore we must continue to help: "For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required." To the band of Mennonites, who have served in this field under MCC or visited these brethren, this book brings many special thrills, in retracing their steps and experiences through the eyes of discriminating and competent observers.

FULL OF CLINKERS

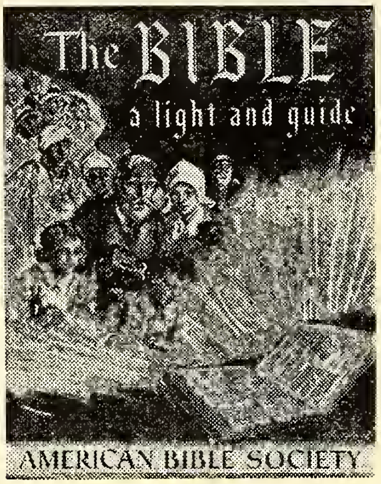
ANY boy who has spent a Saturday morning cleaning out the furnace, knows that you can't have a good fire when the fire box is full of clinkers. The draft doesn't get a chance at the coal, and the blaze is sluggish.

We wonder if some of us don't have a lot of clinkers in our mental furnaces. Sometimes our brains get so cluttered up with half-baked ideas and undigested mental junk that the real worth-while thoughts—the good, fresh coal—don't have a chance.

After all, every brain, just like every furnace, has room for just so much fuel. If a good part of the space is taken up by trash, there isn't much room left for the coal that really produces heat. Moreover, the mere presence of all the clinkers keeps your mental furnace from working efficiently.

It might be a good idea for you to set aside a day or an hour to clean out the ashes from your mind. Examine it, and see what you find. If there is a lot of stuff there that is not doing any good, you'd better get rid of it and give some worthwhile thoughts a chance. —Sunshine Magazine.

World Wide Bible Readings



THANKSGIVING TO CHRISTMAS

How to Find Help From Bible Reading

1.—Set aside and keep a regular Bible reading.
2.—Read prayerfully and thoughtfully. Try to relive the scenes.
3.—Read carefully and unhurriedly. "Time exposures," not snapshots, should be the rule.
4.—Read expectantly and reflectively. Look for the personal message in each day's passage.
5.—Read till a verse strikes fire. Your inner response to God's message is vital. When He condemns, bow penitently. When He offers light, place your hope on it. When He commands, obey. When He guides, follow.
6.—Copy out a key verse daily. Carry it with you, refer to it and repeat it throughout the day.
7.—Enter the New Year as a daily reader of the Bible. Make it a habit.

Beyond Our Own

Germany—Since the Jehovah's Witnesses were outlawed by the Soviet Zone government in Soviet controlled Germany recently, 1,000 members have been jailed and over 200 have fled to West Berlin. This persecution of Jehovah's Witnesses is similar to that of the Jews by the Nazis.

South Korea— Complete destruction of Chosen Christian University, a Presbyterian school in South Korea, has been reported by a former teacher in that institution. Previously the school enrolled over 1,300 students.

Seventh-Day Adventists— report a 24.3 per cent gain of membership since the year 1916. This means an increase of 140,000 members added to the church.

Western Germany—Dr. Manfred Mueller, president of the Council of Protestant Youth of Germany, reports that young Germans are opposing any rearmament program for that country saying, "We don't want to fight anymore, we've had enough. We want peace and work and an opportunity to put our talents to use.

Palestine—Sources from Palestine reveal that the ancient New Testament city of Jericho has been unearthed one mile west of the modern Jericho and two miles from the Old Testament city of the same name. Actual ruins of large buildings mark the place where Herod the Great had his winter capitol.

Poland—Boy Scouts have taken on a new semblance in Communist dominated Poland. All mention of God has been removed from the Boy Scout oath and scout laws have been changed to work for a Socialist State to promote friendship with Russia.

Denver, Colorado—During the 76th convention of the National Women's Christian Temperance Union in Denver recently, the outlawing of alcoholic beverages in the armed forces and 'wartime' prohibition for the nation, was strongly urged.

Cultivating a taste for beer in millions of young men in army camps," is the expressed purpose of two of the largest brewing companies in the United States, Blatz and Schlitz. The shocking offer by these companies "to fill the beer needs of all service men with no restraint" was accepted by the Army though the Army secretary turned down the offer. Now it is up to the President and his cabinet and the American taxpayer to use his voice—and his fountain pen!

Dr. Frank C. Laubach, a living example of the example of prayer, has been one of the instigators in making plans for a room for prayer in the new United Nations Headquarters. This sacred prayer room will be for all cultures, classes, races, and faiths as a symbol of the universal fatherhood of God and bortherhood of man.

For the first time in human history, representatives of all peoples of the world paused to recognize the Creator, in a prayer service of the United Nations General Assembly with President, General Romulo, leading the delegation. The decision to open and close sessions of the General Assembly with silent prayer was the result of the solicitation of the Christian and other religious people of the world.

Paris— A local newspaper has reported 6,000 legal desertions by sisters or novices from the Roman Catholic church in a single year. A general reform of convent life is being considered at this time at the Vatican.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION

The first Church of Nappanee, Indiana, will observe its 75th anniversary the week of November 19-26. Services on 19 and 24 will feature the church's history, old songs, pictures and exhibits. November 26 will be Homecoming Day, with services morning and afternoon and a dinner at noon. Former pastors E. S. Mullett of Wayland, Iowa, and J. J. Enz of Baltimore, Maryland, will speak.

The church, which was organized only one year later than the city of Nappanee was organized, extends an invitation to the community, former members and friends to help it celebrate this anniversary.

ORDINATION SERVICES

October 29 was observed as "Harold Graber Day" by the First Church of Pretty Prairie, Kansas. The Graber's were ordained as missionaries to the African Congo. Victor Graber, brother of Harold, was the principle speaker. Pastor Howard G. Nyee conducted the ordination service.

Words of congratulations and encouragement were given the Graber's by missionaries Neufeld and Mrs. James Heathershaw, returned workers from the Congo. A special program and shower was held Thursday evening at which the Neufelds gave interesting messages on what the nature of the Graber's work would be. A large number were present to wish them God's blessing in their service for the Lord.

MCC PEACE CONVENTION

The Peace Section of the Mennonite Central Committee sponsored a Peace Conference for November 9-12, held at Winona Lake, Indiana. Papers were presented on such topics as "Nonresistance and the Gospel," "What about the Non-combatant Position?" "Our Peace Witness to Christendom," "Nonresistance and Communism," and a number of others.

The conference was divided into four groups for a thorough discussion of the subjects presented, after which a Findings Committee summed up the discussions for each group and presented it for consideration in the general sessions. In view of present world conditions the conference was of great significance and should do much to help clarify the thinking of those who adhere to the nonresistent position regarding war.

IS THE DOOR ALREADY CLOSING?

HAVING heard so much about the "open door" for missions in Japan, it is somewhat of a shock to learn what Otis Carey, Japanese-born educator, missionary, and first-hand student of life in Japan has to say. Speaking to members of the Japan International Christian University Foundation, at a recent Board meeting, he declared that "the wide open door we have heard so much about since the war is gradually closing. . . The maximum post-war point of interest and curiosity in western ideas and institutions has been reached and the curve of enthusiams is leveling off without a real understanding having been reached."

If this is the case then Christian missions should enter the still-open door as rapidly as possible. Our own Conference interest in missions in Japan should move steadily ahead. There is such a thing as taking the tide at its flood or losing our venture. Even Jesus in His day declared that the kingdom requires haste. Perhaps never more so than now.

One of Japan's outstanding Christian leaders, Michio Kozaki, who is moderator of the Church of Christ in Japan, also warns that the optimistic impression that Japan would soon become a Christian nation must be tempered with realism. He predicts that the process of making Japan Christian will be slow and difficult. But, he concludes, "it is a good thing it will not be easy to make this nation Christian. It means that we ourselves must first be converted to be real witnesses for Christ. Accordingly, prayer and conversion of ourselves must be the first step. If we can take that step, then God will be able to accomplish the great things which we alone could not do."

The door is still open. It may be a race against time to bring the people of Japan the glorious Gospel and win them for Christ, or to lose our great opportunity. "The only way to keep an open door, is to enter that open door."

THE ADVENT SEASON

THE four weeks before Christmas are known in the Christian church as the Advent season. It is a time of prayer and fasting in preparation for the nativity, or the coming of Christ on Christmas Day. The few days around Christmas are too short to do justice to the occasion, so it is well to take a whole month for it. The preacher can well use these four Sundays in leading his people to a more appreciative understanding of the real meaning of Christmas. Business firms begin their Christmas sales early; why should the church lag behind in its great spiritual emphasis?

This is a good time to determine to keep Christmas Christian. We must never forget that we are celebrating the birthday of a Great King, even the Son of God Himself, and not merely coming to a day of selfish gratification. It would be a rude birthday party where the one having the birthday would be completely ignored. It is likewise an unholy Christmas season where the Christ is pushed aside and His day disgraced by selfish and unholy living.

Keep Christ in Christmas! Approach the Day with contrition and thanksgiving; with humility and great rejoicing; with renewed love and devotion for God's great Gift—His Son! The advent season provides a fine opportunity for a spiritual preparation for Christmas.

ON READING THE BIBLE

THE seventh Worldwide Bible Reading program, which is sponsored by the American Bible Society, begins on Thanksgiving Day and ends on Christmas Day. The theme that has been selected for this year is very timely: "The Bible—A Light and Guide." It would be well to review the simple rules for Bible reading as given in last week's issue of THE MENNONITE.

We should join heartily with the thousands around the world who will use the daily readings as suggested by the American Bible Society. It will not only link us up with a great world-wide fellowship of Christians but the well-loved Bible passages will speak anew to our hearts. If the habit of daily Bible reading is well established in the home, the children have a great spiritual advantage. How many pitfalls and sorrows they can avoid if the Bible is indeed their light and guide through life.

OVERCONFIDENCE

AT present writing there is a strong counter-offensive in the Korean war zone, and the United Nations troops are being driven back. One news commentator says it can be explained in part by the one word—"overconfidence."

We understand what that means. Frequently we hear of highly-favored athletic teams who lose before apparently weaker teams simply because they were overconfident. They were too sure of themselves; the contest seemed too easy, and so they lost their game and their standing as well.

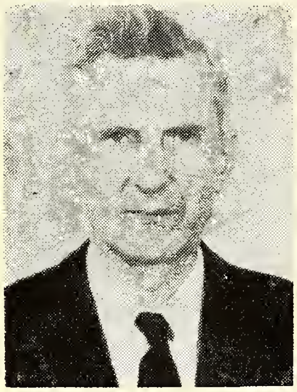
It is a common failure. Peter was too sure of his loyalty to Christ and failed in his denial. We who feel so sure of meeting our temptations are often shocked as we fall before a seemingly small attack. Overconfident. A certain ministerial student went confidently down the aisle and went into the pulpit with head held high. But he fumbled and stalled in his sermon, and, breaking down completely, stepped down from the pulpit with his head low in humility. The old deacon ventured the suggestion that if he had gone up as he came down he might have come down as he went up. Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.

How much more important is God-confidence than self-confidence. Paul dared to say, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me."

Experiences of Relief Work in Paraguay

A. W. Friesen

IT was a year ago in October when we returned from our 18 months stay in South America. Quite a few letters are finding their way to us here in U.S. from Paraguay. Many times we do wish that we could be with the dear people again, whom we had learned to know and love.



A. W. Friesen, former pastor Bethesda Church, Henderson, Nebraska; recent Relief worker in South America.

Let me describe the situation as we found it in the new settlement Neuland about 35 miles south of the older settlement Fernheim. About 10 villages of the now 25 had been established upon our arrival in September, of 1948. To see the shacks these people lived in was not so comforting. "A" huts, the type many farmers in the U.S. use for their pigs, was the only shelter these people had. The old colony of Fernheim took active steps to build homes for the widows. But to see as many as 30 persons in a small house, size 12 by 20, was no uncommon sight.

Sunday morning the occupants of the village would gather at some neighbors house or shack, and as soon as a few had gathered, some one started to sing. As we arrived on the scene, we generally found the group waiting for us already. Where are the other ministers, I asked upon my first arrival in a village gathering. We were told that none of their ministers they had in Russia were permitted to go with them, they all were "verschleppt." Think of a group of people of about 3500 and not a single minister in the group. Two brethren had been elected to the ministry in one of the relief camps in Germany. They served to the best of their ability. Others were elected during our stay in Paraguay. One of those elected to the ministry told me confidently that he had not known that there was such a gospel as Matthew in the Bible. How could he, or would you blame him? For the last 20 or more years, all church services had been forbidden in his village.

As a whole we soon found that suffering does not make people better or makes Christians of them. We found people that had become embittered against everyone. Others distrusted everything. But how grateful we were to find that so many were eager to hear the Word of God.

Well do I recall the discussion at a Bible study period. The theme centered around the thought of loving our enemies. The question was asked; has anyone present here today ever prayed for Stalin, that God may change his heart? Not one ventured to say yes. Here was an opportunity to test the faith of us all. Prayers were sent to the throne of grace for the MCC and friends who helped them to cross the ocean to Paraguay.

Camp life in Europe had its trials also. Many came to us and confessed that they had fallen short morally as well as spiritually while fleeing from place to place. Many had thought that living together as families was a thing of the past. The future seemed rather dark, and to many there was none.

We noticed quite a difference from the time of our arrival to when we left, that as a whole the people had a brighter outlook on life. The small Wirtschaften they had were their own. They need not fear communism. Sundays were again observed. Young people could again be married in a Christian way. The Bible was not a ridiculed book.

How hard it was to meet people with large families and so little of everything in the house. Food too was scarce. Many a time we met people who had nothing but milk for days at a time; not a piece of bread. It was a great opportunity to be present when on Christmas day clothing was distributed to young and old. It is true that it is more blessed to give than to receive. Some even expressed their views to this effect saying; when will we be able to give.

Sunday School was something new for the most of them. When we left Paraguay every village had a Sunday School, but only for the children. Mission festivals, Ernte Dank Fest was also observed. Yes, they too were thankful for their meager harvest.

During our stay we had the great joy of baptizing 68, mostly young people. One young man of about 19 years was baptized upon his sick bed. He was consumptive and very weak and frail. As mentioned before a relief worker must be alert on every hand. Much is expected of him too. Often you would find us out at four in the morning with a team of oxen traveling at a rate of two miles an hour, heading for a village from two to twelve miles away. Many times we would leave on the day before.

The jungle made a strange impression on us who were raised on the prairies and had never seen South American scenery, especially the Chaco. The newness soon wore off, but still it was not easy to go from village to village and speak as many as three or even more times a day, especially on Sundays. The people as a whole always accomodated us to the best of their knowledge and ability. But how thankful I was that I had two sides, so that I could turn from one to the other on those board beds. Relief work is not a luxury but a privilege to serve humanity in the name of Christ.

Missionaries Are Coming Out of China

E. E. Miller *

At her peak China had a total Protestant foreign missionary personnel of over 5,000 persons. During World War II this group was greatly reduced so that the number stood at less than a thousand. Following the war most mission boards again sent old missionaries and new recruits into China in sizable numbers, so that in 1948 the total of foreign workers was slightly under 4,000. Currently there are no exact figures but a census taken by the National Christian Council of China and published in June of this year states that 1,792 foreign workers are still in China.

In recent weeks there is, however, a rapid exodus. Parties of missionaries now arrive in Hong Kong at least every week. The Christian and Missionary Alliance had seventy workers in China last year. Now they have five. The Norwegian Lutheran Mission had eighty missionaries two years. Now they have only two. The Methodist Board still has over one hundred missionaries in China. They had two hundred last year and their Hong Kong secretaries say that after three more months they will have less than a dozen. The London Missionary Society plans to move all their missionaries out of the WuHan province by the end of the year. Eleven members from the faculty of Christian China University are to arrive here this week.

This exodus of missionaries from China is taking place for several reasons. The furloughs of some are due and they are coming out in the ordinary course of procedure. A good many missionaries are coming out because they fear a third World War and the practical certainty that this will mean their being forced into concentration camps. But the larger share are coming out because the government of the Republic of Free China is making it increasingly difficult for them to carry on their work.

What do these missionaries do after coming out of China? A good many are going to Europe, Norway, and Sweden as fast as passage arrangements can be made. Again, many are being transferred to other Far Eastern mission fields supplementing present work and opening up new stations in Japan, in the Philippines, in Malaya, in New Guinea, and in India. And a rather sizable group are staying on in Hong Kong. Some of these staying on hope they may again get opportunity to re-enter China in more propitious days. Others are engaging in mission work among the several million Chinese in Hong Kong, Kowloon, and the new territories.

There is a remarkable response to the Gospel among the many Chinese groups. One missionary last week baptized 140 adults in a single service in one of the refugee camps. Theaters are being used in Hong Kong to house the crowds at a Sunday morning service. Some China missionaries have brought groups of church leaders and students with them and are conducting their schools in Hong Kong for the present. Still others are engaging in the preparation of Christian literature which is sent into China in large quantity for use and distribution by the native Christians. One society has sent in 620,000 pieces of literature during the first seven months of this year. They consider this a vital ministry to the interior.

Stories also come to us of the faith and heroism shown in many places by Chinese Christians in the interior. Pastors who are no longer able to take a salary or receive offerings from their congregations are finding work and are still serving their churches. Courageous Christian students in Chungking continue to sing and preach the Gospel in the streets. In many places the church is accepting the challenge of Communism. The personal faith of these Christians is beset with difficulty and perils. Let us pray that they may strive to witness in the spirit of Christian love and integrity.

Usher Resistance

It was the Sunday before Christmas. If ever I am in the mood to worship the King, it is at Christmas time. I approached the entrance to the sanctuary. I guess I wasn't particularly wanted. At least no usher was there to usher me into the House of God. Nevertheless, I went in—still no usher, except in the far corner apparently waiting until I should "Eenie, meenie, minie, moe" to which aisle I should go.

Since my dubious friend in the far corner was the only usher in view, I took a chance and headed for his station. He handed me the order of worship and started down the aisle without so much as a welcoming nod, a whispered word, or even an inquiry as to where I would prefer to sit. I really was tempted to sit not so far forward as he indicated, but my good manners triumphed, although my blood pressure was getting higher with each step.

The service began—the call to worship, the opening music, the scripture reading—all brought me back to the atmosphere of worship. But just as the choir reached the high point in its anthem, "WHAM!" The usher breezed by to slam the window down. When the minister announced the offering there was an embarrassing delay—the ushers were late. Just before the minister began his sermon, some late comers were squeezed into my pew, upsetting the poise and worshipful mood of all concerned.

Yes, it was a beautiful service and an inspiring sermon, but with lots of "Usher Resistance." All of which leads me to suggest that ushers should be as well trained for their part in the worship service as the musicians, the minister and others who help one enjoy a satisfactory worship experience.

A Letter Paul did not Write

DOUBTLESS you will remember the invitation you extended me to come over into Macedonia and help. Pardon me for saying that I am somewhat surprised that you should expect a man of my standing in the church seriously to consider a call on such meager information.

There are a number of things that I should like to learn before giving my decision, and I would appreciate your dropping me a line, addressing me at Troas.

First of all, I should like to know if Macedonia is a circuit or a station. This is important, as I have been told that once a man begins on a circuit, it is well nigh impossible to secure employment in station work. If Macedonia embraces more than one preaching place I may as well tell you that I cannot consider accepting the call.

There is another item that was overlooked in your brief and somewhat sudden invitation. No mention was made of the salary I was to receive. While it is true that I am not preaching for money, there are certain things that must be taken into account. I have been through a long and expensive course of training; in fact I may say with reasonable pride that I am a Sanhedrin man—the only one in the ministry today.

The day is past when you may expect a man to rush into a new field without some idea of the support he is to receive. I have worked myself up to a good position in the Asiatic field and to take a drop and lose my grade would be serious. Nor could I afford to swap "dollar for dollar" as the saying is among us apostles.

Kindly get the good Macedonian brethren together and see what you can do in the way of support. You have told me nothing about Macedonia beyond the implication that the place needs help. What are the social advantages? Is the church well organized?

I recently had a fine offer to return to Damascus at an increase of salary, and am told that I made a very fine impression on the church at Jerusalem. If it will help any with the board at Macedonia you might mention these facts, and also some of the brethren in Judea have been heard to say that if I kept on, in a few years I might have anything in the gift of the church. I am a first class mixer and especially strong on argumentative preaching. If I accept the call, I must stipulate for two month's vacation and the privilege of taking an occasional lecture tour.

My lecture on "Over the Wall in a Basket," is worth two drachma of any man's money.

Fraternally and sincerely yours,

Paul

Report of Women Missionary Conference

ON Thursday, October 26, 1950, the fourteenth annual meeting of the Indiana All-Mennonite Missionary Union was held at the Evangelical Mennonite Church, at Berne, Indiana, with Mrs. E. E. Kreider, Goshen, Indiana, as the chairman.

The theme for the day was—"For Such a Time as This"—taken from Esther 4:14. The worship services for the three sessions were—"Prayer, for such a time as this" given by Mrs. Jacque Westridge of the First Church, Berne; "Stewardship, for such a time as this" by Mrs. Olin Krehbiel, also of the First Church, Berne; and "Consecration, for such a time as this" by Mrs. Menno Stauffer of the Grabill Church.

The speaker for the morning session was Miss Lois Slagle, a registered nurse who has served one term as a missionary in the Belgian Congo. She related how ignorance, superstition, and fear are the great hinderances to physical release from pain and disease, as well as to spiritual health found in the cleansing power of Jesus Christ from sin. Miss Lucille Rupp of the Evangelical Mennonite Conference gave a short talk on mission work in the Dominican Republic.

Miss Gladys Hershberger, a former teacher in the American School at Beirut, Syria, spoke on "Life in the Near East" during the afternoon meeting. She pointed out the similarities and also the differences between Islam and Christianity, the importance of the Near East as the background of our Bible, and the tensions which exist as these ancient countries work for their political freedom.

In the absence of Mrs. J. S. Schultz because of illness, Mrs. Harry Yoder of Bluffton, Ohio, read a paper prepared by Mrs. Schultz on "Serving the Lord through Projects." In addition to making practical suggestions for projects, she stressed the importance of the spirit in which work is done, and the necessity of doing good to all men but first to the household of faith in both mission and relief work.

The evening address was given by Dr. Jacob Prins of Grand Rapids, Michigan, who is at the head of the Evangelism and Stewardship Committee in the Reformed Church. In his talk on consecration, he pleaded that we do more than call Jesus, "Lord, Lord." We must give evidence of knowing Him by our every day life and living.

Officers elected for the year are—President, Miss Inda Sprunger, Berne; Vice President, Mrs. Garth Stoltz, Topeka; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Elden Schrock, Nappanee; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Jerry Sauder, Grabill; Treasurer, Mrs. Harold Zook, Woodburn.

Generously do more than your share, and by and by you will share generously.

Is Christ Really Relevent?

(Summary of an address given by Dr. Henry Hitt Crane at the Bethel College Founders' Day, October 12, 1950.)

HENRY Hitt Crane, speaking on this subject, told the Bethel College Founders' Day audience that the "sin of irrelevance" is perhaps the most sinister of all sins.

Religion, too often used as an escape mechanism, must be applied to the problems of our day. Christ himself emphasized the importance of dedicating the mind to God. To be conscientious, and yet leave the conscience uninstructed produces a catastrophic situation.

All of us occasionally fear submitting our faith to critical investigation. Dr. Crane suggested that those least sure of their faith are the most afraid to submit to investigation, but are the first to persecute others. Faith can be defended only by putting it into practice and letting it defend the individual. Only an intelligent faith can be made relevant to the problems of our day.

The major issue dominating our minds is the question of survival. Confronted by an incredible foe—"sinister, aggressive, godless, and proud of it"—we see only two alternatives in our dealing with Russia: appeasement or war. The first is advantageous to the enemy and is morally and ethically unsound. But the use of war violates a fundamental law of the universe—the "law of harvest." Sowing war, we can not reap peace. An ultimate idiocy is the assumption that by preparing for war we get peace; at its best, this is sanctified ignorance. Any modern mind that "believes it possible for either side to win the next war is in the ultimate stages of paranoia."

Belief in the vile delusion that "the ultimate arbiter in all disputes is physical power" is our major problem. This delusion is the essence of our bedevilment which makes us spend 60 billion dollars a year sowing war in an effort to reap peace.

The only really relevant personality of this hour is Jesus Christ, who himself lived in a situation where the dictator had won. Christ's real temptation was the problem of how to meet the un-Christian and barbarous Romans. His decision was clear. When Peter drew the sword, he made the ungodly presumptious gesture that he knew better than Jesus. Today, we too presume that we know more than Jesus who said, "Put up thy sword."

Christ gave us a third alternative: live your way; do no appease; and when the enemy kills you, die blessing them! Don't kill for your cause. Die for it!

Challenging the Mennonites to cling to their historic position on peace and war, Dr. Crane made the following statement: "God forbid that you should ever desert the ideals that you have lived for. It is time that you live them more loudly and persistently."

Economic Conditions in Witmarsum

HERE in Brazil the harvest season ends in April. Actually something is harvested the year round, yet the main crop is gathered in Fall, that is in March and April. Harvest Thanksgiving is usually celebrated in May.

This past year we had comparatively good weather. In summer there were about three months of rainy season which was good for the crops. Of greatest importance for us here is rain in November and December. In the heat of summer one rain each week is necessary if the plants are to flourish. As there is comparatively little wind here, the moisture is maintained even in the hot summer if the rain does not come regularly each week.

Next to drouth one could designate Frost as enemy number two of the farmer. If it freezes early in May, then the cattle fodder freezes which otherwise remains green all winter long and can be fed to the cattle fresh every day. The green cattle pastures also fall victim to frost. This means unforeseen expenses for the farmer.

The tuber "Aipim" which is used for cattle and as a potato substitute for the people, is harvested principally in winter. It is also used for making starch in the Witmarsum starch factory which belongs to the Association. Delivery of "Aipim" to the starch factory begins May 1 and continues until late in August.

Next to starch, sassafrass oil is an important article of export. Factories especially designed and equipped for the purpose, obtain this oil from the wood of a tree in the virgin forests, which is called Canella Sassafrass here. This year the oil produced a good income for the farmers, who deliver the wood for it. The oil is delivered only to the U.S.A.

Further income is derived from the sale of wood. The lumber business has revived somewhat. It was quite dormant for a number of years. Except for pine, all lumber goes into home trade.

Maize (Indian corn) also produces income. This year's corn crop could be called very good. Prices therefore dropped some. However, since prices on fed hogs are very good, the corn is mostly fed to hogs. Hogs have a good market and this is further income for the farmer.

Lately the market has been good for butter and milk. The Association is about to establish a new creamery. This branch did well the first six months of 1950.

These are the main products that can be marketed and we are glad of it for it is hard to make progress on a one-crop system here in Brazil for one is entirely subject to arbitrary prices. Prices may become more stabilized when other States begin to enter the market as buyers.

All in all one can say that the present year is economically a good one.

Volunt

A Stimulus To

DURING the past several years and continuing into the present, increasing numbers of our young people are entering shorter or longer periods of Voluntary Service. Young people are consecrating talents, time, and energy to the Lord's use. During the past summer it was our privilege to spend about four weeks visiting ten of the MCC summer service unit projects in the eastern states. This experience prompts us to write this testimonial concerning the long-lasting good which Voluntary Service does, and the stimulus which it can, and does give our young people to exercise themselves in a greater usefulness in the home church upon their return.

This long-range view is not to pass by or to ignore for a moment the direct contribution which Voluntary Service makes in terms of the needs it serves. One could wax long and eloquent on the "service" of Voluntary Service: attendants, caring for the mentally ill; housemothers, watching over groups of maladjusted boys; counsellors running through the daily schedule of a summer camp (Bible lessons, recreation, crafts, chapel services, etc.) with a group of spiritually needy children; girls giving loving service to homeless and motherless tiny tots; other girls reaching hands of mercy to wayward mothers; young men showing delinquent boys how to work and play and pray; and still others giving a spiritual ministry to cheer the evening hours of migrant workers in New York state. This was their work, and they did it in commendable fashion. One could not but thank God, as we went from project to project and heard the appreciative responses from the heads of institutions and from the recipients of the service of these young servants of Christ.

THE INFLUENCE ON THE YOUNG PEOPLE

But that is not our story. Instead of giving the facts and information concerning the actual work of these projects, we would endeavour to bring to the surface what are perhaps some of the most outstanding hopes and desires and visions and potentialities of the sixty young people whom we learned to know in these projects.

One of the greatest challenges in the whole program centers around the fact that the young people who enter it have come to a certain decision point in their lives and in their Christian experience; otherwise, they would not volunteer, or if they did, they would certainly not stick it out.

It is a particularly solemn thought, therefore, that Voluntary Service is many times the result of a deep-seated decision; Voluntary Service is entered oftentimes at a crucial time in the young person's experience. Consequently, the experience in Voluntary Service will have a far-reaching and determining influence on the further course of life and action which these young people will take in the cause of the Kingdom.

THE PART OF THE HOME CHURCH

A particularly significant role in this whole program is also played by the home church, in her attitude both before her young people leave for Voluntary Service, and while they are there. And perhaps most important of all is her attitude after they return.

Our churches have often contributed very essentially to help our young people make the decision to enter Voluntary Service. Recognizing this, our young people are anxious that upon their return from Voluntary Service, they might render a service to the church which has contributed so much to their privileges of progress and experience in the Lord's work. The home church may expect to utilize this potential of her returning youth. What are some of these visions and hopes and dreams of her young people in Voluntary Service of which she may well take note?

EXPERIENCE IN RECOGNIZING NEED

Not all of them are purely visionary or theoretical, by any means. These young people have learned to see and recognize need. These needs are all around us wherever we are, but many times are noticed the least in our home churches and communities.

It is wonderful, though, what a period of service away from home will do to open one's eyes to the open doors of need and opportunity right in our own neighborhood. The needs and opportunities were there at home before these young people left for service, but they didn't begin to see them clearly until they were away from home, and had the benefit of reflection and meditation which such a separation from familiar surroundings affords.

Having served these needs away from home, our young people will now be seeking ways and means to translate this Voluntary Service experience into a meaningful expression at home. They are convinced that what they have learned to do in these units is not at all irrelevant to what they may expect to do in their home churches. They have exercised themselves for Christ in certain specific skills. They feel that the Lord of the Church is now calling them to continue this usefulness.

TRAINING FOR CHRISTIAN SERVICE

Some of them have witnessed to the sick. Young men and women can translate this kind of Voluntary Service experience into a most practical church service back home—visiting the sick and witnessing to unfortunates of all descriptions. We ordinarily do too little bearing of one another's burdens. In Voluntary Service this is done in an organized way. Certainly our young people may be expected to continue this same service in the informal and spontaneous experience of sharing with the pastor in this type of visitation.

In Voluntary Service our young people have worked with children. Without a doubt those who entered into the real spirit of this service, will be better qualified to return to their home churches and serve as teachers of children in Sunday School, or as workers in other types of special children's activities. Summer camps for children on the local congregational or district conference level will also appreciate the services of those who have had Voluntary Service experience, working with children.

Service

Others of our Voluntary Service workers have served what we might call particularly the "sinner" class—the delinquents, the immoral, the drunken, even murderers, and all the rest of that shameful list. And we have some of this same kind of people in our communities back home. If our young men and women have had the courage to serve and witness to such people in an institutional environment, may we not expect that they be the first to show us in the home church how to stoop with the love of God to these who need so desperately to know that Jesus saves?

Voluntary Service is also a training for our young people in assuming responsibility and in learning to get along with other people. To the extent that our young people applied Christian principles in their group living and in their relationships with those outside their group, they proclaimed vividly the Christ way of peace, love, mercy, and kindness. This experiment in corporate living should go a long way to help these sons and daughters "fit in" when they return to their homes and churches again. And not only should the experience help them in making their own personal adjustments, it should also qualify them to be good leaders and followers in the Body of Christ—assuming responsibilities where God and the Church call them to lead, and cooperatively supporting the program where they are called to follow.

A DEEPER FAITH

Finally, our young people have cultivated a devotional spirit, and gained a certain freedom of expression and Christian testimony through their Voluntary Service experience. God gives this grace to those who are willing to exercise themselves in it. Our young people have had occasion to express themselves concerning their faith before all kinds of witnesses. They will return with firmer faith, deeper convictions, and a stronger testimony than they had when they left. They will want to continue this grace of witnessing.

We at home will be glad to hear their testimony. We must then continue to send out more of our sons and daughters into Voluntary Service. And we must be ready to give them the opportunity to express themselves when they return. We must encourage them along the way by fervent prayer and kindly counsel, that they may continue to serve Christ and the Church "voluntarily" wherever they are.

Homemaking in Paraguay

There are homes the world over. There are modern ranch type homes in America with every convenience modern science can provide. There are primitive huts with dirt floors in which animals and humans mingle. The homes of Paraguay are different from those we know, yet though outwardly different, they can retain an inward spiritual grace which has the power to bind homes of the humble and homes of the wealthy together under one Lord.

WHEREVER we go we find homes. These may vary from large houses with many rooms and modern conveniences to mere huts which give but little shelter from the weather. Whatever the conditions may be, someone calls it home. These extremes we have noted in traveling from one part of the world to another.

The homes in Asuncion, like in all cities, house the rich and the poor. One difference we have noticed from our own country is that here one may see a beautiful house with lawn and just across the street the neighbors live in a three-walled mud hut with chickens, dogs, cats, and perhaps a cow or donkey all crowded together in a small space.

Homemaking in Asuncion naturally will vary a great deal depending on who the individuals are. Having never lived in a Paraguayan home I could hardly give a clear picture of it. I could mention, however, that all homes of any means have a maid or two to do the housework and care for the children. These maids work for a very small wage.

Here I will try to give a little idea of how we have tried to adjust using some Paraguayan equipment along with our North American ideas of housekeeping. When we first arrived here our household equipment had not yet arrived so for several months we had opportunity to live the Paraguayan way. In the kitchen was the built-in charcoal stove, which we found a very good source of heat, sometimes too good since there is no method of regulating. It is a bit dirty since the pots and pans are placed directly on the open coals. To start a fire or speed up a slow one, a little fanning helps but it also adds ashes to the gravy.

Our typical Paraguayan kitchen had one large opening which served for entrance and light since there were no windows. There was no method of closing so the neighbor's cats occupied it by night and we by day. This kitchen was a separate building to the rear of the main house which made for many steps but helped to keep the house somewhat cooler.

Our water we still carry from a nearby cistern and feel very fortunate to have this water supply. We boil all drinking water since most well water is salty and unfit for drinking. Another new experience was the first trip to the public market. Most purchasing of food is done at the market so that comparatively little is done in what we would call a grocery store. Year around fresh fruits and vegetables are available at the market so that we can always have a well balanced diet. The vegetables include most of the common ones we have at home. Fruits vary more in this tropical climate. Instead of apples, peaches and cherries, we enjoy an abundance of bananas, citrus fruits during the winter months, and pineapple during the summer. There are also various varieties that are entirely new to us.

The story of food would hardly be complete without mentioning mandioka, which is a root-like growth used as a potato substitute. Also sweet potatoes are commonly eaten since the regular potatoes are not grown here and imported ones are quite expensive. Meat is the most essential item in the Paraguayan's diet and it is also cheap. Beef is the meat that is eaten most. If one is near the market about mid-afternoon a person sees them bring in the fresh meat which is hung there in the warm open air all night, and next morning people crowd in to purchase it.

Once out of the U.S.A. one is rather shocked at the manner in which food is handled. The first meal eaten after returning from the first trip to market, somehow didn't taste good. While there you feel you are pushed from side to side as the crowd passes on. Just in front of you may be a lady with a large basket on her head so you keep pulling back to avoid bumping it. Then from the rear someone else pushes you forward—the dogs must get through too and from time to time a long tail brushes your legs. You don't want to be fussy, but you do wonder why you put on that clean dress to go to market.

Each dwelling in Asuncion is enclosed by a stone wall and no windows face a neighbor. On hot days this custom seems quite a nuisance but it has its advantages too in a land where the law allows a great deal of liberty in this line. We have also found it serves as an excellent means of keeping track of your child.

Perhaps you have heard of the colonists having very litle variety in diet and may wonder why I say ours is well-balanced. This condition is largely due to extremely poor means of transportation. An example may be taken from the watermelons that do so well in the Chaco while in Asuncion they are of very poor quality. Costs of transportation would exceed the value of the melons. Many fruits and vegetables are not grown in the colonies for various reasons. In some cases when seed was sown the soil was unfit, rainfall not adequate, or some insects had eaten it. Then the individual naturally felt discouraged and perhaps was not even financially able to buy more seed to do more experiments. Our Experimental Farm in the Chaco is working to introduce new and better varieties suited to this climate and it is hoped in this way to benefit the people here.

Another difficulty is lack of methods of preserving what foods they do have when they are in season, so that there are periods of plenty and again those of little variety. Consider our well filled cellars and grocery stores with their many canned varieties and then one realizes the same condition of lean seasons would hold true there if we had not these. Glass jars are now being introduced here but still come quite expensive since they must be imported.

Many homemakers here in the colonies are doing a fine job with what they have available. I think extra mention should be given to the housewives for the many long hours of hard work they put in daily for their families. They do the family laundry with hand machine or on the washboard. Quite often the water must be carried some distance, especially in the new colonies. They then iron with charcoal irons. They bake kafir bread with yeast also prepared by themselves. Most of them bake in outdoor ovens where they first make a good fire of wood, let it burn down to live coals, remove the coals, and then put in the bread to bake. Upon first seeing this procedure one wonders how such an oven can ever bake properly, but they turn out very nice bread. These live coals that are removed may also be used then to fill the iron if they wish to iron at that time. Through experience they have learned many methods of preserving temporarily. Meat can be purchased twice a week from the cooperative. They fry it and by covering it with oil keep it several days even in the heat of summer.

Besides preparing all the food for the family, and nothing is bought ready to serve, they do many outdoor tasks. The widows especially must do hard work in the fields. Here it is considered the woman's duty to milk the cows so she does this too along with the many other things she must do in caring for the family. Most homes still have earthen floors which call for extra attention to keep them in good condition. They also add to the laundry where there is a creeping baby. We too often take all our equipment for granted at home and not until we see how others must labor with primitive means do we realize how much work housekeeping can be. Many families in the colonies are large so the mother has a great responsibility in bringing her children up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Is the Mother busy? Yes, very much so all day long and all days of the year.

As we live among these people we are often impressed with the happiness that exists in family life. Surely all our modern conveninces do not make for contentment. The house, whether great or small, is truly home where Christ is the Guest.

Looking Back at Work in Paraguay

Ruth Harder

Ruth Harder is the wife of Rev. Ernst Harder and a native of Hillsboro, Kansas. She with her husband went to Paraguay under the M.C.C. Rev. Harder is a native of Paraguay who came to America under the Young Peoples Union auspices where he studied prior to returning for work in Paraguay. At present the Harders are studying at Mennonite Biblical Seminary completing their seminary work.

WE are at present enjoying a restful trip to Buenos Aires on the river boat "General Artigas." This is Friday afternoon and we are not yet in Buenos Aires although we were due there yesterday morning at seven. Already since Monday evening we have not been traveling on our own power, but two tugs have been keeping us moving slowly. This is our second experience of this nature so it make us wonder whether it is we or the captain! Having to spend so much time between Asuncion and Buenos Aires we will very likely not be able to stop in Montevideo as planned.

To us it does not yet seem possible that we will not be returning to Asuncion after a few weeks vacation. Looking back over the last three and one half years we see rich and varied experiences. Perhaps we can share some of these experiences with you.

Shortly after our arrival in Asuncion we made a trip to Colonia Friesland to visit Ernst's father and sister. This was my first trip on a river boat. To add to the thrill of the trip we traveled "second class" which meant standing up or sitting on a wooden box all night. The food served was not at all appetizing so we resorted to our own little lunch box. Then came the wagon ride from Rosario to the colony and the over-night stay in an outdoor hotel in the middle of nowhere. This hotel was a large tree. The sky served as our roof and the stars as the electric lights. The night-watchmen were the cattle and horses grazing around us all night. Our bed was a sheepskin spread on the ground. Wrapped up in our blankets we tried to keep warm and at the same time sleep a bit. After several hours of rest we continued our journey, arriving at Ernst's home about noon. That was the first time I ever saw a colony village, the street, the farm houses on either side and all that goes with it. The main reason for our visit was to attend the wedding of Ernst's father to his present stepmother. That too, was something new, a wedding in the village school house. After spending a week there we returned to Asuncion.

Rev. and Mrs. Ernst Harder worked under the M.C.C. with refugees and under the Home Mission Board in establishing a church in Asuncion.

Just a few days after we returned from Friesland, we were assigned to the refugee camp in San Lorenzo—first with a smaller group of 380, then later up to 1,300 in two camps. As the group got larger other MCC workers shared the work with us. Here we experienced our first revolution in Paraguay which is a story in itself. We must say, however, that God's protecting hand was certainly over us throughout the unsettled times which were then prevailing. Later conditions became more settled and we were able to send the people to their respective colonies. The most unnatural thing about the camp life was that people didn't have much work to do and couldn't earn money as they all wanted to. But the life itself went on as in any normal community—weddings, funerals, births, church services, Sunday school, week-day school, Bible classes, baptism, etc. were not absent in our camp. Naturally everything was out of doors, but it was possible. After eight months the last of our people left and we too were able to go to Asuncion in October, 1947. Since the Mennonite Home was over crowded at the time we and Buhrs moved to a residence on Paraguari 563 which was our home until we left Asuncion. We shall never forget that place. Both of us worked in the Asuncion office and Ernst also looked after the spiritual welfare of our group in the city as best he could with the time available. In 1948, we were again privileged to help with the three groups of refugees.

It was not until January, 1949, after our two-year term with MCC was over that we had opportunity to visit the Chaco and Volendam. This trip would be a story in itself too, but suffice it to say that we enjoyed it so much that we could easily call it a vacation. We returned from our visit to the colonies about the middle of February and then began our work under the General Conference Home Mission Board.

I had started a Sunday School shortly after we concluded our refugee camp work, but now concentrated more on it. Soon our group of children was large enough for two classes. The girls of the Sunday School class became interested in getting together once a week to do handwork. Our first project was Christmas gifts for the Indian Mission in the Chaco. After that they did handwork with the thought of selling articles at a mission sale. This too became a reality on April 22, our last Sunday evening in Asuncion. After a short program given by the girls they sold their own articles and took in over 300 guaranies, which was more than twice as much as they had expected.

When we first came the Sunday attendance was around 40 and our services were held in the Mennonite Home. As the group became larger we felt we should have our worship services in a church. The Plymouth Brethren church was willing to let us use their church on Sunday afternoons so our services have been there ever since. It has been a joy to see the increase in interest and attendance. Now our attendance was from 180 and up. We had over 30 Sunday school children which means there will soon be a third class.

Our prayer is that the work might become so powerful that all the Mennonites in Asuncion might be won for Christ and the church. One of the greatest joys we experienced in the work was the organizing of the church on the 29th of April. A group of about 30 gathered in our home on Sunday morning for a worship service followed by a period of testimony of those who wanted to become the charter members. Following this the eight baptismal candidates also gave their testimonies. On Palm Sunday we had our first baptismal service and on Good Friday the communion service. We felt very rightly blessed and could not help giving special thanks to our Heavenly Father for the work He has done and is doing in the hearts and lives of our Mennonites in Asuncion.

We also tried to work with the young people. The first Sunday in the month was young people's night at our home. The interest was good and the programs were varied, but the young people must first learn to know each other before they will speak up freely. Their experiences in the past years have not been conducive to fostering a spirit of Christian fellowship but rather the opposite. Most of the young people are eager to learn the Word of God, but have thus far not had the opportunity because they have had to move from place to place.

During the Paraguayan revolution, refugees from Europe were billetted in barracks ouside Asuncion. Here Rev. and Mrs. Harder cared for these people, cooking out doors, ministering in every way they could until the people could move on and establish their own homes.

Our choir met every week and assisted in the Sunday service. We also had a young people's library and reading room in our home. We were happy to be able to offer the young people at least something worthwhile to read, but this phase of the work should be expanded. It is rather difficult to keep in close contact with all the young people because there is at least a 50 per cent turnover among the working girls and young men every few months. Their jobs are in various parts of the city and their free time varies so that one cannot get them all together at any one time. Nevertheless, the work is very challenging. Recently a sewing circle has also been organized by one of the MCC workers for the working girls, so most of them try to arrange their free time to be able to take part.

Our weekly Bible study evenings were held in the Mennonite Home. The Home in itself renders a great service to our Mennonites and we want to express our sincere appreciation for the cooperation we received from them. The Sunday evening suppers and evening services play an important part in the fostering of the spiritual work, and the people enjoy coming to the Mennonite Center. We also thank the MCC unit for their help and cooperation in the church work and Sunday School and wish them God's blessing in their future work.

We left Asuncion, and Paraguay as a whole, with the prayer on our lips that God might richly bless our people and the work which is being done to further his Kingdom. We will not forget our many friends and will be praying for them.

Our Colleges and Seminary

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

SPECIAL emphasis was given to the Religion in American Life Campaign in the chapel service, Friday, November 2. Rev. McIntire, president of the Bluffton Ministerial Association spoke, and a sound still film was shown which reviewed the accomplishments of the special November emphasis period last year.

On Sunday evening, November 5, The Bluffton Student Christian Association entertained the Christian organizations of Findlay College and Ohio Northern University. There was a devotional program and social hour. This relationship between colleges in some activity other than athletic competition is a good thing. Church colleges have in common a great faith and only too rarely do students of the various schools get together in programs of a devotional nature. Findlay is sponsored by the Church of God and Northern by the Methodists.

Rev. Harry Yoder preached in the Stirling Avenue Mennonite Church, Kitchener, Ontario, Sunday, November 5, and spent several days visiting in that community in the interest of the college.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

THROUGH the generosity of Dr. J. E. Hartzler of Goshen, Indiana, a pulpit and two chairs have been added to the furnishings of Pioneer Hall.

The Sunday Evening Club of Chicago has again invited the Freeman College Choir to present a concert in OrchestraHall.The evenings open with a half hour of music by a choir usually from a Chicago church but also from outside such as Freeman's occasional visits. This is followed by a biblical exposition by the president of the organization after which the speaker of the evening brings his address.

The College operetta, "The Mikado," presented November 2 and 3, underwent an eleventh hour change in the lead part of Nanki-Poo. Originally taken by Carlyle Groves of Freeman it was taken by Mr. Walter Jost, due to the death of Carlyle's father.

BETHEL COLLEGE

THE Work Day, Monday, October 23, proved to be a complete success. Donations from earnings on this day total about $2,000. This money will be used to complete the cinder track so Bethel will be in a position to entertain various track meets on college, high school, and grade school levels. Money not used for this purpose will be used in the construction of the new library.

As a feature of the state teacher's meetings at Wichita, teachers who are graduates and former students of Bethel met in a Reunion Banquet at the Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church, November 3, 5:30 P.M. Miss Amelia Mueller now teaching in the Hutchinson public schools was the speaker.

The Red Cross Blood Donor Mobile again visited the Bethel campus on Monday, November 6. A year ago Bethel College students and staff members contributed a total of 111 pints of blood to this program.

Acting President D. C. Wedel, attended three meetings in an official capacity in Chicago the past week. He met with the Editorial Committee of the General Conference Board of Education and Publication, October 26-28, and with the Board of Directors of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, October 31. He also attended the National Commission on Accrediting.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

THE official College opening for 1950-51 was observed on Sunday, October 22. Morning services were held in the College Chapel. The theme was "Praise and Thanksgiving." G. G. Neufeld, Whitewater, Man., President of the Manitoba Conference, delivered the main message for the services.

The afternoon services were held in the Young United Church which the College was able to rent for the occasion. Speakers were Rev. F. F. Sawatzky, Gnadenthal, Man., and Rev. W. H. Enns, Acting Chairman of the College Board. Testimonies were given by two of the students. During the meeting scholarships were awarded to the highest-ranking boy and girl for the College year 1949-50, namely, Menno Bergen and Katherine Klippenstein.

Thus was begun the fourth year that this College has been in operation, and once more both staff and students have dedicated themselves to a term of expository thought and wholesome study.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

OUR students and faculty assisted in the evangelistic services in the First Mennonite Church, October 22-27, led by Rev. Olin Krehbiel of Berne, Indiana, who is president of the General Conference.

The Editorial Committee of the General Conference met here on October 26-28. This meeting was arranged by one of our graduates of last year, Ronald von Riesen, Executive Secretary of the Board of Education and Publications, and was attended by Paul Shelly, David C. Wedel, I. I. Friesen, Mrs. E. J. Miller and Willard Wiebe.

Then we had the E. B. Hoff Memorial Lectures delivered by Dr. Vernon F. Schwalm, president of Manchester College. The morning series

EASTERN DISTRICT

—Springfield, Saucon and Perkasie Churches, Perkasie, Pa.: Springfield Sunday school attendance has been increasing during the last few months. Communion service and Harvest Home services were well attended. During the past year the young people's Sunday school class turned over about $400 to the church building fund. The building fund now amounts to $4,000.

Attendance at the Saucon communion service was 107. Sixty-nine received communion, five were baptized and two were received into the church by the right hand of fellowship.

About 85 attended Perkasie communion service with 60 receiving communion and four being baptized. The foreign mission offering in the service was $120. —Corr.

—Hereford Church, Bally, Pa.: The women's organization had a food shower for our minister's family at one of their recent meetings. A fellowship dinner was held at the church October 20. Percy Ruhe, Editor of "The Morning Call," an Allentown newspaper, spoke of the "Birth of a New Nation," telling of his observations and experiences on his trip to Europe and the Holy land this past summer. Alvin Shelly, representative of the Alcoholics Anonymous of Souderton, spoke during the Sunday school session of temperance, November 5. Our pastor and his wife attended the 85th anniversary fellowship dinner of the First Mennonite Church, Philadelphia. —Mae Latshaw, Corr.

WESTERN DISTRICT

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Oklahoma: Services were held October 16, 17 and 18 by Dr. Hartzler, in the local Methodist Church. Slides were shown of the triumphant entry, the betrayal and the crucifixion which were made real by the characters and their dress. October 22, A. E. Funk of Hillsboro, Kansas, spoke in the interest of Bethel College.—Corr.

—First Church of Christian, Moundridge, Kansas: November 5, dedication services for our new church were held. Edmund J. Miller of Freeman, South Dakota, preached the dedicatory sermon. In Ooctober the Moundridge community had two weeks of evangelistic services conducted by Dr. Robert Rayburn, and sponsored by the Ministerial Alliance.—Mrs. Willis Voran, Corr.

was a fascinating presentation of the life and work of Otho Winger, president of Manchester College from 1911 to 1941. In his evening lectures, Dr. Schwalm presented a series of sermons on various topics, the final one of which was "Revitalizing the Life of the Church."

Some students attended three lectures by Charles E. Raven, Vice Chancellor of the Cambridge University in England and Gifford Lecturer for 1951.

On November 1, chapel service featured a message by Dr. E. Stanley Jones, well known evangelist of many countries. Our Board of Trustees met October 31, for their regular fall meeting.

—First Church, Halstead, Kansas: This church was host to the annual Western District Ministers' Conference, October 17. The ladies of the church served the noon meal. The Christian Endeavor Society had their first meeting Sunday evening, October 22. Harvey Vogt was elected president of the organization at a previous meeting. Junior and Intermediate Christian Endeavors have also been organized with Edna Mueller, Mrs. Walter Martens, and Frances Bartel as sponsors of the juniors and Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Geist, sponsors of the intermediate group. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Schowalter, members of the church, celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary October 16. —Betty Franz, Corr.

PACIFIC DISTRICT

—Second Church, Paso Robles, Calif.: September 14, we had our annual bazaar with the "Stitch and Chatter" group at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Bergman. We are getting ready to send clothing and shoes to relief. A local merchant donated 26 pairs of canvas shoes to be included in the shipment. In September our pastor W. Harley King attended a board and counsel meeting for a mental hospital. October 1, W. J. Flickinger, field director from the "Go Ye Mission," presented the message and October 13, Peter Klassen, from Brazil, spoke here. On the sick list from our community are H. A. Wiebe with a back injury; Mrs. J. J. Dueck; Frank Hamm with a knee injury; Gilbert Dueck; Mrs. J. A. Bergman; Miss Katie Dyck; Miss Florence Hamm; Mrs. Jerry Claassen; Frank Dueck. May we remember them all in our prayers.

Mr. and Mrs. Herb Scantlin are parents of twins, Bonnie and Donnie.

—First Church, Upland, Calif.: Peter Klassen was a speaker here recently on his work in South America. He is now making a tour among the various churches in our Conference under direction of the Mission Board. November 1, church night, Andrew Shelly was our speaker. Union Thanksgiving services will be held at the Baptist church, November 23. Our pastor, Earl Salzman, is now giving a series of sermons on stewardship. —Corr.

—Menno Church, Lind, Washington: Mission meetings will begin November 23 through 26 with missionary W. C. Voth as the guest speaker. Peter Klassen, Curitiba, Brazil, was guest speaker October 15. The Mission Society raised enough funds to furnish the patients dining room in the Kings View Home. Willard Wiebe has been chosen interim pastor of the seminary fellowship for the present school year.—Mrs. C. C. Claassen, Corr.

—Newport Church, Newport, Washington: The young people sponsored a "Sealed Order" program, October 8. The Sunday schools held their promotion in October. The Women's Missionary Society were hostesses for the annual Thanksgiving dinner October 15.—Mrs. H. Hiebert, Corr.

Into the Beyond

GILBERT DYCK, Paso Robles, California, of the Second Church, died October 25, 1950, at the age of 18 years.

Correction: In the "Into The Beyond" section of the October 24 issue, the name "Mast" was inadvertently omitted from the notice of the passing of Mrs. Elizabeth (Wenger) Mast, of Wayland, Iowa.

MCC News

Concerning the Draft

There is indication that numerous local draft boards have recently been taking men from Class IV-E and placing them into Class I-A-O, on the grounds that there is no present alternative service to which they can send COs.

In this action, the local boards are in error, and men in this situation should appeal to again have Class IV-E. It is true that there is no present alternative service, but none is required by law. The local boards are not required to find work for COs, but merely to classify them as instructed by Selective Service Regulations.

Men should be careful to distinguish between Classes I-A-O and IV-E. Class I-A-O refers to conscientious objectors to combatant service, who are however willing to serve in the armed forces in an assignment not requiring the use of arms. They are subject to military discipline, take certain types of military training, and wear army uniforms. Class IV-E refers to conscientious objectors to all forms of military service, both combatant and noncombatant.

Refugees Yet in Camps

Even though a number of postwar years have passed, there are yet many refugees who are in dire need.

Please enclose this label when writing.

Some families have lived for months or years in camps in small rooms formed merely by blanket curtains. The Gronau refugee camp in Germany, operated by the MCC, still accommodates Mennonite refugees who are being processed or are waiting to emigrate.

The refugees have had many sad experiences—often family members are missing; and in some cases only part of a family is passed for migration. Many have been waiting patiently in spite of long delays in processing. They live from day to day awaiting the decisions which officials make in their case. The MCC workers help not only in the routine of preparing documents and records related to migration, and administration of the camp, but also in personal contacts, fellowship and counsel with the people.

Voluntary Service Notes

The Unit at Gulfport, Miss., recently installed blackboards in the North Gulfport colored school. Funds for the purchase of materials were contributed locally. It was in this school that one blackboard had been installed last year, made possible by a personal contribution from an interested church leader in Kansas.

Peter Olfert of Swift Current, Sask., has transferred from Bethesda Mennonite Hospital in Ontario, to the Santa Clara Unit in Mexico to serve as repair and maintenance man, releasing Charles Burkhardt for teaching in Cuauhtemoc.

Helen Snyder of Guelph, Ont., and Wilma Swartzendruber of Kalona, Ia., who served last summer at Gulfport, have volunteered to extend their terms of service to one year, and have been assigned to Gulfport, and the Industrial Home School Annex, Washington, respectively.

Kings View Homes, the MCC Mental Hospital project in California, needs volunteer painters, plumbers, carpenters, and general workers to help complete the hospital building.

Relief Personnel Notes

Esther Eby has transferred from Belgium to Weiler Children's Home in France. Laura Metzler of North Lima, Ohio, sailed for Ethiopia on October 17. Franklin and Mildred Steiner returned from Switzerland on October 19. Frieda Wiebe returned from Germany on October 22.

Beyond Our Own

WORLD'S LARGEST HANDWRITTEN BIBLE

The World's Largest Handwritten Bible is on display at the Chicago Fair of 1950, according to Rev. Don Norman, executive secretary of the Chicago Bible Society, under whose auspices the Bible was written by 31,102 persons at the Chicago Railroad Fair.

The Bible weighs 187 pounds and three imported goat skins were required for binding it. It cointains 1,111 pages (page size, 21" x 27"). The 31,102 verses in the Bible were written by 31,102 individuals.—American Lutheran

NOAH'S ARK—A. J. Smith of Greensboro, North Carolina, former dean of the People's Bible School, announced that the proposed expedition in search of Noah's Ark has been cancelled for the time being due to the international situation. Smith was the man who headed the search in 1949 but was turned back by heavy snows. Smith is still convinced that the petrified remains of the ark are on Mount Ararat.

CHICAGO—Dr. Robert A. Cook, 38-year old president of Youth for Christ International, has called for an international day of prayer and re-consecration on January 1, 1951, for the task of evangelizing the world in this generation through a global spiritual awakening which seems to be ready to break out around the world.

The call for prayer was initiated by 500 delegates from 30 countries at the third World Congress on Evangelism at Brussels, Belgium, last July 30—August 6.

Churches, pastors and all other organized Christian groups are being petitioned to mark January 1, 1951, through some prayer period. A number of evangelical leaders already have indicated that they will call their people to prayer on that day. Special prayer is requested for the Youth for Christ "Million Souls Crusade" which will use 250 teams in all parts of the globe before 1951 is over.

JAPAN INTERNATIONAL CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY FOUNDATION, INC.

Christian churches in Japan had a total membership of 331,709 in 1949 as compared to 319,224 in 1940, it was reported to the Japan International Christian University Foundation. Of this total, 201,321 are Protestant and 130,388 Catholic. Not included in these figures are members of non-church Christian groups, with an estimated strength of 6,000 members.

"The inhabitants of central Japan enjoyed sitting on Mother Earth's cradle," remarked a radio commentator when Japan was struck by a severe earthquake during World War II. About four earth tremors shake Japan every day, or some 1,500 annually, says a release of the Japan International Christian University Foundation.

More than 90,000 Japanese students are enrolled in Christian schools, colleges and universities in Japan.

Between October 1, 1945, and January 1, 1950, the population of Japan proper jumped by 10,700,000 persons as a result of natural increase and repatriation.

Between June 1848 and April 1950, 853 Japanese men and women made cultural visits to the United States, according to the Japan International Christian University Foundation. Of these, 50 students and 239 temporary visitors were sponsored by the U.S. government.

More than 31,000 P.T.A. units, with about 16,000,000 members, have been organized in Japan since the American occupation. Through them, parents in Japan for the first time have a voice in the education of their children.

Japan's unusually long coastline is approximately three times that of the continental United States. In relation to the land surface, there is one mile of shore for each eight or nine square miles of land. In the British Isles, to which Japan is sometimes compared, the ratio is about one to thirteen.

RATZLAFFS ARRIVE

Bombay India.—(cable) "Arrived Bombay. All well,"—Harold Ratzlaff.

TWO SAILINGS

Leonore Friesen (Japan) sailing December 18, San Francisco, Freighter Jess Davis.

Harold and Mrs. Graber (Africa) January 13, New York, SS Burkel for Matadi.

Let us remember these workers in our prayers.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Graber were ordained as Missionaries to Africa in the First Mennonite Church, Pretty Prairie, Kansas, Sunday afternoon, October 29th. The Rev. Victor Graber, a brother, preached the ordination sermon and Dr. Nyce, pastor of the church, Executive Secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the General Conference and a member of the Congo Inland Mission Board, ordained them. Rev. and Mrs. George Neufeld, returned missionaries to the Congo, received the Graber's as co-labourers in the mission field. The Farewell service will undoubtedly be held Sunday afternoon, January 7th, and according to tentative plans they will sail on the S. S. BURCKEL, scheduled to leave New York, January 13th. The First Church at Pretty Prairie had a shower for them Thursday evening, October 26th.

Rev. W. C. Voth is visiting churches in Oregon and Washington.

Miss Aganetha Fast is visiting churches in the Northern District Conference as well as Rev. George Neufeld. It is expected that Miss Fast will visit the Eastern District Conference the beginning of the year 1951.

The annual meeting of the Board of Missions will be held at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary the last week of November.

Rev. and Mrs. Verney Unruh have accepted the call to go to Japan under the Board of Foreign Missions. Brother Unruh is at present pastor of the Mennonite Church at Pulaski, Iowa.

The Board of Foreign Missions plans to send Miss Leonore Friesen to Japan in time for the second semester language study. At present she is visiting a number of churches in the Western District.

Editor to India Jubilee

As you read these pages, the editor of THE MENNONITE, Rev. J. N. Smucker and Mrs. Smucker, along with Dr. and Mrs. Herbert R. Schmidt of Newton, Kansas, will be somewhere on their way to India to participate in the Golden Jubilee festivities in connection with the Fiftieth Anniversary of the founding of the Mennonite missions in India.

Leaving New York by plane on November 25, with brief stops in London and Beirut, the party is due in Delhi, India, December 4. The Jubilee celebration is scheduled to be held in Champa, where fifty years ago Dr. P. A. Penner began the General Conference mission work, from December 27 to January 1. During their visit the party will visit all the mission stations in India sponsored by the General Conference Mennonite Church, as well as several Mennonite Relief Centers in Europe. Plans are to return to the States, January 25, 1951.

To make possible the regular continuance of THE MENNONITE during Reverend Smucker's absence, Rev. John F. Schmidt has consented to give sufficient time to take over some of the responsibilities connected with the paper. In addition, the new associate editors will assist in writing editorials. The Editorial Office will remain in Bluffton, Ohio, and all articles and correspondence should be addressed to: Editor of THE MENNONITE, Bluffton, Ohio.

Reverend Smucker plans to send back regular reports along the way and from India, giving readers first-hand information of the Jubilee celebration, and other significant world events.

"LET'S TRY GOD"

THIS is certainly an unusual title for a speech addressed to the United States Senate. Hon. Flanders of Vermont begins his address by recounting the difficulties in which our nation finds itself at present; . . . "we have gone deeper and deeper into the quicksands and now we must find our way out. . . what then shall we do? Mr. President, let us try God."

Mr. Flanders then continues by calling attention to the great moral law. This law finds its capstone in the great commandment of Jesus, at which point the passage of Matthew 22:35-39 is quoted: complete love to God and loving our neighbor as ourselves. In commenting on "love" we have this reflection: "As a matter of fact, it is the strongest thing in the world. We must put it to the test."

The speech comes to a close by quoting the Old Testament story of Abraham's plea for saving the city of Sodom, if a certain amout of righteous men could be found in it, finally bringing the number down to ten. These are the closing words: "Mr. President, if we find in the President of the United States and in the Secretary of State of the United States two righteous men in this sense of the word "righteous," the world can be saved. We await the outcome."

Perhaps what the preachers have been trying to say all along is bearing some fruit. At least it is a hopeful sign to have a senator urge the President to "try God."

"V.S."

THIS is a day of letters of the alphabet, all the way from U M T to M C C, and from F B I to U S S R. But today, among the young people, the letters "V S" are taking on significant meaning. Many have already had the experience of a term in "Voluntary Service" either for a summer or for a full year or more. Here is an expressional activity that gives opportunity for actual service "in the Name of Christ."

But we have not nearly reached the possibilities of this field of service. Better support by the churches, more opportunities for work and many more young people gladly giving a summer or a year or more to this noble work, can open a new chapter in the life of the churches. How much better to work for the kingdom in loving service to others, than to be drafted into the army to kill and destroy!

Highlights of the Western District Conference

THE FIFTY-NINTH session of the Western District Conference has taken encouraging forward steps. In the absence of the conference president, Rev. Lester Hostetler, who is at present serving in Berlin, the vice-president, Rev. Elbert Koontz, presided. In his opening conference sermon he encouraged us to drive our stakes higher and higher, as mountain climbers do, to reach our goal of effective service in the Kingdom of God. The reports gave evidence that responsible people had worked faithfully and successfully at their tasks. The Executive Committee reported that during the past year the first Western District Council of Committees meeting had been held and that it had proved very helpful. On the basis of this report the conference later decided that the new constitution provide for annual Council of Committees meetings to be held in the spring of the year.

Elbert Koontz, pastor Hebron Church, Buhler, Kansas, newly elected president of Western District Conference.

This year three days were devoted to conference instead of the usual two in order to provide time for a series of sermons for spiritual enrichment and fortification. Rev. Andrew Shelly in his messages spoke on "Money and Other Essential Aspects of the Work of the Church." His challenging appeals were appreciated and will bring a response.

The statistician reported a conference membership of 13,174, and an increase of only 43 over the previous year. People were unhappy over this small gain. Rev. P. K. Regier, the General Conference Executive Secretary, challenged us to set a goal for the coming year, and suggested that each congregation strive to win to Christ ten new members for every one hundred members of the congregation. The field worker reported that there is a growing interest in the evangelistic task of the church, and that a goodly number of our congregations have undertaken lay visitation evangelism programs in their respective communities.

A Constitution Revision Committee had been working on a revision of the conference constitution. The conference received the revision report for final adoption at the next session. A number of changes are provided by this revision. The new constitution makes provision for a central treasury and a district treasurer. He will have charge of all the funds of the various committees.

Upon the recommendation of the Home Mission Committee the conference encouraged the work in Clinton, Oklahoma. The committee was given authorization to establish and organize a church in Clinton as soon as advisable.

The Peace Committee presented a resolution which found ready response and was adopted as another way of strengthening our peace witness and as our answer to the draft problem. It was resolved that our Western District Conference Churches be urged to supply Voluntary Service Workers from among their boys of draft age AT LEAST in the ratio that obtains in the case of those drafted for Government Service from among the boys of draft age in the states represented in our Western District. It was further resolved that in keeping with our personal responsibility in this time of crisis, we encourage our young people to participate in Voluntary Service as a positive witness to our doctrine of Biblical non-resistance, and that we encourage all our people to back the witness of our youth, by financial support of voluntary service, and by consistent living and witnessing to this same principle in all choices and actions.

Elbert Koontz was elected President of the conference for the coming year. He remarked to this that he and Harry Truman had come to their offices in somewhat the same way. Rev. Arnold Epp of Meno, Oklahoma, who had served faithfully as secretary for a number of years, was elected Vice-President, and Rev. Harvey Jantz, pastor of the Friedensthal Church of Tampa, Kansas, is the new secretary. Rev. Gerhard Friesen has been appointed by the Executive Committee to serve as the conference treasurer. All money for Western District Conference purposes is now to be sent to Rev. Gerhard Friesen, Mennonite Headquarters, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas.

MEN NONITE for CHRIST MEN

CHICAGO MEN

The First Meeting of the Men's Fellowship was held November 2, 1950. A meal prepared by the ladies of the church was served at 6:30 P.M. to 17 men. This was followed by singing, devotions, and an address by Charles Elliott, a Christian business man from the Englewood Presbyterian Church. A discussion stating the purpose and possibilities of a Men's Fellowship in a city, and a film "Hunting in Alaska" climaxed the evening program. The men voted to have a second meeting in December.

Enroute Home to India

WE finally left New York on Sunday morning, October 1st, at about 10:30. Since then we have been going full speed ahead, except for about an hour one day when they had to reduce speed because of a heavy fog. This ship makes from 370 to 380 miles every 24 hours. That is fairly good traveling for a freight ship.

We passed Gibralter October 10th. Two days ago we sailed by the island of Malta where the Apostle Paul was shipwrecked. Last night we passed the island of Crete about which we read in Acts 27. Tonight (Oct. 14, 1950) we can see the lighthouse on the island of Cyprus, another familiar Bible name. All of these geographical places remind us of the first Christian missionary and the traveling he did in order to preach Christ and Him crucified.

We too are missionaries and we too are traveling, but whereas we covered the distance between Malta and Crete in about thirty hours, Paul wrote about this trip taking "many days." Surely we travel much swifter and much more safely and comfortably than that first missionary. Yet we too travel so that, like Paul, we might declare the glad tidings that "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners," (I Tim. 1:15) and so that we might proclaim "the word of his grace, which is able to build you up." (Acts 20:32)

We have enjoyed our furlough of two years in America, but we are very happy to be returning to our work in India. Although many times during the past summer we wished for a time of leisure, yet this voyage is giving us much more than we want or need. The trip promises to take the better part of two months and is trying our patience.

As we return to our work we pray as did the psalmist: "And let the beauty of the Lord God be upon us; and establish thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish thou it." (Psalm 90:17). We covet your prayers as we again make the adjustments to a tropical climate and to a different culture, and we depend on your prayers to uphold us and all the mission work and workers throughout the coming years.

GOD'S WONDERFUL WORD

When I am tired, the Bible is my bed!
  Or in the dark, the Bible is my light;
When I am hungry, it is a vital bread;
  Or fearful, it is armour for the fight.
When I am sick, 'tis healing medicine;
  Or lonely, thronging friends I find therein.

If I would work, the Bible is my tool;
  Or play, it is a harp of happy sound;
If I am ignorant, it is my school;
  If I am sinking, it is solid ground,
If I am cold, the Bible is my fire;
  And it is wings, if boldly I aspire.

Does gloom oppress? the Bible is a sun;
  Or ugliness? it is a garden fair,
Am I athirst? how cool its currents run.
  Or stifled? what a vivifying air!
Since thus thou givest of thyself to me,
  How should I give myself, great Book to thee?

A PARABLE ON INTOLERANCE

I. And it came to pass after these things, that Abraham sat in the door of his tent, about the going down of the sun. And behold, a man, bowed with age, came from the way of the wilderness, leaning on a staff.

II. And Abraham arose and met him,and said unto him, Turn in, I pray thee, and wash thy feet, and tarry all night, and thou shalt arise early on the morrow, and go on thy way. But the man said, Nay, for I will abide under this tree. And Abraham pressed him greatly; so he turned, and they went into the tent, and Abraham baked unleavened bread, and they did eat. And when Abraham saw that the man blessed not God, he said unto him, Wherefore dost thou not worship the most high God, Creator of heaven and earth? And the man answered and said, I worship not the God thou speakest of, neither do I call upon his name; for I have made to myself a god, which abideth alway in mine house, and provideth me with all things. And Abraham's zeal was kindled against the man, and he arose and fell upon him, and drove him forth with blows into the wilderness. And at midnight God called unto Abraham, saying, Abraham, where is the stranger? And Abraham answered and said, Lord, he would not worship thee, neither would he call upon thy name; therefore have I driven him out from before my face into the wilderness.

III. And God said, Have I borne with him these hundred and ninety and eight years, and nourished him, and clothed him, notwithstanding his rebellion against me; and couldst not thou, that art thyself a sinner, bear with him one night? And Abraham said, Let not the anger of the Lord wax hot against his servent; lo, I have sinned; lo, I have sinned; forgive me, I pray thee.

IV. And Abraham arose, and went forth into the wilderness, and sought diligently for the man, and found him, and returned with him to the tent; and when he had entreated him kindly, he sent him away on the morrow with gifts.

V. And God spake again unto Abraham, saying, For this thy sin shall thy seed be afflicted four hundred years in a strange land; but for thy repentance will I deliver them; and they shall come forth with power, and with gladness of heart, and with much substance.—Benjamin Franklin.

ONE WHO VOLUNTEERS

Bertha Fast

ACCORDING to the rules of material exchange Martha wouldn't be considered a great success. She goes to a Mennonite college nine months a year and has spent the last two summers in Voluntary Service. Therefore she has not had the possibility to earn money to pay for so many items deemed necessary by most college girls. Her parents rather hesitatingly granted Martha permission to be away from home the first summer. But after she came home radiant, filled with knowledge and enthusiasm for all she had seen and done, they even encouraged Martha's going the second summer. Her father assured her that the corn crop would help meet the financial obligations for college. It's true that Martha isn't able to buy as many sweaters as some of her friends, and often she abstains from having malted milk or going to a game. But there isn't a single person on the campus, student or faculty, that feels sorry for her. On the contrary she is one of the best-liked, most versatile, and finest Christian students at college. Martha, herself, finds life a joyous experience and is a witness to that inner conviction.

What is it that Voluntary Service may have contributed to Martha's personality and to her outlook on life? Have the experiences of the two summers given her qualities that otherwise might not be hers? Let us go with Martha and try to vicariously experience with her a bit of what Voluntary Service brought her during one summer.

Martha was challenged to enter Voluntary Service because of college friends who returned with great enthusiasm about "VS." She carefully considered going and then began to examine her motives for wanting to go. Through prayer and counseling with her minister she decided that, yes, she believed that Christ, her Saviour, would want her to use her abilities and faith He had given her in service. How could she say no to an opportunity that was provided by the Mennonite church to express her love for and interest in people? After her parents' consent Martha applied. She was assigned to work in a camp for migrants.

And so Martha stepped into the kind of a situation entirely foreign to her-a situation she had read about but never thought actually existed. Martha was fortunate to receive some training prior to her period of service. Here during the training session she had contact with others—young people, untrained, but eager to work. She was taught by those who had years of experience in Christian service of this kind. When Martha reached her appointed place she faced many difficulties. There was the problem of language with the Spanish-speaking Mexicans. How were they to reach the camps without a car? Why weren't the residents of the small town concerned about the deplorable living conditions of the migrants? And so they began—missionaries they were—Martha and her companion. They studied a little Spanish, tried to teach some English, and in spite of the language barrier the children loved them. They ran out to meet Martha as she came with her bicycle every morning. Bicycles were the inadequate, but the only answer to the transportation problem. If Martha and her friend had not possessed the Christian spirit of love and joy they would never have won the hearts of the towns people as they did. Churches allowed them to present their cause and were soon contributing toys and clothes to the migrants' needs. When one stops to think of all the development and growth that must take place facing a real-life situation such as this, is it any wonder that Martha is a remarkable person?

And there are many other young people like Martha who are facing the world today with grave concern. For them having a good time is not enough. For them Christianity means more than church membership. For them belonging to a Young People's church group requires something more than attending a monthly social. They read the newspapers, listen to the radio, discuss the racial problem, the increasing incidence of mental diseases, the Korean situation. These young people are disturbed—disturbed until they find a means whereby they can do something to aid in creating the kind of situation that Jesus Christ would bless. And so they volunteer to help missionaries teach Indian children in Vacation Bible School. They go out in Teams helping our churches in carrying out projects, vitalizing young people's programs. They bathe and dress the mentally ill. They go into the slum sections of the city and gather children to live and to teach them the love of Jesus.

From the sense of even small accomplishments, of having done a job without outward compulsion, of expression with and through a fellowship there has come a release of power into the lives of the volunteers—a power here-to-fore unknown. The power is that of the Holy Spirit sent from God to make more effective those who hear His voice.

There is no greater challenge for the young people of our church today than to accept the call of Christ as He speaks through the channel of Voluntary Service, "Come and follow me." There is no higher motive than that. There is no greater reward than the inner sense of gratification, of growth, of joy for having given two months, six months, a year to God. The tools that can be used are ours—hands, mind and heart—tools that can be wielded, if so willed, by God in the working of His Kingdom.

He who sows courtesy, reaps friendships; ana he who plants kindness, gathers love. —Brooks.

M C C News Notes

IV-E is the Proper Class for COs

Men who are conscientiously opposed to all forms of military service are again warned to seek Class IV-E. Recently a number of local boards have been changing men from Class IV-E to Class II-C. Some of these men have asked whether they should appeal for Class IV-E.

In view of these inquiries a new interpretation of this question has been secured from the National Headquarters of Selective Service. This word confirms the information which has been followed until now. The letter says, "If a registrant who claims a IV-E status is placed in III-A or II-C, it is natural to assume that either the local board considered the evidence pertaining to the IV-E status was insufficient or that the local board did not consider the evidence in the proper order as specified in Section 1623.2. When a conscientious objector classified in a higher class than IV-E believes he is entitled to a IV-E classification, he may exercise his rights of appeal. Assurance by a local board to the effect that when a registrant is classified in the most obvious class and that claim for a IV-E status will be considered later, does not necessarily insure a IV-E classification in the event of a reconsideration. The question of accepting the higher deferred classification is a matter for the registrant to decide."

This confirms that while some local boards say that Class II-C is all right and that due consideration for Class IV-E will be given later, and some men accept this information as sufficient, the fact remains that this policy is not according to Selective Service Regulations; and the registrant who accepts II-C or III-A rather than IV-E does so with some risk. The only security he has is the assurance of the board, which although honestly given, may not stand legally since it is contrary to the Regulations. If the board persists in giving Class II-C rather than IV-E, the very minimum that a registrant should insist on is a written statement from the board, to the effect that Class IV-E is not denied thereby—an oral statement to this effect should under no circumstance be considered sufficient. In any case, it is best to appeal for Class IV-E and secure this status as early as possible. (The only exception to this rule is in the case of men under the special doctors' draft, in which the classification scheme is different. Details on this are available upon request.)

Mental Health Notes

Two nurses, Anne Warkentin, R. N. of Superb, Sask., and Marie Toews, R. N. of Mt. Lake, Minn., have volunteered for one year of service in the MCC mental health program, and have been assigned initially to Brook Lane Farm.

Jacob Goering, who recently joined the Brook Farm staff in the capacity of counsellor and social worker, has assumed a significant place in the treatment program. In addition to spiritual and other personal counselling, he assists in maintaining patient-family contacts and in placement and rehabilitation of patients in suitable employment. He is also available for speaking in meetings in churches of the Eastern area.

Relief Shipments Reach Peak

In the month of October, the relief shipments reached a high peak for this summer and fall, the highest since last May. The following shipments of relief materials from Canada and the United States, valued at a total of $152,348.63 left port during September and October:

To Paraguay: 1½ tons medical supplies and misc. equipment; to England: 196 lb. Christmas Bundles; to Japan: 1 ton Christmas Bundles; to Germany: 27 tons flour, 40 tons clothing, shoes, bedding, soap, ½ ton mixed food, 1 carry-all truck; to France: ½ ton school supplies, ¾ ton clothing, shoes, etc., 3 tons evaporated milk; to Belgium: ¾ ton clothing, bedding, etc., ¾ ton mixed food, ¼ ton school supplies; to Java: ¾ ton Christmas Bundles; to Austria: 1 ton Christmas Bundles, 12 tons clothing, shoes, bedding, soap.

Our Historical Faith

THE DOCTRINE OF THE MENNONITES, by John C. Wenger. Mennonite Publishing House, Scottdale, Pa., 1950, 160 pages, $1.00.

We are frequently asked the question, what do the Mennonites believe and in what points do their beliefs differ from those of other Evangelical groups. The author seeks to remind his readers that on the so-called fundamentals, Anabaptists were in agreement with other Christians. Their approach to Scripture was practical rather than theological and they sought to apply them to the whole man, to all of life.

The book contains early Mennonite Confessions of Faith and Catechisms, also the Articles of Faith adopted by the Old Mennonite General Conference in 1921. Prof. Wenger quotes freely from the complete works of Menno Simons and other early Mennonite writers. The book is suited for group study and could be profitably used for that purpose. Our General Conference people may not agree with all of the author's interpretation of Christian doctrine, yet the book should find a place in the libraries of our homes and churches, because it contains valuable source material and emphasizes the necessity of applying the New Testament to the whole of life. Its main emphasis is needed in our homes and churches. —Paul N. Roth.

Undeserved Christian Suffering

Willard K. Claassen

I Peter 1:7

YE have been put to grief in manifold trials that the proof of your faith being more precious than gold that perisheth, though it is proved by fire, may be found unto praise and glory and honor at the revelation of Jesus Christ."

To live in this world is to suffer! But that does not mean that all suffering is to be looked upon as a direct punishment for sin. The writings of Peter cannot be made to square with that doctrine. This problem of undeserved Christian suffering is the one great problem of the book of Job; it is also the problem of Psalm 73. It is the problem of the fiery furnace of Nebuchadnezzar. But I Peter throws more light on it than all the books of the Old Testament put together.

Besides the references we have already mentioned, the following passages in this letter further illuminate this subject: "But even if you do suffer for righteousness' sake, you will be blessed. Have no fear of them, nor be troubled. For it is better to suffer for doing right, if that should be God's will, than for doing wrong," (3:14, 17). "Since therefore Christ suffered in the flesh, arm yourselves with the same thought, for whoever has suffered in the flesh has ceased from sin. . . ," (4:1). Beloved, do not be surprized at the fiery ordeal which comes upon you to prove you, as though something strange were happening to you. But rejoice in so far as you share Christ's sufferings, that you may also rejoice and be glad when his glory is revealed. If you are reproached for the name of Christ, you are blessed, because the spirit of glory and of God rests upon you. (4:12-14) "And after you have suffered for a little while, the God of all grace, who has called you to his eternal glory in Christ will himself restore, establish, and strengthen you," (5:10). Except for the text, these passages were quoted from the Revised Standard Version.

TO TEST AND PURIFY OUR FAITH

One object of undeserved Christian suffering is to test and purify our faith. Peter uses the illustration of gold that has been tested in the fire. By fusing gold in the crucible the pure metal is separated from the alloy; the gold is not destroyed by being fused, but it is cleansed and purified. The same thought is embodied in one of Malachi's prophecies in which he says Jesus will sit as a refiner of silver. The refiner puts the silver in the crucible and keeps increasing the heat and watching it, and as soon as it is thoroughly melted, then there is a separation of the dross from the silver. Let us fix in our minds that one of God's purposes in allowing or sending undeserved suffering is to refine us. This is the fiery trial of our faith. The writer of the following poem understood Peter's meaning:

When God wants to drill a man,
And thrill a man,
And skill a man,
When God wants to mold a man
To play the noblest part;
When He yearns with all His heart
To create so great and bold a man
That all the world shall be amazed,
Watch His methods, watch His ways!
How He ruthlessly perfects
Whom He loyally elects!
How He hammers him and hurts him,
And with mighty blows converts him
Into trial shapes of clay which Only God understands:
While his tortured heart is crying
And he lifts beseeching hands!
How He bends but never breaks
When His good He undertakes;
How He uses whom He chooses,
And with every purpose fuses him;
By every act induces him
To try His splendor out—
God knows what He's about!

TRIALS COME BY THE WILL OF GOD

These trials, no matter who may appear to be the agent, are by the will of God. We may be slandered and the man or devil who slanders us may be prompted by envy, hatred, or malice, but if we are submissive to the dominent benevolent divine will, great good will result.

I walked a mile with Pleasure
She chattered all the way,
But she left me none the wiser,
For all she had to say.
I walked a mile with Sorrow,
And not a word said she;
But, oh the things that I learned from her,
When Sorrow walked with me!
—Robert B. Hamilton

NOT TO BE CONSIDERRED STRANGE

The average Christian is amazed at suffering! Peter admonishes, "Beloved brethren, think it not strange concerning this fiery trial that has come upon you." The first impression of the Christian is to be surprised that trials should come to him. Why he wouldn't be Christian if that didn't assure him of easy advantages! A strange, a very strange providence this!

The Christian, however, should not be surprized at this. There are several reasons why he should not be. One is that such trials are common to all of God's people; they always have been and always will be. Paul says, "there hath no temptation come to you but such as is common to man."

In other words there's no use trying to make a martyr out of ourselves by supposing that we are special cases. Another reason why we should not think it strange is that it is the only way to accomplish certain good results.

Suffering is our common heritage. Our lives are like the plains of Sicily. It is a very beautiful country, but every morning as the sun rises above the horizen there falls across the plains a shadow. It is the shadow of Mt. Etna. This shadow is a suggestion that ruin may be belched out on them at any time from the volcano's crater. The brighter the day, the plainer the shadow, and the more melancholy the suggestion.

Most paths are rough somewhere. Most lives are shadowed. Some seem to be shaped for holding sorrow as a cup is shaped for holding water. The days in which we are living are days of testing.

God pity us when we become obsessed with the idea of escaping suffering. In the first place it is impossible. In the second place, if we did, our joy would be all selfish and self-indulgent. Sorrows become the stepping stones to greater and worthier life. In our better moments we know that too.

AFFLICTION A GREAT INSPIRATION TO OTHERS

Our patient endurance of affliction is a great inspiration and help to others. It is a powerful means of convicting sinners of sin. The Christian who meekly endures what God puts on him, and goes right on saying in his heart and life that the Judge of all earth doeth right, that person convicts sinners. Sinners are compelled to admit that the Christian has got something they haven't got!

No words can express how much the world owes to sorrow and suffering. Most of the Psalms were written in the valley of the shadow of sorrow. Most of the epistles were written in prison. The greatest poets learned in suffering what they put into song. Perhaps one of the reasons why men of the ministry have been a noble group is the privation and misunderstanding they have had to endure. The prophet Jeremiah is an excellent illustration, who was made again another vessel as is seemed good to the Lord to make him, but who felt privation, misunderstanding and misrepresentation. The misery of the Negro race has produced the beauty and depth of their spirituals. The fact is that sorrow opens a man's heart so that God can come in and talk with him as He cannot at any other time. Someone has said, "No one ever truly prayed who has not felt severe pain."

No words can express how much the world owes to sorrow. We can see the touch of sorrow in the world's finest paintings. We can hear its tremor in the world's sweetest music. We can feel its grip in the world's mightiest arguments. Sorrow made Tennyson the greatest poet of the 19th Century, enabling him to write his masterpiece, "In Memoriam," a tribute to his friend Arthur Hallam. Sorrow made Paderwski a sympathetic pianist. Suffering made Spurgeon, Monod, and Hall great preachers of God's grace. Suffering made Jesus Christ a perfect Saviour; for we read, "The captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering." So it seems the heavenly Father, knowing that suffering would be the common lot of us all, gave it a blessed mission to perform. There can be no apple without frost, no hardwood tree without the winter, no man without some hardship to build manhood, courage and character.

WE ARE CALLED TO THESE THINGS

The next thought set forth by the apostle Peter is that we are called unto these things. Everyone who is a Christian in some way receives a call. Just as Paul in the middle of the Damascus road heard his name called. Thus, in a sense, we are called through the Gospel. The very first of that call is the call of suffering. When Jesus commissioned Paul by the mouth of Ananias, he said, "I will show him how great things he must suffer for my sake."

THE EXAMPLE OF CHRIST

Another thought which Peter presents with great force is the example of Christ. The servant should not seek to have it better than his Master—that is, he should not seek to be exempt from the things that his Master had to bear. It was in the mind of Christ to be a sufferer. It was joy to Him as He looked to the recompense of the reward; therefore Peter says, Christ suffered that He might put before us an example. It is true, there are some things in which the sufferings of Christ are not an example to us. We cannot follow Him in suffering in the same sense He did upon the cross, but nonetheless His life is an example for us. He asked His disciples, "Can you be baptized with the baptism that I am to be baptized with?" And He answered the question for them, "Ye shall indeed be baptized with that baptism. The waves of suffering will roll over you." It ought to help us some to remember that Jesus lived in a time of great sorrow, that He was "a man of many sorrows," and yet His was a life of joy, peace, beauty and loveliness. Christ's life is like a lake into which many rivers of sorrow flowed — rivers of poverty, misunderstanding, misrepresentation, slander, spite, and hatred. He knew them all.

Then Peter makes the significant point that it is better to suffer wrongfully than justly. Everyone in the world suffers, good and evil, believers and unbelievers — there's no getting around that! Some folks suffer justly, that is, they have fallen into grievious errors and therefore suffer accordingly. There is no merit for the suffering we get as a result of the mess we have made with our lives by living in sin — we have that coming! Killing,

A Disgrace to Have Mental Illness?

ONE OF THE greatest indications of mass blindness is in our attitude toward those afflicted with emotional problems and diseases. In spite of modern discoveries and recent educational programs, we still look upon the mentally ill as people marked for life. Particularly does this become true when a patient once has accepted hospitalization for his illness.

In the past we have shunned the nomenclature of mental illness by the use of the term nervous breakdown, or we have been careful to describe all of our ills as physical difficulties. We have been particularly alert to explain the ailments of our own relatives in terms that would indicate we bear none of the stigma that might be attributed to them. This failure on our part to see mental illness in its true light is indeed a blindness of present-day existence that decreases our effectiveness in dealing with the problems we must face..

A few members of the medical profession share and keep alive this concept of ignorance by discouraging the use of mental hospitals except as a last resort. They will go to untold lengths to deny that a patient's illness requires treatment not possible in the home or office and thus oftentimes delay the most effective treatment that is available for the patient until the disease is much more deeply seated than is necessary. Our ministers have long felt ill at ease with this type of patient, often failing to recognize the symptoms among those still at home. When once hospitalized, a sick person very seldom has the benefit of the ministrations of his own spiritual advisers since most pastors seldom take it upon themselves to visit a mental hospital. If they do make this great stride, they often mumble and utter their condolences in a very insecure manner that indicates that they, too, like the rest of us, have never learned to act naturally in the presence of the incomprehensible.

For the most of us this means that we feel we can never face the people in our community if we once cross the threshold of a mental hospital as a patient. We can be told over and over again that mental illness is quite similar to a physical ailment. We believe that some of us are just naturally more unstable under certain types of stress than are others, while other types of strain that weaken many of our friends leave us quite well balanced and unaffected. What was originally known as insanity is now recognized as an emotional condition. The temporary quality depends upon quite a number of factors, many of them controllable. At one time, insane meant hopelessly insane. Both expressions are now fast becoming obsolete. With our growing understanding the concept and word for insanity will disappear and this mote will be removed from our eyes.

If we have a broken or injured arm, we expect the limb to be reset and then subjected to a period of healing with final recovery the normal expectation. Possibly a hitherto broken arm will need to be treated with care in the future particularly for a number of months, but it does not represent a basic handicap nor does it prevent normal life among normal people. Also, with a broken emotional system there is usually required a process of re-adjustment followed by a period of healing and recovery. With a wiser and more careful life, the person can expect to be perfectly normal and oftentimes more satisfactorily so as a result of his understanding of self gained from the experience.

Early in the century Clifford Beers recovered from the degrading experience of three years spent in different mental hospitals. He documented his personal enlightenment in a book A Mind That Found Itself. His enlightenment became that of a large segment of society and resulted in the founding of the National Committee for Mental Hygiene that for the next thirty years led the field in terms of a voluntary organization pointing the way to improvement in hospital conditions. The names of famous and producing figures in public life who have undergone similar experiences are becoming more common. Mary Jane Ward with her book The Snake Pit described her re-admission back to the world of acceptability. Lula Smith has become a leader in several lay groups and movements for social improvement since a similar experience of her own. A well-known and highly appreciated and respected theological seminary professor startled an audience of Mennonites in a discussion on Mental Health by announcing that he was an epileptic, a term once thought to imply one of the most hopeless of nervous conditions. A nervous breakdown in one's history is often considered an asset even in positions demanding unusual emotional stability. It can give an individual greater insight into his own capacities, emphasizing his strong points as well as the weaknesses of which to beware.

When we feel ourselves slipping and losing ground emotionally, we oftentimes subject ourselves to a greater srain in an effort to conceal our condition. If someone suggests a psychiatrist or a mental hospital, our normal reaction is "I know that I could never face my friends again if I once admitted a weakness of that type." Oftentimes, this merely delays the only process by which relief can be gained since the added strain of concealment antagonizes the very ill we are trying to deny. Perhaps the situation could be dealt with on a much more minor level were we to accept competent advice early even if that would lead to an early hospitalization. However, as long as we share this feeling that the stigma lies in having accepted hospitalization and treatment, we are adding our weight to the handicap borne by countless numbers who will of necessity be hospitalized.

The Mennonite Central Committee has been challenged by the need to care for mental patients. We have already accepted the responsibility for making treatment facilities possible. At Brook Lane Farm we are now thinking in terms of a rehabilitation process that will go even farther. Jake Goering is now setting up the machinery for the placing of recovered patients in positions of work and in environments that will recognize their emotional limitations. Most states have established Foster Home Care programs. These programs develop in selected communities a group of homes where patients are known, understood, and utilized in a recovered, or even a chronic condition. Once having started in a community, it has been proved that neighbors easily make the adjustment and entire groups of families living close together share in the experiences of this type of helpfulness. Financially,

JAVA Its Sights and Sounds

Meryl Grasse

JAVA is that island of the East Indies of which all of us have some vague impressions: a land of rice paddies, short brown people, coconut palms, and rubber trees, first a colony of the Dutch, then seized by the Japanese in the recent conflagration, now a youthful independent nation. That too was the substance of my knowledge of Java.

As the "Flying Dutchman," of which I was an occupant, swooped down upon Batavia, since independence known as Djakarta, I gathered my first impressions of this dark green mass below me. In Djakarta hardly anyone knows English except a few Dutchmen who usually do not handle it too adeptly. Dutch being the foreign language, the street signs, the restaurant menus, the smattering of foreign language known by the ricksha boys—all was Dutch. And too, the tropical sun was making its impression on me constantly, especially so since the sun would reach the zenith in two months.

The way to Pati was lined with rice paddies and canals and fields of sugar cane appearing like a rank thicket of thickly sown corn; in the background there is an ever present haze of mountains. The homely, sluggish monster, the water buffalo, is the only animal seen in any numbers. He is grey with almost no hair, albinos are frequently seen, and he is about one and a half times the size of our dairy cattle at home. The horns are swept back toward his neck, and his pace barely produces motion. Usually these is astride his back a small brown lad whose constant kicking seems to make no impression on the dull beast. As throughout the east, the coolie is one of the chief means of transportation. Naked except for shorts they trot along with heavily loaded baskets on pliant bamboo shoulder sticks. These lithe, strong-muscled, little brown men carry 150 pounds or more in this manner for many miles, and their loads consist of baskets, vegetables, lumber, a complete restaurant or sweets store. At night a small lamp is carried as they jog along with the other traffic of bicycles and house-shaped bullock carts.

This country gives one the conception of being characteristically tropical with its coconut palms and banana plants on all sides. There are numerous strange fruits of which one can learn the name in only Dutch or Indonesian and with its strange flavor it is a completely new substance to one. The men wear a dress-like article called a sarong. The women too wear a similar garment. The coloring and pattern in dark brown and blue makes them unique. Most of the men wear a fez-like cap called a "Soekarno cap."

Far beyond your horizon, as you look to the West, there are people serving in strange lands "In the Name of Christ." In far away Java, bearers of the message of the Cross, are at work in a largely Moslem land. It was in Java that Mennonite missionary activity first began. Today the Mennonite Central Committee is doing work in his island empire in the Indian ocean, southeast of Asia.

The noises too of Java are strange, especially those of the night. The people seen to enjoy music, and one hears the monotonous repetition of tune hour after hour. There is a xylophone-like bamboo instrument called a gamalon that is heard from some direction almost every night, and its sound drags into the night until one retires. In the cool hours of the night when travel is less exhausting, one frequently hears the creak of the ox cart that immediately calls to memory the sound of the creaking weels of a loaded hay wagon home on the farm. Another sound that I must always hear twice before I am sure it is not the hacking cough of a man, is produced by a large tree lizard called as it is supposed to sound, a "gech-o." Then from the next chair as one quietly reads, he hears a sound similar to the noise of a guinea pig. If one looks sharply, he will see a small black-eyed lizard the natives call che-chuk. Then too there are a variety of drums that one hears sporadically day and night.

One might say that these are merely impressions of a tourist or the recordings of a traveler, but I have come "in the name of Christ." Although it takes time to fully comprehend the spiritual life of a people, there are numerous small things that impress one. In connection with the independence celebration one sees hideous idol-like effigies called "sayangs." One hears of the method people use to decide the degree of luck for each day. Flowers are placed at crossroads on Thursdays to warn spirits that are moving about that this is a dangerous day. Java is mostly Moslem, and some of the people desire a Moslem or theistic state. I am told that many of the intellectuals are free from all religion; but, nevertheless, all of them believe in spirits. Is this too "a land of darkness—where the light is as darkness?"

a program of this type is more economical than hospitalization. Therapeutically, for most mentally ill a home situation is much more satisfactory. This is possibly the best means of removing that mote—that inability to see the sick as variations of ourselves, that feeling that people "lose" their minds.

The hospitals of today will keep alive the aspect of treatment and rehabilitation. At Kings View Homes, we will also care for the so-called chronic cases. This care, however, will be by keeping a continuous contact with the Mennonite community, placing the sick in more favorable home conditions when possible. Patients will be admitted for short periods and recovery mentally or sociologically will be expected. Although chronic cases may continue and we will still give them the Christian care required, they will be a decreasing factor in hospital care as the chronic hospital turns toward treatment and rehabilitation.

Society had decided that Clifford Beers' mind was "lost" and against great odds—the feeling of society—he proved he could "find" it. In 1950 we now have the enlightenment to know that these minds are not lost but sick and that through understanding help healing processes can be established. However, in many of our Mennonite communities a great barrier toward these processes is the feeling that to accept this help is to be marked for life. Even though we may know better, we retain our qualms about visiting a psychiatrist or considering mental hospitals in time of illness. A generation ago, hospital surgery was shunned in the same manner, considered only for those who were already hopeless from a physical standpoint. We undergo an operation now at the advice of our local physician and accept recovery as a matter of course. How long will we deny ourselves the same normal acceptance of the forces that heal sick minds? Let us treat as brothers and normal fellow humans those who accept them before us. Let us remove this mote from our own eyes so that we can see more clearly to minister towards the ills of others.

WORK AND WORKSHOP

ALL true work is sacred; in all true work, were it but true hand-labour, there is something of divineness. Labour, wide as the Earth, has its summit in Heaven. Sweat of the brow; and up from that to sweat of the brain, sweat of the heart; which includes all Kepler calculations, Newton meditations, all sciences, all spoken epics, all acted heroisms, martyrdoms—up to that "Agony of bloody sweat," which all men have called divine! Oh, brother! if this is not "worship," then, I say, the more pity for worship; for this is the noblest thing yet discovered under God's sky! Who art thou that complainest of thy life of toil? Complain not . . . .

Wondrous is the strength of cheerfulness.

—Thomas Carlyle

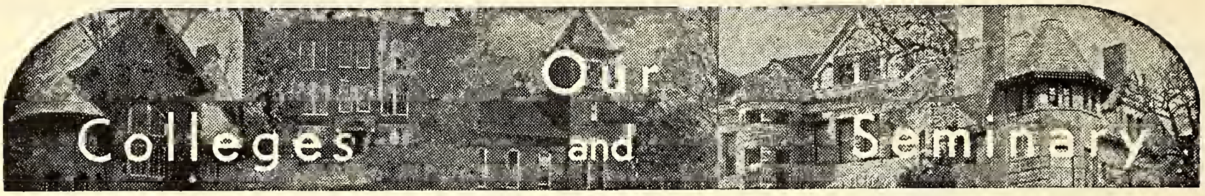
stealing, wrongdoing, meddling in other people's affairs, will bring grief in this life. But to suffer wrongfully, that is quite another matter says Peter. Of the two, he says it is better to suffer wrongfully. He then makes the significant application that whenever we have a trial as a Christian, when something we didn't deserve has come upon us because of our being Christian, when something we didn't deserve has come upon us we then share with Christ, a partnership is established between us and the Lord. Simon the Cyrenian is an example of undeserved suffering as he was compelled to bear the cross of Jesus. Whenever we suffer in this manner it is an evidence that the Spirit of glory and of God resteth on us.

Not all suffering is beneficial. The rebellious person beats his head against the wall of suffering, leaving himself bruised and sore by rejecting the comfort of God's hand in it. No person seeks suffering, even for the good it can bring, yet, as we look back upon our lives, most of us can say, "It was good for me that I was afflicted." And if no suffering has come to our lives because of our being Christian, then we ought to examine, prayerfully, the sincerity of our profession.

I have found that most people are about as happy as they make up their minds to be. —Abraham Lincoln.



Our Colleges and Seminary

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

SINCE this College first began in 1947, regular Saturday evening Prayer Meetings have been held. Such topics as "The Christian Witness," which was our theme for the last Saturday in October, have been very meaningful to us as students. It is most encouraging to hear how God has helped the many friends among us who have gone through various trying experiences. The bond of fellowship also, becomes ever so much stronger as we unite in the many prayers and petitions that are set before God.

Once a month the College students conduct the evening service at the Bethel Mission Church. Musical items are rendered, and one or more speakers give short, challenging talks. The theme for the October program was "Christian Separation."

The College Missionary Fellowship Band has once more been organized and a new committee has taken charge for the current year. John Wiens, chairman of this committee, spent six weeks during the past summer, among the Hopi Indians of Arizona. B. Toews, faculty sponsor, served as a missionary among the Indians of Oklahoma for several years.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

THE Seminary Board held its semi-annual meeting Oct. 31. Those present were A. S. Rosenberger, Ben Esch, A. R. Kreider, Erland Waltner, J. M. Regier, E. W. Baumgartner, Willard K. Claassen. J. N. Smucker, R. L. Hartzler, L. L. Rameyer, D. C. Wedel, and Robert Hartzler. S. F. Pannabecker and J. T. Neufeld of the Seminary Staff were also present.

A committee composed of A. E. Kreider, Willard Claassen and Robert Hartzler was appointed to discuss long range plans for the development and expansion of the faculty. The Board authorized the purchase, when funds are available, of a new bus to replace the old one which has been out of use for over a month. Transportation to and from Bethany is being done with private cars at the present time. The purchase of The Mennonite Hymnary for the new Bethany Chapel was also authorized, and considerable discussion took place in regard to general emphasis of the school in Biblical and doctrinal matters.

Sunday, Oct. 29, a strong message was brought to the church in the morning service by D. C. Wedel, Acting President of Bethel College, speaking on the subject, "Living in a Mad World." Then at our monthly vesper service in the afternoon, J. N. Smucker, of Bluffton, Ohio, brought a message on the subject of "The Permanent Reformation of the Church."

On Tuesday evening, Dr. Charles Bell, Jr., of the First Baptist Church of Madison, Wisconsin, and widely remembered for his successful Bible lectures at Bluffton College two years ago, ate dinner with our students and then brought a devotional message in the parlors of the main building. On Wednesday morning he lectured to the Christian Ethics Class at Bethany giving his testimony as a non-resistant Christian.

Wednesday morning Dr. E. Stanley Jones was in chapel.

Thursday, Dr. P. G. Bhagat, an ordained elder in the Church of the Brethren Mission in India, delivered a message which fit in very well with that of Stanley Jones.

Announcement has been made that Willard Wiebe, interim pastor of the Seminary church, will conduct special evangelistic services at the Mennonite Bible Mission, November 5 to 12.

On Friday the corner stone was laid for the new $200,000 chapel being erected on the Bethany Campus.

Marvin Dirks has been appointed as faculty representative of this school at the Conference for Teachers of Evangelism to be held at Louisville Presbyterian Seminary December 7-9.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

THE Freeman College operetta, "The Mikado," drew large crowds to Pioneer Hall Nov. 2 and 3. Despite a cold wet night Nov. 2, about 400 people came and the second evenings program drew many more. The audience highly praised the performances and singing of the cast and chorus. Several groups came from as far as Henderson, Nebraska, and Mountain Lake, Minn., to see the well known musical play.

The University of Minnesota Players, H. E. D. Redford and Pat Clawson of Salt Lake City, Utah, and Chris Ringham of Albert Lea, Minn., presented an hour of plays Nov. 2. Parts from two great plays, "Taming of the Shrew" by Shakespeare and "The Boor" by Chekov were given with spirit and imagination. They brought their own sets and lights and the bright costumes for the time of Shakespeare and also for the time of the Czars in Russia. The classic plays proved their popularity among the students who were ready to see more.

Freeman College and Academy basketball schedule opens Nov. 17. The College will start against the State College "B" team and the Academy will open against Chancellor High School.

Jottings

NORTHERN DISTRICT

—Salem Zion Church, Freeman, South Dakota: September 24, our pastor baptized a class of thirteen. Five others transferred their membership to the church by letter. We held communion services on World Communion Day. Many of the young people have left for their schools and teaching jobs. We are glad to welcome instructors and students of Freeman Junior College to our services. Erwin Wedel, missionary among the southern Negroes, spoke to us November 1.—Mrs. Albert Schwartz, Corr.

WESTERN DISTRICT

—Beatrice Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: Our congregation voted to continue broadcasting the morning worship services over K.W.B.E. the fourth Sunday of every month for another year. Waldo Claassen and Dorothy Ensz were married September 22. Viola Mae Ewert, Hillsboro, and John Andreas, Beatrice, were married October 15. A "welcome home" service for Mr. and Mrs. Carnie Lohrenz and Ruthie was held October 22. They have been serving under M.C.C. in Asuncion, Paraguay, for two years. —Corr.

—Faith Church, Greensburg, Kansas: Andrew R. Shelly, pastor of the Stirling Avenue Mennonite Church in Kitchener, Ontario, was our guest speaker October 22. In the evening he conducted an inspirational candle light service for the young people. The men of our congregation are again busy working on our church building. We are studying "The Doctrine of the Bible," in our mid-week prayer meeting and Bible study group. —Corr.

—Hebron Church, Buhler, Kansas: October 29, the annual Harvest Festival was held in our church. Instead of our usual Sunday school Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Neufeld presented talks on the life of the people in the Congo of Africa. After a basket dinner Wilhelm Dyck, Bethel College, and Missionary W. C. Voth, returned from China and Japan, brought the messages. The morning collection for missions was $320, and the afternoon collection for relief amounted to $230. October 30 through November 1, Harry Yoder, field representative of Bluffton College, held inspirational meetings in our church. —Mrs. Elizabeth Wall, Corr.

—Bergtal Church, Pawnee Rock, Kansas: Mr. and Mrs. Kaufman showed slides of their mission work in Columbia, South America, October 15. Delegates to the Western District Conference were Mr. and Mrs. Otto Schmidt, Robert Boese, Mrs. Elrick Smith, Mrs. Jesse Franklin, Earl Schmidt and Mr. and Mrs. Kaufman. Mrs. B. J. Koehn passed away at her home October 22, at the age of 75. Funeral services were conducted by John E. Kaufman the following Tuesday. J. E. Hartzler began a series of meetings in our church October 29, and concluded Sunday morning, November 5.—Mrs. John K. Friesen, Corr.

—Herold Church, Bessie, Oklahoma: October 19, the women of our congregation observed the birthday of our pastor's wife, Mrs. Dahlenburg, with a miscelaneous shower. Our mission sale October 20, netted a little over $600. October 25, the sisters met in the church basement to sort, mend and pack relief clothing. Our delegates reported on the Western District Conference recently after which the Sunday school election was held. A. W. Friesen was in our midst November 5.—Corr.

—First Church, Pretty Prairie, Kansas: Peter Klassen of Brazil brought a message in the German language recently which was greatly appreciated by older members. W. F. Unruh will conduct Lay-Evangelism or Personal Workers program in our church. Three evenings will be given to church services and three evenings on lay visitation.—Ralph Krehbiel, Corr.

PACIFIC DISTRICT

—Grace Church, Dallas, Oregon: Our delegates to the General Conference were Mr. and Mrs. Henry Schmidt and the pastor, J. J. Regier. The pastor and his family were given two weeks vacation following the conference during which time Mr. Loewen, Mr. Hovland and J. R. Warkentin filled the pulpit. October 16-22 the annual mission conference was held. A. E. Kreider, Waldo Flickinger and Mr. Cassels each gave two sermons. Mr. Kreider and Mr. Flickenger also spoke at our harvest festival in the afternoon when a mission offering was taken. The Ladies Mission Society is planning a Thanksgiving dinner and bazaar for November 30.—Corr.

—Glendale Church, Lynden, Washington: October our congregation joined the Whitehorn M. B. Church in their all-day harvest festival in an exchange program. Peter Klassen of Brazil brought a report of conditions in the Mennonite colonies of South America, October 13. October 8, our Sunday school had a short consecration service for the newly-elected officers and teachers. This was also promotion Sunday in the Junior Department and certificates were given to those pupils being promoted. October 26, Waldo Flickinger presented the work of the "Go Ye Mission," showing pictures of the work and also bringing an inspirational message.—Mrs. Clarence C. Schmidt, Corr.

—Country Church, Monroe, Wash.: Our pastor, Abraham Unruh, is completing a series of sermons on the "Temptations of Jesus." October 10, the film "Dust or Destiny," a Moody film, was shown. October 24, Waldo Flickinger presented the work of the "Go Ye Missions" and showed slides of that work. The junior choir, under Mrs. Unruh, had a scavenger party recently. Thirty-two members were present. November 5, "homecoming" for former ministers was held. Jacob Unruh of Wolf Point, Montana is coming to hold meetings for ten days. Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Wall are parents of a boy, Jack Larry, born October 20.—Corr.

MIDDLE DISTRICT

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: As a celebration of praise and thanksgiving to God for enabling us to raise the money necessary to complete the organ fund, John Schantz of the Schantz Organ Factory gave a recital Sunday evening, October 29. J. N. Smucker brought the morning mesage October 15. The Women's Missionary Society gave an interestholding program Sunday evening, October 15, using the thought, "Christ is the Hope of the World." The new officers for the Missionary Society are president, Mrs. Wilbur Gerber; vice-president , Mrs. Merl Lehman; secretary, Mrs. Homer Hostetler; treasurer, Mrs. Arnold Raber; chorister, Mrs. Victor Gerber; pianist, Mrs. Leroy Moser. A corn husking bee was held by the Willing Workers in Ivan Gerber's cornfield recently.—Mrs. Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

AN APOLOGY TO UNKNOWN SOLDIER

A noted minister of the Eastern United States, who himself had seen the ravages of war, wrote the following apology not long after World War I and published it:

"I renounce war bacause of what it does to our men. I have watched them coming from the front-line trenches. I have seen the long, long hospital trains filled with their mutilated bodies. I have heard the cries of the crazed and the prayers of those who wanted to die and could not, and I remember the maimed and ruined men and women for whom the war is not yet over.

"I renounce war for what it compels us to do to our enemies, bombing their mothers and villages, starving their children by blockades, laughing over our coffee cups about every damnable thing we have been able to do to them. I renounce war for its consequences, for the lies it lives on and progagates, for the undying hatreds it arouses, for the dictators it puts in the place of democracy, for the starvation that stalks after it. I renounce war and never again, directly or indirectly, will I sanction or support another! O Unknown Soldier, in penitent reparation I make you that pledge."

CONFERENCE STEWARDSHIP THERMOMETER

The total budget receipts for each board and committee to the end of October are as follows:

Board	Budget	January October Receipts	Per cent Received to Date
Foreign Mission Section	$255,000	$205,342*	81
Home Mission Section	59,800	53,359	89
Committee on Relief and Hospitals	178,250	75,212	42
Committee on Peace Service	10,500	6,253	60
Committee on Mutual	11,850	7,180	61
Board of Education and Publication	27,400	11,759	43
General Treasury	5,115	3,965	78
Ministers' Aid	6,000	1,407	23
Women's Missionary Association	9,500	5,566	59
Mennonite Biblical Seminary	56,000	28,930	52
Young People's Union	3,800	1,990	52
	$623,215	$400,963	64

*Includes one large gift of $18,000 from an estate.
Includes one large gift of $6,000 from an estate.
Includes $10,000 needed for loan capital.

Again this month receipts for several boards and committees have been very good; however, the average for all boards and committees still falls far short of what it should be. With 83 per cents of the current year past, only 64 per cent of the budget needs have been met—a shortage of 19 per cent. Can we make up this 19 per cent in the next two months?

The Mission Board comes nearest to meeting the 83 per cent average with Home Missions exceeding it by 6 per cent and Foreign Missions lacking only 2 per cent of reaching it. We praise God for your fine interest in the cause of missions and trust that you will be challenged to continue your faithful support. We also pray that sufficient gifts will be forthcoming so that those boards and committees which are yet far behind in meeting their budgets may also reach the 100 per cent mark by the close of the year.

Very sincerely,
Edna Ruth Mueller, Office Secretary
General Conference Headquarters

BIBLE SUNDAY
December 10

..The words of the Lord are pure words; as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times.

All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness.

Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me.

The word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart.

CHURCHES AS COVER PICTURES

In an article some time ago, J. W. Fretz stressed the importance of giving more attention to the architectural structure of our churches. He was then asked by the editor to select representative churches which show the various approved designs for houses of worship. To this he gladly consented.

Beginning in the next issue, this series of about eight church buildings will be used as the cover pictures, (not including the Christmas issue). With each picture will be given briefly the name, location and interesting facts concerning the church. We hope this series may arouse more interest in the important place of the church building as a house of worship.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN ENDORSES PROGRAM OF AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY

President Harry S. Truman has endorsed the program of Worldwide Bible Reading, from Thanksgiving to Christmas and the observance of Universal Bible Sunday on December 11, the program which is sponsored annually by the American Bible Society.

President Truman says: "Our forebearers were a people who read one book. Happily for them and for us that Book was the Bible. From earliest childhood through all the years to advanced age it was for them the source of an amazing fortitude, the fountain of peaceful and lasting spiritual energy.

"The Bible is the book that guided the souls and molded the hearts of generations of good men and valiant women. It became the rock on which rested the everlasting reality of religion. It also formed the style that gave our English tongue its most facile expression. As one who is a sharer in this rich heritage I am happy again to voice this appeal to Americans everywhere to participate in the observance of Universal Bible Sunday, which falls this year on December eleventh.

"I think the American Bible Society's annual appeal for assiduous reading of the Scriptures between Thanksgiving and Christmas Days has great merit. Never was a weary world more in need of the message which the Bible alone could bring to nations rent by anger, hatred and ill will.

"May God continue to bless and increase the reading of His Word."

MUTUAL AID PAR EXCELLENCE

A certain devoted sister in the General Conference has caught the vision of mutual aid. She has offered to buy a farm for a promising young man and rent it to him with a three year lease with the option of buying it at the end of the three year period. Furthermore, she is willing to buy this farm in a small Mennonite community which needs additional families and where there is promise of success in the community. We hope there will be many others who will have similar vision and a sense of stewardship.

THE WINONA LAKE PEACE CONFERENCE

IT may well be that the recent Peace Conference held at Winona Lake, Indiana, will go down in Mennonite history as a meeting of great importance. It was the first conference ever held where all the constituting groups of the Mennonite Central Committee were together for a three day session in covering the whole ground of the issues of peace, war, non-resistance.

It was a serious conference. Everyone felt the weight of the impending world issues, and sought to find the Christian way to meet them. Peace was not considered as an easy way out which could be won by a neat formula, but a matter of grave spiritual significance.

It was a humbling conference. There was none of the "I-know-all-the-answers" attitude. All felt how little we knew about all the implications of peace. All realized how meager is our knowledge compared with the wisdom of God. We knew the task of peace was far too great for us in our own strength.

It was a searching conference. We were seekers after the true way of peace, and our place in world relations. The Bible was searched; the will of God was earnestly sought, and everyone felt the great need of divine guidance as problems too great for us were presented and considered.

It was a sharing conference. A leading address was read at the opening of a session. Then there were usually several hours of frank and earnest discussion in smaller groups of about twenty each. Ideas and experiences and convictions were freely shared. Attitudes and opinions were carefully weighed in the light of God's Word and will.

It was a rewarding conference. Secretaries in each group carefully listed the main points and questions raised. These were then brought together with those of other groups and put in classified form. The results were again brought before the whole assembly, where they were discussed and perhaps corrected. These "findings" proved very stimulating and helpful.

It was a conference of permanent results. All the main addresses were carefully written out and are on file. The "findings" likewise were listed and are on record. But the final Conference Statement, which was seriously considered and passed in open session, is of such vital importance that it should be carefully considered by individuals and churches. Watch for it in your church papers; preserve and study it, that you too, may be a sharer in this historic conference.

WORLD-WIDE CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIPS

WITHIN the last several years there has been a notable increase of contacts between Mennonites of this country and those of other lands. Perhaps the era of Christian isolationism is also passing. A number of church leaders from Europe and South America have recently visited our churches and communities. The World Conference brought an exceptionally large number of delegates. Other leaders have visited us the last several years. Many Mennonite students from other lands have been in our colleges. Some of our students have gone on student-tours in other lands and communities.

These wider fellowships are bound to have helpful results. We realize how true it is that in Christ there is no east or west, no north or south, but one great fellowship around the world. We share our problems, our concerns, our methods of work, and our results. There is a quality of strength in these closer contacts.

Even our official denominational name is a reflection of the wider fellowship. No longer are we to be known as church of "North America;" the name of the continent has been dropped and we are now to be known as "the General Conference Mennonite Church," with members in a Christian fellowship around the world.

BIBLE SUNDAY

FOLLOWING the suggestion of the American Bible Society, many of the churches observe the second Sunday in Dec. as "Bible Sunday." The full services of the day could well be one unit of concentration on the Bible as our "Light and Guide." The Sunday School could place special emphasis on the Bible in all of its departments and considerations. A strong sermon on the Bible as the Word of God and its place in our life could bring the whole matter clearly before the people. The evening service could well be built up into a strong presentation of our need and help of this Light and Guide.

But we need to do more than talk about the Bible and congratulate ourselves that it is still a best-seller. It needs, in the figure of the Bible itself, to be eaten and digested and become a part and parcel of our life. It must be built into the daily fabric of our living.

May Bible Sundy be a good start, but not the end, of our emphasis upon the Bible as the Word of God with its daily strength for daily need.

CHRISTIANITY IN OUR CHURCH COLLEGES

AS a part of the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Bluffton College, a group of educators representing the Mennonite and affiliated colleges met November 16-18 to discuss the general theme of "The College Curriculum as an Organ for the Teaching of Christianity."

With prepared addresses and careful thought a serious effort was made to rediscover how Christianity can best be passed on to the students. How to present Christianity through philosophy, education, art, music, literature and the material and social sciences.

Our colleges are earnestly seeking to make Christianity more vital in the life of the students. Our prayers should be with them.

Honoring the Lord with our Offerings

A. J. Neuenschwander

IT IS AGAIN the season when we as a nation "count our many blessings." In the United States we observe Thanksgiving Day, and in our Canadian churches Harvest and Mission Festivals are held after the harvests have been gathered in. A large percentage of our peoples are farmers. It is at this time of the year, after months of waiting and hoping for a good crop and fair prices, that incomes from the farms are at their highest. We are truly grateful to God for the many blessings He has showered on us.

Those of our members who have steady work and regular income in shops, factory and store rejoice when all the churches can bring in their gifts for our Conference Boards, and they are encouraged to increase their gifts at this season for the Lord's work.

A. J. Neuenschwander, Pastor, First Church in Wadsworth, Ohio, Secretary Home Mission Section of General Conference.

All these needs are before us all the year. We praise the Giver of all good gifts that offerings come in regularly every Lord's Day in Sunday School classes, among children as well as adults, in Young Peoples' organizations, Men's Brotherhoods, Missionary Societies, and congregations. With these gifts laborers can be paid and necessary expenses can be met, as well as other phases of work carried on. Building mission churches, renovating and enlarging other church buildings are a regular part of our program. We rejoice that churches need to be enlarged. It indicates a "hunger and thirst for God's word."

In October and November, when Thanksgiving and Harvest Festivals are held, Board members rejoice because they feel that now the planned expenses as figured in the budget can be met.

INVESTIGATE OUTSIDERS

Occasionally, but in relatively rare cases, outsiders help with contributions to our Boards. Much more often outsiders become aware of this ingathering of offerings and seem to make definite efforts to get into our churches in this period.

Recently a man from the outside sought a speaking date in one of our churches, on the consideration of "an offering after his message." In a letter that accompanied the request he gave references where he had spoken before. A few days later we called this pastor by long distance telephone. The matter was presented to the church council. The cause seemed worthy; there was sentiment that the message might be helpful. Discussion followed. Finally the church council suggested that the pastor write to some of the ministers this outsider presented as references. The letters were written and when the replies came they were such that this man appeared to be a brother who had a method and ability to "high-pressure" the people for large offerings. The outsider, anxious for a meeting, came to the pastor to 'fix the date'.

The pastor asked simple questions, like these:

a. Do you have an annual financial statement? Our council would like to see where the contributions go.

b. Do you belong to any organization or board that directs the work you represent?

Both questions were evaded. No date was set. Investigate outsiders.

SUPPORT OUR BOARDS

General Conference Boards carry on work in places and fields that have been officially accepted by the Conference after careful consideration and prayer. The Boards report their stewardship and programs to Conference every triennial session.

The work is our work — the Boards are our Boards. If we fail to support our work, who will carry on — the outsiders?

PRAISE THE LORD

In the past years you have responded nobly to the regular and special needs of the Home Mission Section.

a. Early in the year a call was given for "horses for ministers in Paraguay." Ministers need to travel much in every colony but the need for horses was especially acute in Neuland. One of our churches, Pretty Prairie, became interested in this particular call and different Sunday School classes responded so that the General Conference Committee in Paraguay could write recently: "Thank you. The need for horses has been met, for the present."

b. The need for church buildings to be built in Paraguay was announced and an encouraging amount came in for the "South American Church Building Fund." The new church in Philadelphia, Fernheim, is almost completed. A church in Friesland is under construction at present, and complete plans have been drawn, and bricks and wood are being prepared for two much needed churches in Neuland. The corrugated roofing for the three churches has been ordered through M. C. C. The cost for the roofing and shipping is approximately $3,000.00 The labor is largely furnished by the

ONE OF THE obligations that our Conference has recognized for many years, has been that of helping it's members who move to new locations for means of livelihood, by providing for their spiritual need. This has been our work here in Caldwell and community.

Since the organization of the church on May 25th, 1947, with fifteen members it has grown to its present membership of thirty-two with more in prospect. Nine of these have come by baptism and the others by the right hand of fellowship.

Our record attendance in Sunday School is seventy-nine and this spring we had the unusual experience of having fifty present for four consecutive Sundays. For our Christmas programs we usually have around a hundred in attendance. We have a Christian Endeavor Society for all age groups which meets every other Sunday evening and the attendance is good. Our Ladies Aid has put on food sales in our city at various times and has made and gathered clothing for relief. This summer a Layman's Brotherhood was organized. They have undertaken to farm a field of sugar beets next year, the proceeds of which are to go for the church.

The fine church in the picture, was purchased and renovated by the men of the Congregation. We anticipate that this church will have a fruitful and glorious period of service in the years to come.

We have been able to go beyond our own in that we are taking part in a morning devotional period over the local radio station in co-operation with the ministerial association. We have also taken part in union services during the Easter Season and other occasions.

Last March we were richly blessed by a week of revival meetings when Rev. and Mrs. P. D. Unruh of Colfax, Washington, were with us and presented the blessed Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ to us in various ways. Since Caldwell is located on U. S. Highway 30 which is one of the main east and west highways of our nation and also on a main east and west railroad we have had the privilege of having various visitors representing various phases of our conference work and institutions.

We feel that the work here is filling a definite need and we cherish the prayers of all those who are interested in the spiritual welfare of their brethren and those outside of Christ. Since Caldwell is a city of over eleven-thousand in population it presents a challange to the fulfilling of the great Commission of our Lord and Saviour when He said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." Mark 16:15.

brethren in Paraguay. Windows, doors, cement, nails, etc., must be purchased there. The Home Mission Section of the Board of Missions has made gifts and smaller loans to all three church groups. The "South American Church Building Fund" will be kept open for your designated gifts.

c. Our Canadian churches have had quite an experience these last three years. In this time about six thousand displaced Mennonites entered Canada. In European camps these refugees had been starved spiritually, but now they are coming into our churches in large numbers. For this desire for worship and fellowship we praise God. Many of our younger established churches have been forced to enlarge their places of worship and they are turning to the Home Mission Section for gifts and loans. In this connection the Pauline admonition comes to mind when he says: "we that are strong (well established) ought to bear the infirmities of the weak." Rom. 15;1.

There are many instances when much work must be done to get people to come to hear the word preached. Praise the Lord, the recent immigrants seize the opportunity to hear the gospel and come gladly.

Let us give our offerings with gratitude in our Thanksgiving and Harvest Festivals.

MENNONITE MEN for CHRIST

"Lay activities are always so challenging to me; for I see in them possibilities without limit, if we can only grasp them! Thus we have within our own little organizaion here in the East, all the possibilities of the Christian Business men's groups, the service features of the Rotary and others, the fields such as our Old Mennonite brethren work through their Clayton Kratz Fellowship, and one need not mention the many other independent organizations such as Christian Laymen and others, all doing a good job.—John E. Fretz.

Jesus Christ, The Lord and Master of the Ages

Peter Klassen*

Introduction

WHEN a person has only one opportunity to preach in a given place, and when there is no immediate prospect that that opportunity will ever again present itself, then a messenger of the gospel finds himself asking, anxiously: "Just what shall one say?" It should not be too difficult to find a ready answer to that question: Don't we have the Bible? And yet, as a matter of fact, the Bible is not like a recipe book, that one needs only to reach in and pull out the words—ready-cut for the audience. We have to do here with God himself and His holy word. The minister of the gospel must find in its pages a message always the same yet forever new. Then I think of the advice which my good wife, who unfortunately cannot be with us on this trip, gives me. In one of her recent letters she says something like this: "Present always the Christ, the living, loving Christ. Set Him right in the center of your message. Your job is not to glorify man or man's accomplishment." So that is what I want to do today—I want to set Christ right in the center of my message and right in the center of this congregation. Would that this might be possible. Our text is not strange. It is the familiar passage from Hebrews 13:8.

"Jesus Christ yesterday, today, and tomorrow . . ." May I take the liberty to translate it thus freely? In a store in Berlin some years ago an old Christian woman stood at a counter where fountain pens were for sale, trying to make up her mind just which one she wanted. The clerk trying to be helpful to her picked up one of the fountain pens and placed it in the hands of the good old lady and laying a sheet of paper on the counter, said, "I suggest that you write something. Suppose you write the one name that is dearest to you." The old lady wrote "Jesus Christ." There were several other customers who were standing nearby. An old man, seeing this, asked: "Let me try the pen, too." He wrote where the old lady had left off: "Yesterday and today." There was also a young girl standing in line who wanted to try the pen and taking it from the hand of the old man she writes: "The same also forever." Then those three, who had never known each other before, shook hands with each other. These had found each other in the One who belongs to all the ages and through whom alone the real and true fellowship here on earth may be found. It is a fellowship which spans all the ages. It is this Christ that unites us and binds us in one great fellowship. It was in Him that we found ourselves at Freeman in one brotherhood and in Him too that though we may be separated by many thousands of miles, we find a bond of unity. I preach Christ—the same Christ that you too preach—who at once is the foundation and security alike to you here in North America and to us under the Southern Cross.

To this Christ belongs yesterday—the past.

"Yesterday" reaches back into the dim mists of eternity, before ever the earth was formed. To those proud Jews who could and did look back upon so great and so famous a history, who stood before Jesus striking their breasts and saying, "We are Abraham's children," Jesus replied solemnly, "Before Abraham was, I am." He not only was before the foundation of the world—He was that foundation — in Him, through Him, and for Him all things exist. He carries all things with His mighty word. He is the beginning of all creation and into that far past the Christ reaches. Even Israel's past belongs to Him. The Apostle Paul has a wonderful way of quoting scripture when he refers to that rock in the desert from which the waters gushed. He writes: "That rock which went before them was the Christ." You cannot think of the history of Israel without thinking of the Christ.

Think also of the yesterday when Jesus himself went here and there doing good. O how much good he did, here on earth, where mankind staggered blindly hither and yon, often bruising itself so badly. Or think of His wonderful words, as they fell from His lips in the attempt to make people understand the great heart of the Heavenly Father. Think of the suffering, His death and of the wonderful resurrection and how He is now seated at the right hand of the Father. All that is a part of the yesterday which is the basis of this sermon. In my experience, attempting to help the some five thousand displaced persons in Paraguay. It has seemed to me most important that in our plans for the rehabilitation of these poor people who have come from a world that has been completely broken, we must always remember to lay that foundation where Menno Simons and others of our forefathers always have laid it. Christ is that foundation.

Or consider even our own yesterdays—some two thousand years of general church history since the time of Christ, but more particularly the four hundred or more of our own yesterdays as a Mennonite church. (Again and again I have had occasion to refer to these yesterdays.) In these four hundred years Christ has indeed revealed himself. Not that we have always heard Him or honored Him as we should have. Indeed, very often Christ had to begin with us anew, both in our individual churches and within our Conference. In Freeman at the 50th Jubilee Celebration of the founding of General Conference mission work in India this was noted frequently and it made a deep impression. Christ has revealed himself, indeed, both in North and in South America.

However, for each one of us there remains still another question which each one of us must ask in the inner silences of our own being: "Has Christ revealed himself also in my own past? Have I had an experience with Christ?" If not, how poor our lives really are. If within us individually there has been no such experience, we really have no story—no life story. In the life of Peter it was only when Jesus steped into the boat with Peter that the life story of Peter really began. Likewise with other apostles. How about you and me? Have you and I had Christ in our yesterdays?

*Peter Klassen—minister and teacher in Curitiba, Brazil.

This Christ is also the Lord of the Present— today belongs to Him

Frankly, it does not always appear so. It is not always clear that today belongs to this Christ, but rather to the forces of evil and violence. In Paraguay we had a teachers conference. One of the teachers reported how, with her class, she had been studying one of the miracles. After her report in the discussion following, one of the teachers told the following experience. He also had been discussing with his pupils one of the miracles reported in the Gospels. One of the pupils got up—it was one of the children of those who have just recently arrived from Europe—and said, quite openly: "No doubt Jesus did perform such miracles in the past, but surely He does no such miracles today!" Now, where did this boy get such an idea? Did he perhaps get such ideas while in Europe, in the years that he and his parents had to spend their days among the ruins, in the streets of Europe's bombed cities? Did he perhaps get this idea when, while his parents were seeking a hiding place somewhere in the streets while to the right and to the left bombs were falling in their midst one bomb took from them their own father? When, perhaps nowhere a helping hand could be found? Perhaps. Yet no matter how fiendish the evil forces of this world may be or seem to be, that boy was wrong. Jesus Christ is in our todays just as He was in our yesterdays, alive and revealing himself in many ways. There is a German "Life of Christ", which is notably different from most biographies of this nature. The author was a learned professor in Breslau, in the province of Silesia, Germany. About a year ago this writer, a war refugee of west Germany, died in the midst of poverty and suffering. The title of this book reads, "Jesus Christ, in Palestine, Silesia, and Elsewhere." Yes, indeed! We could make quite a list of the names of places elsewhere. "Elsewhere" includes Canada, the States, Brazil, Paraguay—yes, the entire world. It requires only that we lift up our eyes and see Him — in the present!

This same Christ belongs also to tomorrow.

All the world fears tomorrow. The disciples of Jesus Christ experienced this fear but Jesus did not scold them. He nailed down certain principles when, on that fatal night when His desciples betrayed Him, He told them "In the world ye shall have fears." Whoever can see through this world, and its darkness and its evil forces, must indeed experience this fear. Wonderful but!—Jesus nevertheless is still the Lord of the future. Today the fear of the future is dominant—fear of the atomic bombs, or what not—fear of one another, of one's neighbors, etc. Yes, indeed, fear rules our very lives.

But the Christian need not fear. There, in the future—in the great tomorrow—stands the illuminous figure of Jesus Christ. He was the first, He will be the last—the alpha and omega—who holds in His hands the beginning, as well as the future. Just one personal testimony: As for me the future lost its power to strike fear in my soul when I lost my mother. I was ten years old. There were seven of us children, all of us minors. She called us to her bed, the youngest only five days old. Even this little one was given to her and she laid her tired, dying hands upon the child and upon us to bless us, saying: "Now I go to my Saviour." Tell me, my friends, with this picture ever before me, why should I fear tomorrow? Why should I ever fear death? No sorrow, no tribulation, no portentous night of evil shall forever again strike terror to one's soul for to Him belong our yesterdays, our todays, and our every tomorrow.

And this Christ calls upon us to be obedient to Him—both you here in North America as well as we in South America—each one in his particular place.

THE PRICELESS TREASURE

Thy Word is like a garden, Lord,
With flowers bright and fair;
And every one who seeks may pluck
A lovely cluster there.
Thy Word is like a deep, deep mine;
And jewels rich and rare
Are hidden in its mighty depths
For ev'ry searcher there.
Thy Word is like a starry host;
A thousand rays of light
Are seen to guide the traveller
And make his pathway bright.
Thy Word is like an armory,
Where soldiers may repair,
And find for life's long battle-day,
All needful weapons there.
O may I love Thy precious Word,
May I explore the mine,
May I its fragrant flowers glean,
May light upon me shine!
O may I find my armor there,
Thy Word my trusty sword;
I'll learn to fight with ev'ry foe
The battle of the Lord.

In Old Vienna

Norman Wingert*

BEAUTIFUL Austria! I think I shall never see again such profligacy of variegated color as when I flew over this lovely land last harvest time on the way to Vienna. Only you who are acquainted with the patchwork that is characteristic of European agriculture can adequately conceive of the riot of harvest colors and geometrical figures that I saw as I looked down: between billowy white clouds to the earth beneath.The scene was breathtaking in its peacefulness, its cleanness, its colorfulness. How fortunate, I thought, are those whose lot it is to spend their lives in such a setting!

VIENNA THE BEAUTIFUL

Then here is Vienna. How like a dream it is that Mrs. Wingert and I should today be "at home" in Vienna—"in Old Vienna on the Blue Danube", the city that calls up the names of the House of the Hapsburgs, of Marcus Aurelius, of Schubert, Mozart, Beethoven, Hayden, Wagner! Mellowed by time and hoary with political and cultural glory, the city reflects today, despite her scars of war, the many splendid epochs of her history. Her buildings are encrustations of Roman foundations, Baroque architecture, Grecian and Gothic styles, and Renaissance motifs, interspersed only occasionally by new and modern buildings. On every hand one sees plaques and statuary, classical arches and frescoes which commemorate illustrious personages and historical heydays. Cathedrals and monuments combine ecclesiastical symbols with worldly grandeur.

Only a quarter-hour walk from the Mennonite Central Committee Center is Schoenbrunn, the large Imperial Country Seat of Emporer Francis Josef I, and the 1441-room residence (it has 139 kitchens) of Empress Maria Theressa and her sixteen children, breath-taking even in the lavishness of its gold and gold-plated furnishings, and of its zoological and botonical gardens.

If I interpret properly what "Old Vienna" seems to say to me it is this: "You are pretty much of an upstart and very naive; a thousand years has taught me many things - 'veni, vidi, vici.' " The city does not say it sneeringly, but I am profoundly impressed with the observation. I am inclined to envy the citizens of Old Vienna who have the privilege of growing up amidst these splendors of her culture, charm and wealth of melody, just as, in looking down from the plane, I envied those who dwell in the beautiful Austrian countryside.

But this desire to live in the midst of Austria's glory may be based on a too superficial observation. Whether we look at the brilliantly colored Austrian landscape or the mellower tones of Vienese culture, we see a beauty that is only skin-deep. Upon closer and longer examination we find that below this layer of beauty lies a network of aching nerves.

In the successive vistas of an hour's plane ride from London to Vienna, one with only a smattering of history knows that down there is the ground where for two-thousand years armies have marched and counter-marched and that it is only God's green grass and golden grain that hides the blood-reddened soil. One knows, too, that Vienna's piles of stone, although so grandly built, serve chiefly to commemorate bloody battles and cruel conquests. Vienese masterpieces in painting, opera and oratorio are, indeed, gloriously executed, but the events they commemorate are so often not glorious; the themes predominate in suffering, tragedy and sadness. Casual eyes catch the beauty but not the suffering. The air traveler does not want to come down to earth with wars and wild boars, and the tourist is careful not to puncture this skin of cultural beauty and prod about in the flesh of realism; to the tourist, sightseeing in Austria and in Old Vienna must be thrilling, but not painful.

VIENNA, THE TRAGIC

Being now residents of Old Vienna, Mrs. Wingert and I are seeing ever more deeply beneath the appearance of things. Why should we not endeavor to see deeply? Mennoninte Central Committee workers are not classified in the category of the tourist. Our business is to lay back the layer of appearances, to find the sores that infest the social body, to help at least a little to heal the deep and ugly wounds.

And how deep and ugly the wounds are! How bruised the flesh! How jagged the nerves! The ache is so great and so general that there is sometimes a literal sympathetic ache in the contemplation of it. What anomaly that the city of lilting song, of regal residence, of medical marvels and of Catholic cathedrals should today have a heart so sorely sick! How strange that the accumulated wisdom and culture of the centuries could not mitigate the inhumanity of man to man!

Let me lay open for your viewing a few of the wounds and sores and exposed nerves: We saw mothers holding dead children in their arms as they stood in miles-long files for days in zero weather to cross international boundries; one mother did not go to the rescue of her child when it slipped into a stream; it died, but she could not afford to lose her place in the long queue of miserables - - He worked for two years in the mines in water to his waist; today his knees troubled him constantly—Her husband disappeared as by magic from the streets of Vienna — He saw a farmer pinned through his bowels to a building with a pitchfork, still alive, the work of the enemy before retreating — She sipped the pineapple juice slowly at our table so as to enjoy the maximum from every drop of a delicacy she had not tasted for ten years; during the past five years she has not had a piece of new clothing — He was born in Smyrna, speaks Greek, French, Italian, German, and very good English; came to our door "at the end of the rope"; had sat on cafe chairs nights for two weeks, not having the six schillings for a cheap lodging (a schilling equals four cents) — She and her mother fled their home and their general store, saw the first section of their refugee train completely demolished by a direct bomb-hit, saw two children die in their train compartment from spoiled soup after five days of nothing to eat; her brother was one of only thirty survivors out of 4,000 on a four-ship transport that was bombed and sunk.

She noticed how thoughtfully her Jewish girlfriend's father went out of the house when she visited there; he wanted to forestall any danger to her; the danger was not unreal, for later she learned that the Jew had been carried off to the incinerator — He ate fifty potatoes at one time after days of hunger in his flight — He and his family of six had to live, no, exist, last month and this month, and will have to exist next month, on four hundred schillings — She had to dig ditches all day under the threat of the lash just for digging's sake — She can almost see her home, worth 200,000 schillings, across the river, where all her family had died at the coming of the enemy; the only survivor, her face would be an artist's ideal for a painting entitled, "Hunger and Dismay"; I am quite sure she sells herself for food.

She and her Jewish doctor husband received the key to their apartment in the afternoon; that night the Jewish purge struck Vienna; they fled to China; there he worked as physician in a Salvation Army beggar's camp of 1,500 persons; food was so scarce they ate worms; in the past year they trecked back "home"; were again just established with their seven-year-old daughter in two rooms when he died; because he had given his services free to our Mennonite Central Committee personnel, I followed the urn to its hole in the ground; in her distress she called us nightly and asked "Why? Why?"

These are some of the sores and the hurts Mrs. Wingert and I have found within the lovely landscape that I saw from the air and the cultural atmosphere that impressed us so favorably upon our first arrival. They are very real and very many. As to the cause of these ills we are not concerned; the human heart is capable of unbelievable atrocities regardless of race or nationality. What does concern us is to have eyes to see and a heart and hand to help.

No doubt these bruised personalities are as unreal to you friends at home as they were to me while in the plane. But just as I lessened the distance between myself and these needy folk in a literal sense by coming down to earth, will you, too, though busy with your own concerns with a lively and sympathetic imagination, span the water that lies between, and join us as we walk and work among these people. Divest your mind of the romantic concepts and the classical charms that the phrase, "Old Vienna on the Blue Danube" holds for you, and see the raw wounds underneath the natural and cultural beauty in this city of two million souls with its monthly quota of fifty suicides. Then kneel down as in the very presence of these dear people and bear them up to God in heartfelt prayer.

MENNONITES HOLD PEACE STUDY CONFERENCE

A PEACE Conference of unique character was held in the Westminster Hotel, Winona Lake, Indiana on November 9-12. Virtually all of the Mennonite and Brethren in Christ groups in the United States and Canada were represented by a total of 84 delegates, each group having chosen its own delegation.

The Conference, sponsored by the MCC Peace Section, followed a pattern of organization in which Study Papers were circulated in advance, addresses were given, small discussion groups were held, and opinions were summarized.

The Study Papers were a particularly helpful resource, enabling delegates to come to grips with the basic issues of the Conference before the subjects were brought before the sessions.

The titles of the Study Papers, which also corresponded to the subjects for consideration by the conference, were: Nonresistance and the Gospel, by J. B. Toews and J. C. Wenger; The Disciple of Christ and the State, by Guy F. Hershberger and Robert S. Kreider; Nonresistance and the Social Order, by J. Winfield Fretz and Noah Good; What about the Noncombatant Position? by Melvin Gingerich; Our Peace Witness to Christendom, by C. N. Hostetter, Jr. and Paul Peachey; Nonresistance and Communism, by Don E. Smucker; CPS and ASW—Past and Future by H. A. Fast and J. Harold Sherk; and Nonresistance and Missions by S. F. Pannabecker and J. D. Graber.

The purpose of the conference had its origin to some degree in the Detroit Conference on the Church and War, held in May, 1950. There it was felt by some of the Mennonite delegates that perhaps a more thorough study on the total implications of Nonresistance in this day might enable a richer witness both within and beyond the brotherhood.

A spirit of deep, prayerful searching characterized the sessions. Nonresistance was seen more clearly as something very basic and far-reaching in Christian experience and life. Failures in the past were analyzed, with challenge to press on toward new goals in commitment and witness. Although differences in emphasis were seen, the delegates saw anew the inter-relations among the churches, and the imperative of unified peace witness.

A Conference Message was adopted reaffirming and strengthening the united commitment to this life of love in Christ. This declaration is addressed primarily to the brotherhood, but should likewise serve as a means of witness in a wider outreach.

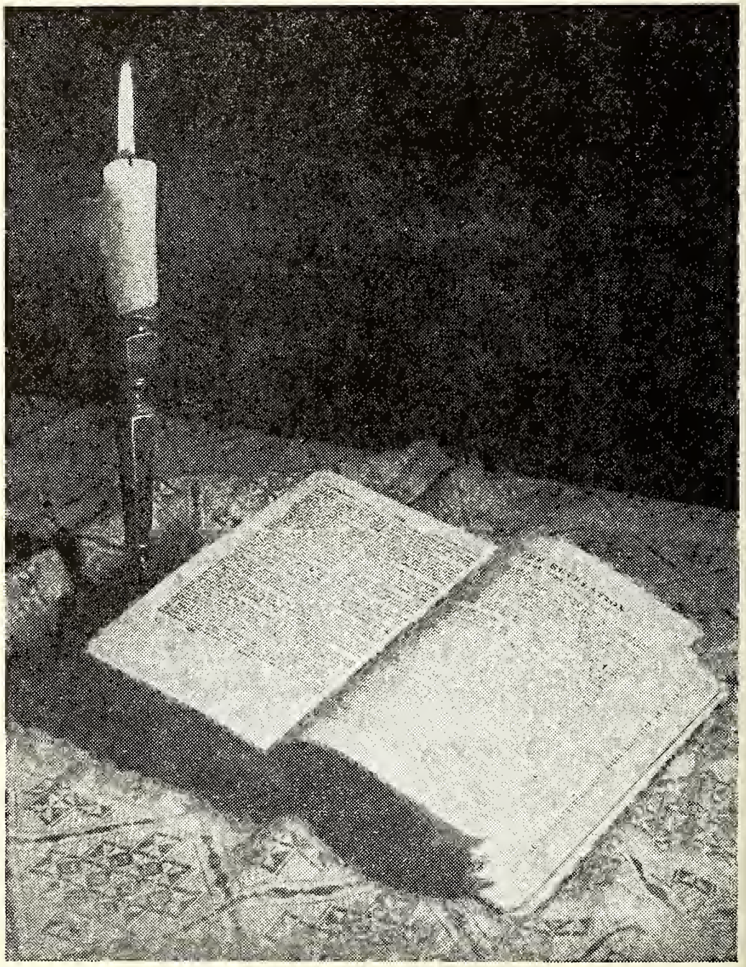
Getting More Out of the Bible



699

This page is a reprint of one of the American Bible Society's leaflets which may be secured by writing to the Bible House, Dept. U,450 Park Avenue, New York. Samples free; in quantities 35c per 100.

FIRST OF ALL—

1. Provide yourself with a Bible that makes your reading free from physical strain—a book of convenient size and weight, with good, clear print.

2. Set aside a definite time or amount of time every day for Bible reading, preferably at the beginning of the day. Consider that time as a daily appointment with God and keep the appointment faithfully.

3. Read for your personal spiritual development, with the definite purpose of making the Bible a practical guide to life.

4. Each day as you start to read, pray that God's Holy Spirit will help you to understand what you read and apply the truth to your own life.

WHAT TO READ

The Bible is a whole library of books. The one Divine Author used varied forms of literature and different human authors in the writing of it.

A person may ask a librarian where to find certain writings or to offer him counsel on what to choose among the many books in a great library. Just so, Bible teachers have made helpful suggestions on what to read in the Bible. Here is a summary of how to get more out of your Bible reading:

1. Begin with the New Testament, preferably one of the Gospels, for in the Gospels Christ is fully portrayed. Because of its vivid, direct style and rapid action, Mark is suggested. Continue the story of the early growth of Christianity by reading the book of Acts. Complete the New Testament, reading the shorter letters first, then the longer, and finally the Book of Revelation.

2. In the Old Testament start with the human-interest stories of people in Genesis. Reach into the greatest of the devotional Psalms. Then add to the Genesis stories the stories of people in succeeding Books, thus building the framework of the lives of these outstanding characters. After exploring the treasures of the Psalms, add the choice chapters and Books among the Prophets. Save for the last the longer prophetical Books and the portions you may have missed in the earlier books of history and law.

3. Read by units of thought rather than by chapters. The Book of Ruth is a good illustration. One of the most beautiful stories ever written, it takes about eighteen minutes to read the four chapters. The Book of Ruth should be read at one sitting, and so most of the shorter Books of the Bible. Other units of thought are found within the longer Books. The story of Joseph in Genesis, chapters 37-50, and of Moses in Exodus, chapters 2-14, each take about an hour to read.

4. Read the passages that mean most to you, such as the Twenty-third Psalm and the fourteenth chapter of John, which are always helpful, no matter how often you read them. Keep searching for more of such passages. One way of doing this is by reading one of the shorter Books every day for a month. (Thirty-three of the sixty-six Books of the Bible can be read in from ten to forty-five minutes each, many of them in twenty minutes or less.) A Book may not seem very clear or helpful at first. But with each new reading more light will come, until at the end of the month you will have added another treasure to your personal "Bible within the Bible."

HOW TO READ

1. Read expectantly and thoughtfully, asking, "What is God's message for me today?" In finding this personal message from God, three other questions will help: What does this passage teach me to believe?—teach me to become?—teach me to do? Remember that through the Bible God speaks to us. The more you are willing to listen, the more you can hear what He says.

2. Read with imagination, unhurriedly. Try to picture the scene or the setting. Try to conceive of the persons as living people.

3. Use standard helps, such as a reference Bible, commentaries, Bible dictionary and concordance. But do not let them take the place of reading the Bible itself.

4. Do not be disturbed if there are some passages which you do not understand. Be willing to dig for hidden treasure by repeated readings.

5. Conserve the results of your reading by keeping a notebook record of what you have read and the impressions you receive; by memorizing helpful passages or copying a key verse to carry with you for reference through the day.

6. No matter how you feel, turn to the Bible each day. It is not primarily a shelf of medicines for emergencies; it is a daily food for daily needs. But it never fails to have a message for us in the times of defeat and sorrow, fear and anxiety.

7. Each day when you finish reading, pray again that the Spirit of God may lead you; a prayer of thanksgiving for increased strength and blessing; a prayer of confession and repentance for your mistakes and failures; a prayer of petition for your daily needs; a prayer of intercession for the needs of others, including the Scripture needs of the world as yet unmet; a prayer of adoration as you think of God with wonder, love, praise and gratitude.—Bible Society Record.

A CLUB OF DAILY BIBLE READERS

You can join this Club at no expense beyond the three-cent stamp required to write to its founder and promoter, Walter A. Carr, Hemet, California.

IN MY correspondence, which is quite widely spread out among shut-ins and hospitalized friends, I adopted the following scheme. I enclosed copies of the American Bible Society's "Daily Bible Readings" with the suggestion that the recipients join in a "Pretend Bible-Reading Club," wherein each of us at the same hour would be observing our reading and having in thought and prayer others of our informal group. Seven o'clock on the Pacific coast, ten o'clock on the Eastern seaboard, is the hour of our synchronous timing. At the same hour, east or west, a common worship is carried on with great mutuality of spirit and purpose.

In looking for a name those few persons who organized the little circle of Bible readers might in all humility have hesitated to call their group a real club. They may have been reading that incomparable Christmas story of Tom Sayres', "A Town is Born," where, in that last paragraph of heart-gripping thrill, the little girl is so unbelievably heartened at the words of that great mine magnate as he answered the waif's inquiry chokingly, saying, "The angels changed the name of your Pretend Town to Real Town."

Perhaps it has been the simplicity and naturalness of the organization that has imparted unexpected strength in its growth. Of greatest value is the fact of reading at first hand, without any outside comment, the selection of daily Bible readings prepared by the American Bible Society. And it is wonderful, too, that everywhere we have access, first hand, to that volume that Sir Walter Scott so fitly emphasized as "The Only Book."

Well, if you ask how it worked out, I'll say it is a splendid movement, in a sort of fellowship that is well worth extending. Our reading and prayer movement is progressing. At present the memberships include folk from very many of our States, both east and west and north and south. From Maine and Vermont through the Middle West and down through Virginia, Tennessee, Arizona and California, it is heartening to note how generally invitations to membership are accepted and additional reading slips requested for friends. It is rewarding to receive letters from rest homes, hospitals and various sanitoriums, telling how individuals are faithfully observing our trysting hour with perseverance and rich reward.

The salient points about this contagious movement seem to rest in the idea that we are all reading the same Bible passages at the same hour and are holding each other up in special intercessory prayer at that time.—Bible Society Record.

The Victory of Love

An incident related by Rev. Young Bin Im, Secretary of the Korean Bible Society, when he was visiting in England and the United States in 1949. Secretary Im's own translation into English has to a large extent been retained.

ONE day a man of short build came to our depot and asked for two hundred copies of the New Testament for lepers free of charge. Although we were very short of books, we gladly gave them.His name is Mr. Sohn Yang Won, a Presbyterian pastor in charge of a leper asylum in the southern district of Korea. He has been engaged in this work for more than twenty-five years. He is a man of faith.

Secretary Young Bin Im, Korean Bible Society

When Shinto shrine worship was made compulsory by the Japanese authorities, he refused. Every school was also forced to worship, so he took his two sons away from school and sent them into a factory where shrine worship was not practised. Japanese police summoned Pastor Sohn and ordered him to worship shrine, but he would not obey. He was put into prison. While he was in the prison his family suffered great hardship. They lived on the meager wage earned by the two boys.

After the United States Army came to Korea, Pastor Sohn was released. He resumed his old work in the leper asylum again. He sent his two sons to a high school in Soonchun. The elder son was twenty-three years old, and the younger one nineteen; and they had to study with twelve- or thirteen-year-olds.

These two sons were as faithful to the Lord as their father. They proclaimed the salvation of Christ both in school and out. They became leaders of the small band of Christians in the school.

Last October Communists raised riot in the districts of Yusoo and Soonchun in the extreme south of Korea. Communist students went around here and there with the Communist rioters. If these students pointed a man out as a reactionary, he was doomed to be killed. They pointed out many Christians, government officers and Nationalist party members. The rioters caught them and brought them to the so-called People's Court, and these victims were sentenced to death.

One day the elder son of Pastor Sohn was in his lodgings, when the landlord came in and urged him to escape; but he said that he would die for the cause of Christ rather than run away, and he stayed in his room, praying.

Rioters came to his lodging house, guided by Communist students. Among the Communist students there was a boy who was in the same class as Mr. Sohn's elder son. He opened the door of the room where Mr. Sohn's elder son was, pointed to him, crying, "Here is the most obnoxious Christian boy! Take him. Can you still preach your Bible?" The Christian boy replied, "Yes, I can preach and will preach forever." Then the rioters rushed at him, beat him and stabbed him with bamboo spears. He was taken to the People's Court and sentenced to be shot. When the Christian boy was taken to the place of execution, his younger brother ran to him and screened him, saying, "Don't kill him. He is innocent. Kill me instead." The rioters shot both boys to death. While they were shot, they prayed.

One day after this murder the national army occupied Soonchun and drove out the Communists. Everything was suddenly changed. The national army, police and members of the Nationalist Youth Organization began to hunt out the Communists in the town. They arrested many Communist students. Among them was the boy who caused the death of Mr. Sohn's sons. He was sentenced to be shot. When Pastor Sohn heard of the death of his two sons, he prayed, saying, "I offer my thanksgiving to God, who has given me two sons who can die a martyr's death." When he heard that the enemy of his two sons was arrested and sentenced to death, he hurried to the army headquarters and asked the commanding officer to pardon the Communist boy. His argument was that, although his two boys were dead, they were saved; but if this Communist boy were shot, he would not have any chance to be saved. The commanding officer would not listen at first, but the pastor's plea was so earnest that the officer at last gave way. The boy was pardoned and given to the pastor. Mr. Sohn took the boy to his home and loved him as his son. The boy was moved and became a Christian.

The Bible has helped Pastor Sohn to do such a heroic act. The Bible is working miracles in our country. It has changed our life, our culture, and given us new standards of morality.

Youth Clinic

Every local church has its unique strength and its own weakness. If we can share our strength and find how we can deal with our weakness it will mean much for the church. In this column, questions regarding youth and youth work in the church will be answered. Send in your questions to Esko Loewen, Editor, Mennonite Youth, Topeka, Indiana. He will have your question answered by a qualified person and it will be printed in these pages. You may remain anonymous if you desire.

IN our community, the school, the town, leaders, the whole emphasis is so strong against a C. O. position that many, many young people take armed service without a thought. How can they be effectively confronted with the issues at stake?

Regardless of the community emphasis, every Christian youth should be confronted with the truth in the following places:

1. The Home—This is the most important place for Christian teaching. From earliest days parents should influence the child by example and precept to overcome evil with good. A major portion of all preaching, counseling and visiting should be to "train" the parents, so that they will influence their children.

2. The Pulpit—The minister must teach as he preaches. What can we expect of the pew if the pulpit is not "sold" on conscientious objection to army service? Ministers often talk peace to one another, but do they teach peace in the pulpit?

3. The Sunday School Class & Youth Fellowship Meeting—The Sunday School Teacher must face these issues head on. In every quarter there are at least two or three times the issues of love and force and war "jump out at us" in the lessons. In our Youth Meetings special speakers, question boxes, panels, etc. should be used to get every youth to think and discuss these tremendous issues. Projects for the "conscientious projection" of a Biblical peace witness should be undertaken.

4. The Casual Conversation—While waiting for a meeting to begin, meeting on the street, while riding to a meeting, or working at a project—all are times to informally share convictions, and ask leading questions. Some of the greatest works of Our Lord were done "as He passed by."

5. The Pastoral Visit & Counselling—The personal visit by pastor or youth leader is very important to know how each youth plans to face the draft, a certain life situation, a certain questionable practice, etc. Church Discipline in many people's minds has come to mean Church Punishment, but according to Our Lord's teaching in Matt. 18:15ff in the literal Greek, the basis of real Discipline is to "Go and Counsel. . . !" It is natural to fill one jug at a time!

6. The Mennonite School—Every youth interested in attending College or Bible School should be confronted with the call of our own institutions! What a privilege to attend schools where the Gospel is taught and where the future leaders of our congregations and communities learn to apply it in terms of living the life of peace and power! Money or might is the emphasis of too many schools.

7. The Voluntary Service Project— Our General Conference and the MCC has provided a realistic way for youth to spend one of the many summers or years of their lives in practicing Christian peace in various places with various talents. Every youth leader should constrain at least a few youth in their local congregation to become "conscientious projectors!"

8. The Everyday Occasion—Last but not least, every youth leader should be awake to the many indirect opportunities in presenting a peace witness, such as inviting visiting Church leaders to speak, from here and abroad, taking the youth to nearby V. S. projects, or visiting with like-minded youth, using good literature in the youth work, supplying the church library with peace books, and above all living a life of example to the rest whom he or she leads!

Gospels for Sale in Russia

SECRETARY A. L. Haig, who for many years has superintended the work of the British and Foreign Bible Society on the continent of Europe, in a recent letter to London included the following paragraph, giving an encouraging sidelight on the large consignment of Scriptures which the American Bible Society was able to ship to Russia in 1947:

> I recently had a letter from an English lady who was employed in the British embassy at Moscow, in which she told me that she had bought a number of Russian Gospels at Zajorsk near Moscow. She had seen them put out for sale on a stall together with pictures of saints, etc,. in the monastery. She remembers that they were paper Gospels with colored covers and had been printed in America. She gave them all away. These were no doubt your Gospels, and it is nice to think that some, at least, were being circulated.

Our Colleges and Seminary

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

A SPLENDID delegation from the Seminary attended the Mennonite Central Com. Peace Conference at Winona Lake, Ind. Those attending included Elmer Ediger, Bertha Fast, Leland Harder, Arnold Nickel, S. F. Pannabecker, Robert Kreider, and Don. E. Smucker. The two faculty members who attended prepared papers for the conference. Don. E. Smucker prepared a paper under the title, "Nonresistance and Communism" and President Pannabecker one called "Nonresistance and Missions."

The Seminary Student Discussion Group recently discussed the subject "Christ is Our Hope Today." This was the theme of the Interseminary Conference held in Evanston, Illinois, November 15 to 18, featuring Christian fellowship among the seminaries of Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, and Wisconsin.

Registration for the Winter Quarter was held November 11 to 14.

The pastor of the congregation here at the Seminary, Rev. Willard Wiebe, recently conducted evangelistic services at the Mennonite Bible Mission. The different work of city missions needs our prayerful concern and support as the gospel witness is made here in this metropolitan area.

The General Council of Boards met at the Seminary November 29 to December 1. The executive committee met on Monday, November 27. The committees met on Tuesday evening and all day Wednesday. General sessions were held on Thursday and Friday.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

A DELAYED day of celebration was held on Saturday, November 4, as Mr. and Mrs. John Konrad observed their 25th wedding anniversary after having had it postponed due to flood conditions last May. Mr. Konrad, director of the Bornoff School of Music, has been instructor of Music and choir director at the College since its beginning. All students were invited to the services, reception and program which were held at the Bethel Mission Church.

On Sunday, November 5, the College Octette, together with Rev. A. J. Regier, who is in charge of the group, rendered programs in three southern Manitoba churches. If the weather permits, several more such week-end tours will be made during the months of November and December.

Paul Peters was the College delegate for the Peace Conference held at Winona Lake, Indiana.

BETHEL COLLEGE

J WINFIELD FRETZ, H. A. Fast, and Erwin C. Goering attended the peace conference sponsored by the M.C.C. at Winona Lake, Indiana, November 9-12. Students attending this gathering were Bill Gering and Harold Thieszen, representing the Bethel Peace Group.

Mennonite and affiliated colleges participated in a conference at Bluffton College, November 16-18, on the theme: "The College Curriculum as an Organ for the teaching of Christianity." Bethel faculty members who had a part in this conference were R. C. Kauffman and M. S. Harder and James Bixel.

Dr. L. J. Franz, dean of Tabor College, spoke to the Bethel faculty and staff at their social Monday evening, November 6. Dean Franz gave his impressions of the present situation in Europe and showed a series of color pictures which he had taken on his European trip last summer.

M. S. Harder spoke at the Henderson, Nebraska, Parent Teachers Association, Friday, November 10.

Erland Waltner was the speaker at a series of religious emphasis meetings sponsored by the Mennonite churches of the Buhler community, November 5-10. The week of November 20-24 he gave a series of addresses in the First Mennonite Church, Hillsboro.

Bethel faculty members will take part in a series of meetings at the Hoffnungsau Mennonite Church designed to acquaint the people more fully with the major General Conference causes.

Induk Pahk, internationally-known lecturer and writer from Korea, spoke in the Student Union room of Memorial Hall November 13, on "Korea—its People and its Future." She was sponsored by the Peace Group and the International Relations Club in cooperation with the Peace Committee of the Bethel College Church.

The Coro Hispanico, a Spanish choir from the island of Majorca, was very well received Tuesday and Wednesday, October 31 and November 1. One of the highlights of their program was their interpretation of Shubert's Ave Maria. The second number on the Memorial Hall Series, Ferrante and Teicher, duo-pianists, was presented Monday, November 27.

Officers elected by the freshman class are Harvey Hiebert, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, president; Gordon Dyck, Whitewater, Kansas, vice-president; Lois Gering, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, secretary; and Luetta Bartel, Marion, Kansas, treasurer.

The Bethel College A Cappella Choir under the direction of Dr. Walter H. Hohmann gave its first public concert of the season Sunday, November 12.

On Relief in Korea

The MCC has been participating in meetings with other relief agencies and governmental officials to lay plans for relief in Korea. The latest development in this is the establishment of a committee on American voluntary relief in Korea, which is to be the channel and advisory body for all of the relief agencies interested in aid to Korea. A few of the details of this committee remain to be completed.

At this time this clarifies the channel through which agencies may work in making relief resources available to Korea. It does not yet permit the operation of American relief personnel on the field. For the present, distribution is carried on by the occupation forces.

Voluntary Service

Milton Harder, Calvin Redekop and two Mennonite young men from Germany and Switzerland toured the Mennonite churches in Switzerland, November 5-11, presenting the Voluntary Service and resettlement programs of MCC to these churches. This was done through talks, discussion groups, and showing pictures to youth groups and other interested persons.

Beyond Our Own

Non-registrants reported recently in Iowa, as well as other states, after serving terms for refusal to register in 1948 are again facing a possible 15-year term and/or a fine of up to $30,000. This means that any conscientious objector whose beliefs do not fit the legal exemptions by Congress, face repeated prison sentences until excluded from the draft. Selective Service regulations make every day of refusal to fulfill any Service requirements, a new offense for which there can be a separate count.

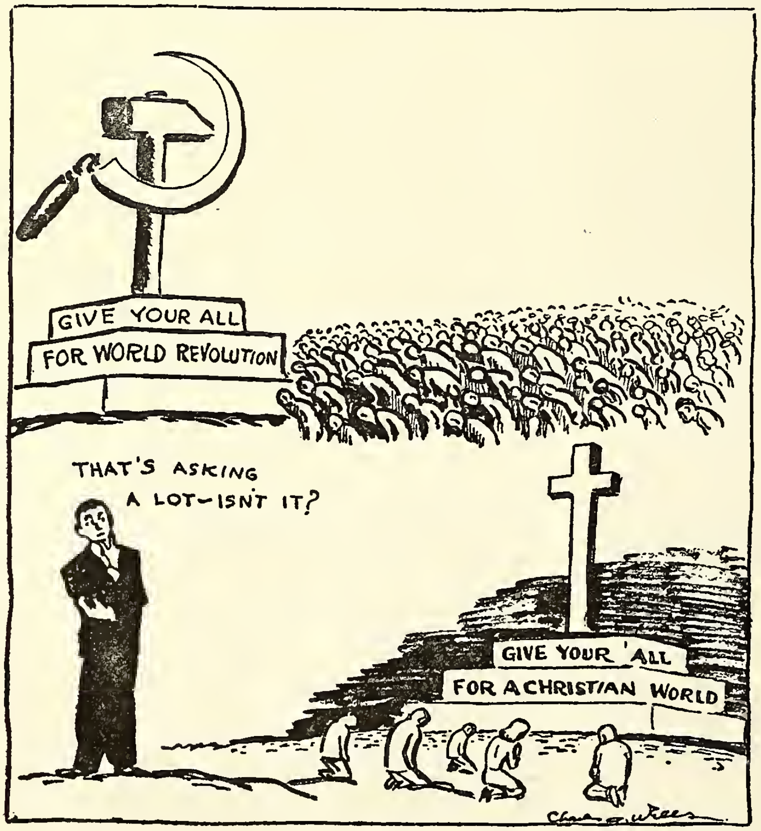
The silver shekel from Old Testament times will again soon be in circulation in new Israel. This is the first issuance of Jewish money since 144 B. C.

Compared to the amount of alcoholic beverages bought in the United States a year ($8,550,000,000), Department of Commerce reveals the following figures: $8,000,000 for Dairy products; $6,600,000,000 for education; $1,350,000,000 for motion pictures; $1,273,000,000 for jewelry; $1,511,000,000 in church contributions: $4,275,000,000 for tobacco; $800,000,000 for toys and $192,000,000 for musical instruments.

Christian schools, colleges and universities of Japan report an enrollment of more than 90,000 Japanese students. Dr. Daniel A. Poling, president of the World Christian Endeavor Union, now on a mission to the Orient, also reports that Christian youth in Japan are active in evangelistic efforts and are taking a stand agonst the principles of communism.

CONSECRATION

by Charles A. Wells



No careful appraisal of the present worldwide ideological struggle can ignore the fact that the Christian doctrine of the supremacy of the individual life is at the heart of the defense of democracy. Yet compare the devotion given to the Christian truth, which is the shrine of freedom, with the devotion given at the altar of world revolution. The Communist party demands complete surrender of self, all personal gain, comfort and security,—and gets it from millions. Christian missionaries report that much of the power of the Communist leaders of China, for instance, is to be found in their devotion to "the cause," their lives of austerity, impressively barren of personal comfort. But compared to these millions before the altar of world revolution, how many bow in such complete consecration before the altar of Christian truth? So few that we consider those who do a little out of the ordinary, —if not "queer." The Communists out-maneuver us because they out-live us,—they gain more because they give more.

LEONORE FRIESEN LEAVING

Miss Leonore Friesen, who was ordained as a missionary to Japan in the First Mennonite Church, Newton, Kansas, on Sunday, November 19, was given a farewell service in her home church Thursday evening, December 7. That same evening she left for the west coast for her port of embarkation. A stop over at our mission station in Orabi, Arizona, as well as a visit to a few churches in California, was in her plans. She plans to sail on the Jess Davis of the Watermen Steamship Corporation, leaving San Francisco, December 18, for language study in Japan in preparation for her service to the Japanese people.

—Christian Christmas is being brought to the attention of publishers of greeting cards with the request that they make available more and better Christian Christmas cards. Response by publishers is gratifying and it is reported that one in every five cards will carry a religious message this year as over one in ten, five years ago.

In a letter from Chaplain Ivan L. Bennett, Army Headquarters in Tokyo, Japan, acknowledging receipt of his Honorary Life Membership in the American Bible Society, was enclosed a letter from a leading minister in Hiroshima. This letter expressed a strong appeal for more Bibles and people to spread Christianity, saying, "They need the Bible badly but they cannot afford it."

The governments policy of race segragation in South Africa is driving more and more colored persons from the Dutch Reformed church, which is closely linked with the government. The Moslem and Roman Catholic Churches are growing because of their more open-minded policies on the race question.

Washington, D. C., is fast becoming the crime capital of the United States. Reports also show that the liquor consumption in that city is the highest of any city in the United States, and three times the average for the nation. This is our capitol!

Bible Reading bookmarks in 1946 with ington, began distributing Worldwide Bible Reading bookmarks n 1946 with 4,000 bookmarks. Each year the number doubled until this year she has ordered 64,000 copies to be distributed to sanatoriums, police stations, fire stations, nursing homes, offices, among the sick, church workers, friends and neighbors. These bookmarks are available from the American Bible Society free of charge.

—City Council of Toronto, Canada, recently lifted a 40-year-old ban on religious meetings in Toronto parks. The reason? Since Sunday sports are now allowed "it would be out of order to shut them to religious gatherings."

Korea is now receiving over a million pounds of relief materials plus $100,000 worth of cotton clothing, bandages, shoes and food, it is reported by a Church World Service team there. According to a United Nations representative at Lake Success, New York, however, between $70,000,000 and $80,000,000 will be needed before the end of the winter.

Long-suffering Jews from Iraq and near-by countries are now being moved by the American joint Distribution Committee to Iran. Their (the Jews) hope is to eventually get into Israel.

At least 2500 people met in Constitution Hall last month to observe the 66th anniversary of the Central Union Mission in Washington, D. C. Some 18 rescue mission superintendents from all over the United States participated in the program and 100 children of the mission's emergency home appeared on the platform to sing choruses. During the program superintendent of the famous Bowery Mission in New York City climaxed the celebration by giving his remarkable testimony.

The Man who Missed Christmas

ABOUT ten years ago I read an article entitled The Man Who Missed Christmas—A Christmas Sermon Story Fantasy. The following is a summary of it as I recall it.

The innkeeper in the New Testament story, as a punishment for his failure to provide a room for the parents of Jesus, was destined to visit one community on the earth each year during the week preceding Christmas. His mission was to observe whether people were still missing Christmas as he had missed it. If they did not respond to its true meaning he was to share with them the despair he felt in his own life as a result of his refusal to permit the Christ child to be born in his inn.

He comes to a certain town in a particular year It might really be your town in Pennsylvania, Kansas, California, Ontario, Manitoba, or British Columbia—in the year 1950. He enters a large store. He walks around in the store quietly and then suddenly observes two women, the one a customer and the other a clerk. The customer is loudly reprimanding the clerk who has become tired and on edge as a result of the rush of the season. He unobtrusively moves to the scene of the heated conversation asking the two people if they do not realize that in just a few days they would be observing the birthday of Christ and hastens to suggest that their behaviour is strangely out of keeping with the real meaning and spirit of Christmas. But alas, his words are practically unheeded.

He continues his journey and soon finds himself on a school bus. It is just a few days before Christmas. The atmosphere of the group is in keeping with the secular approach to Christmas. The high school students, particularly, are having a gay time as they are talking about the various parties they are planning to attend and the gifts they are going to give as well as those they are hoping to receive. Again he reaches the point where he can no longer remain silent and attempts to interrupt the frivolous conversation a number of times, but with no avail. Finally, he succeds in breaking through long enough to ask the students whether they know that the event which is the real reason for Christmas is the birthday of the Christ child. He then raises the question whether they are giving Him a place in their various plans for their Christmas celebrations. But alas, they do not understand him!

Discouraged, he continues on his mission and observes many other people in all kinds of situations, each time with the same general result indicated above. People are all preparing for Christmas but almost without exception are leaving Christ out of their preparations. He has time for one more visit in this particular year and wends his way to the home of the local minister. It is Christmas eve as he enters the study of the minister who is still struggling with the Chrismas sermon. He shares his mission together with his observations concerning the town with the minister who now needs to look no further for a theme for the next day for he plans to tell the story of how the people in his town are missing Christmas even as the innkeeper did almost two thousand years before.

Is this fantasy too far fetched? Isn't it true that, even though the birth of Christ was an unmistakeable fact in history, there were many who really missed the first Christmas? For men like Herod, the innkeeper, and many others were not aware on that first Christmas morning that the eternal hope of the ages was consummated there in Bethlehem. And yet there is another aspect of this picture for not all of the people in Palestine missed the first Christmas, for the shepherds, Mary, and Joseph realized that in that humble manger in Bethlehem Christ was truly born—the one who was the Redeemer, God's only Son, the hope of the world.

In less than two weeks we will be celebrating Christmas, 1950. The twenty-fifth of December, even as the first Christmas Day, will appear as a day in the history of the race. Whether we, however, will miss Christmas or experience its full meaning will depend on our preparation for it. A few practical suggestions as to how we can prepare to have a rich experience this Christmas season follow:

1. Let us include the story of the birth of Christ in our Christmas celebration in our homes. Some families have a brief service around the Christmas tree before the gifts are opened. A few Christmas carols are sung, the Christmas story is read from the Bible, and a prayer of thanksgiving and dedication is offered to God. Christmas is a splendid opportunity to teach the story of Christ in a natural setting for our gifts have meaning only as we realize that we give because God first gave His supreme love gift in Christ.

2. Let us give Christ His rightful place in the total Christmas program in the church including the Sunday school program. This suggestion should not have to be included and yet we need to be reminded that Christmas has no real meaning apart from Christ. Our Sunday school Christmas programs at times tend to become rather light and entertaining and even occasionally tend to play up the secular interests of Christmas with much of the ultimate meaning removed from them.

3. Let us catch the real meaning of Christmas by giving not only to those from whom we expect something in return but also to those in real need. The first Christmas came into being because God gave His supreme gift to man, not because man was worthy of it but simply because God loved us and felt that because of that love He had to give Himself through His Son in sacrificial and redemptive love. We will miss the real meaning of Christmas unless we too are willing to give in this same manner.

We need not miss Christmas in 1950 for according to the words of the hymn writer: "Where meek souls will receive Him still, the dear Christ enters in."

Teaching Christianity through the College Curriculm

J. S. Schultz*

MEMBERS of faculties from seven Mennonite institutions gathered for a three-day conference on the Bluffton College campus, November 16-18, when ten well-prepared, scholarly papers were presented.

The conference was opened by President S. F. Pannabecker of Mennonite Biblical Seminary, who showed that during the last fifty years not only Bluffton College but Mennonite education in general had found its place in and for the Mennonite church as well as among collegiate institutions. J. N. Smucker, Editor of THE MENNONITE, also at the opening, presented a stirring charge to the conference in terms of the supreme task of a Christian college teacher: "If we are God-conscious, Christ-centered, love-inspired, faith-filled, self-sacrificing, and prayer-prepared, what a tremendous power is ours."

Since the Bluffton College grouping into divisions was used as a basis for the order in which the ten prepared studies were presented to the conference, psychology and philosophy came first on the program. R. C. Kauffman, Dean of Bethel College, discussed character education in psychology; dwelling particularly upon such phases as degrees of external control, will, and learner's decision. In a supplementary way he submitted the following as goals of teaching psychology from a Christian point of view; objectivity, individual differences, oneness of humanity, human dynamics and appreciation of the human organism. Dean Harold Gross of Freeman Junior College stressed two theses for philosophy as a department in a Christian college curriculum: faith must stand in a vital relation to reason; philosophy as an activity, a method, will be far more fruitful than if dealt with abstractly. These two departments represented the Christian foundations division.

For the division of arts and literature, three studies were presented. John P. Klassen, Professor of Art at Bluffton College, gave a lecture-demonstration on how teaching a student the making of a pitcher on the potter's wheel, for instance, typifies Christ's turning human clay into a child of God. James Bixell of Bethel College asserted that many of the greatest musical compositions that live have been motivated by the Christian Spirit and that in turn, the Christian message is again conveyed to the souls of men when these are reproduced by instruments or human voices. Paul Erb, Editor of THE GOSPEL HERALD, spoke very inspiringly for Literature. One major line of thought he submitted was that since the main job of a Christian college is that of making Christians, literature can be of infinite help in that it reflects life's causes and as such the great themes of literature validate spiritual truth.

The next session dealt with the material sciences. Alta Schrock, Professor of Biology at Goshen College, proposed that in our life-science course in a Christian college we empsasize: purpose in God's creation rather than chance, a Biblical and scientific rather than a mechanistic view of the greatness of the Creator and the magnificance of His creation as well as making us aware that God made us stewards of His handiwork. H. W. Berky of Bluffton College, as part of his address, reviewed a science course he has offered to hundreds of students who are the best testimony of the effectiveness of undergirding and permeating scientific concepts with Christian thought and interpretation. The Bible and the best of science agree that "In the Beginning God" as well as God at work through all the ages.

Economics, sociology, and history represented the division of social sciences. Studies were submitted in the same order by Dean Carl Kreider of Goshen College, M. S. Harder of Bethel College and Dean L. J. Franz of Tabor College. One prime difference between secular and Christian economics is that the latter insists on injecting the ethical concept. Major factors in the field of economics to be scrutinized in the light of Christianity for us as Mennonites are: non-resistance, non-conformity, secularism and materialism. It was Dean Kreider's opinion that economic systems had little bearing on a Christian or non-Christian interpretation. The major emphases in the study of sociology were: the overwhelming importance of the study of social relationships in our day, the fact that there are very vital implications in this field contained in Christ's teachings and that these two elements be properly integrated in our curriculum. In the study of history the speaker pointed out the unquestionable significance of God's acts running through the entire gamut of human experience. Historic events prove cause and effect as major elements in all individual and collective human living. The spread of Christianity is one of the most important phenomenon in all history.

Saturday morning, during the last session of the conference, attempts were made to glean most important thoughts or findings, first in four divisional meetings, then altogether. Here are a few; A teacher's personality is a major factor in both teaching and counselling; teachers should strive to help students in developing a Christian personality by revolutionary processes; members of a college faculty can increase their effectiveness by recognizing each other's authority in their fields, this will also increase interdepartmental and divisional relations and understanding; Art, music, and literature serve as a universal language; they reflect both good and evil, express both struggle and victory. In the sciences both texts and materials in general need to be carefully selected; appreciation and a Christian interpretation of knowledge is significant. Social

Through Storm and Fog

J. N. Smucker

THE FINAL preparations for the India trip were all made. The selective packing to keep under 66 pounds allowed each person; the provisions to leave home for two months; the editorial plans both at Bluffton and Newton, and the boarding of the train in near-zero weather. We were on our way.

Passing through Pittsburgh the city seemed to be in the grips of a blizzard with snow perhaps a foot deep. New York City had no snow but plenty of wind and rain. Our party of five was completed at the Idlewild airport where we reported for the trans-Atlantic flight by Pan American World Airways. The time was Saturday afternoon, November 25.

Here it may be in order to introduce our party to the readers: Dr. and Mrs. Herbert R. Schmidt of Newton, Kansas; the editor's wife, Mrs. J. N. Smucker and her husband; and Mrs. Mary H. Smucker, the wife of the editor's late brother. The Schmidts were both seasoned travellers, and we counted it a great privilege to accompany them and enjoy their genial companionship. Mrs. Mary Smucker has a son, James, and his wife in India serving as missionaries under the Congregational Board. She accompanied us to spend the time with her children. Mrs. Schmidt is the daughter of the late P. A. Penner and has lived some years in India.

Next may we introduce you to the storm in New York City on that Saturday. Before leaving for the airport we noticed the full-page headlines "Hurricane rips city." On the trip to the field we both felt and saw more of the storm. At various places the large show-windows had been blown in. The rain was falling in sweeping torrents. At the airport we could see the sturdy light poles quivering in the wind. We noted on the bulletin boards that many flights had been "cancelled." Blut we were assured that "Flight 100" to London was going through, though a little late. The 60 passenger "Strato" Clipper, the largest and fastest airliner in service, was thought equal to the storm.

Our entrance into the plane was unusual. We were taken to the immense hanger in limousines and boarded the plane within the hanger out of the storm and rain. After all were on board we taxied out into the storm. It took some time to get the four motors properly warmed up, but finally we raced down the runway and were off.

We had been assured that it might be a bit rough until we got above the storm. We found this was putting it quite mildly. It was as if the angry winds resented the intrusion of this man-bird into its domain. Because of the immense size of the plane there were no short jerks and sharp jolts but great sweeps and sways and dizzy drops as the plane determined to plunge on into the storm.

Everyone was very quiet; the seat belts helped keep us in place as we clutched the arm rests. But after about a half hour of this it grew a bit steadier. The voice over the loud-speaker assured us in another half-hour we would be out of the storm, or above it. The announcer also said the evening meal would be delayed as the purser was unable to prepare it. But who wanted to eat anyway. We thought the announcement meant that the ship was too rocky to prepare food, but only afterwards learned that the purser was the man just back of us, (ours were the last passenger seats in the plane) who himself was air-sick—in fact quite audibly so.

But gradually the plane became steadier and in two hours was sailing along quite evenly. A delicious chicken dinner was then served—for those who cared to eat. After four and a half hours we landed at Gander, Newfoundland, the great international airport where we stopped for 45 minutes. The firm earth seemed good. The storm was past.

The journey from here on was delightful. The moon and stars were shining brightly; the plane sailed along more calmly than a train or an automobile. Far below the white fleecy clouds reflected the light of the moon. After the storm's fitful fever we slept well.

There was a glorious sunrise next morning. Everyone was now in good cheer. It seemed that the stormy and dark earth was left behind and here among the heavens all was peaceful and calm. We seemed near to God Himself.

Over Ireland the clouds parted and we looked down several miles upon the country below. We were a bit surprised when the announcement came that due to heavy fogs we would land at Hurn, about a hundred miles from London, and would then be taken to the Immigration office. Here we passed through customs, and then were taken to the railway station. It was a three hour trip to London. We did not mind the change for it gave us a good idea of what rural England was like, until we came in the vicinity of London when all was engulfed in the fog.

The Air company was very courteous. Not only were we given free transportation but also a free Sunday dinner on the train en route to London. Along the way much was done for our comfort and convenience. Instead of reaching London in time for Church as we had hoped, we arrived after dark. But we were truly thankful for the safe journey in spite of the fact that the trip started in heavy storm and ended in dense fog. The London papers had big head-lines about the storm in New York—the worst since the hurricane of 1938. Seasoned travelers on the plane said this was the roughest ride they had ever experienced. Even the captain remarked that only once had he been in a worse storm. Our London hotel was a welcome stopping place after the first leg of our journey. The next hop is from London to Beirut and the Holy Land. This we hope to share with you in the next account of our journey.

Every Christian a Witness for Christ

William B. Weaver

William B. Weaver is pastor of the North Danvers Church, Danvers, Ill.

THE EVANGELISTIC advance which began October 2, 1949 is drawing to a close. It ends December 31, 1950 at midnight. It has been participated in by many denominations and congregations. It has enlisted the interest of every age group from young people to the aged in the church. One cannot help but wonder what its fruitage has been and will be as time goes on. There are particularly two questions which come to one's mind. First, will this new emphasis upon evangelism rescue the word itself from unfortunate associations with sawdust trails. The second question is, what kind of evangelism shall we now have as a result of these fifteen months of evangelistic advance?

There are three kinds of evangelism in which any congregation can engage. In the first place, the time is not here when we can entirely dispense with mass evangelism such as we had in the days of D. L. Moody and Wilbur Chapman. In fact, the tendency today is toward a return of mass evangelism. Anyone who studies carefully the effective work of Billy Graham in the two years of his mass evangelism will conclude that there is a place for it today and that hundreds of people find salvation through that method.

The second type of evangelism which the congregation undoubtedly will use most is educational evangelism. For evangelism is not something tacked on to the chief work of the church but it is an essential part of the church school. "Evangelism is the process of leading an individual to accept Jesus Christ as a personal Savior and as Lord of his entire life. It involves the living of one's life in accordance with God's purpose and Christ's teaching." The church school is not only an educational institution but is also evangelistic in its message. Its administration and its teachers are true evangelists as they live and teach the Gospel in the presence of their pupils.

The third type of evangelism is the one which is implied in the subject assigned to the writer. It is the one which is perhaps most neglected in the program of the church. Every Christian a witness for Him implies that not only are ministers and missionaries evangelists and witnesses, but every member of the church must be a witness for Christ. Early Christianity is the proof of this statement. The two outstanding facts of the early Christian church were that it was a youth movement and a layman's movement. All of the disciples, including Jesus, were laymen and not priests, rabbis and scribes. This division between preachers and laity came in the historical development of the church. Small sects throughout the history of the church from the third century to the reformation tried to get back to the evangelism of the early church by every Christian. "Every Christian laymember was a priest." The priesthood of the believers was the foundation principle of the reformation, particularly of the Mennonites. Today we must seek to rediscover and recapture this evangelism of the first century.

What Is A Christian?

When we think of every Christian as a witness for Christ there are certain factors which must be recognized. In the first place, what is a Christian? Second, how shall he bear his witness? And third, why for Christ? The fundamental basis for all evangelism lies in the person's conviction of God. For after all, Jesus came to reveal the Father and His message of what God is like was "Good News," which is the meaning of the term, Gospel. It is in this conception of God in which the Christian not only receives an outward command but an inward imperative to bear witness of God through Christ. The motive grows out of the individual's relation to God.

God is an active, seeking, loving, revealing God. The whole purpose of His revelation through the ages was for redemption, the eternal redemptive pursose of God runs through the Bible from Genesis to Revelation. But the complete and final revelation came through Jesus Christ. This is why we witness to Him. He came into the world to show us the Father, so that the love of God might save a person and become a power in their lives. Paul refers to this gospel of love as the power of God unto salvation.

So it becomes important that the Christian who witnesses not only knows God, but also Jesus Christ. It was He who said, "Ye are the salt of the earth, ye are the light of the world. . . Follow me and I will make you fishers of men." And finally, the great commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." When He took the disciples out to the mount of Olivet and before He ascended to the Father, He said unto them, "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you and ye shall be witnesses unto Me." This is the source not only of our power to bear witness but of our command to do so. So true evangelism is more than a method or a program. It is a spirit, a purpose, and a motive. It affords the goal for all of our endeavors.

Someone has very aptly said that the reason Christianity has not accomplished more for men and women is that the witnesses have not known Jesus well enough or the human heart well enough to bring the transforming, captivating values that are in Jesus to bear upon the raw human nature of personality in such a way as to bring that person in harmony with God and His will and purpose. So to the effective witness Jesus is not only an example, or an ideal, or a teacher, or a healer but He is the revelation of the Heavenly Father; the pioneer of life; and the Savior of mankind. Jesus' life, His spirit, His teachings are all redemptive and are a part of the Gospel to which we are to witness. But Jesus did not only live for us, He died for us. He shed His blood on Calvary for the remission of sins. We, as witnesses, need to say with Paul, "I know only Him and Him crucified."

What a wonderful responsibility and yet great privilege is ours as Christian men and women to bear witness day by day to the good news of the Kingdom of God which is Jesus Christ. A person often wonders why it is that church people are so slow to talk about the gospel, this good news, to other people, or engage others in a conversation about it. Is it because we know so little about the gospel ourselves or is it because there are other things that are more important to us than the gospel? People have gone through the church school and they have gone to church all their lives and yet do not seem to be conversant about the simplest things of the gospel.

Perhaps we preachers have preached over the heads of our people and they do not understand. Perhaps we have not taught the people as we should. So many church members have only church membership and no Christian experience. As Christians we should make our witnessing by life and words appealing and attractive. We should live honestly, sincerely and in the power of the gospel.

How to Judge Effective Witnessing

There are certain questions which we might ask ourselves in order to be the most effective in our witnessing. First, to what extent do I have an understanding of what God is like as revealed by Jesus? Second, what is my experience with God in my companionship with Him? How real is He in my life? Third, do I cultivate my Christian life through prayer, Bible study and fellowship with other Christian people so that I might know God better? Finally, do I cherish the opportunities to mingle with people so that I might bear witness by life and testimony to the power of Christ? We need to continually remember that there is a difference between Christianity and the Gospel. The Gospel is first and foremost an evangel, really good news, to be announced, proclaimed, heralded in a lost and sinful world. By our testimony we express to others our own valuation of Christianity. The Christian then, should always remember that Christianity is not only the repenting of sin, nor the accepting of new responsibilities but it is the continual bringing of our lives into conformity with the life of God as revealed through Jesus Christ.

Finally then, it is the prayer of the writer that we Mennonites might in our church program, have the spirit of evangelism. Our heritage should be of great help to us. The Annabaptist movement began as a laymen's movement and as an evangelistic movement. We have always placed great emphasis on the individual Christian but too often only from the standpoint of privileges rather than of responsibilities. May we go forth as Christians contacting other individuals and bearing the message of the Word of God—holy living, sincerity and the spirit of peace and helpfulness. This is what the world needs today. A certain religious group that placed its emphasis almost entirely on correct thinking sent a list of questions to a teacher to be answered by him as to what he believed. This teacher answered as follows: "Are you not interested in the spirit in which I live? Does it make no difference to you that a holy peace has come in upon my life, that vast spiritual resources have been opened up for me so that I have no fear of life, that I have been freed from worry, frustation and terror? Are you altogether uninterested in knowing what a change has come into my life since I accepted Jesus as the Savior and Master of my life? I thought these things were the fundamentals of a Christian life." And so may we with Jesus as He also lived in an evil world evaluate our religious heritage, hold a spiritual philosophy of life, be God minded, person minded, pure minded and service minded. May the prayer which a certain pastor wrote be every Christian's prayer.

A PASTOR'S PRAYER

Dwell deep O Inner Christ, dwell deep Within my inmost soul;
Only Thy blessed self can keep
Aye, cleanse and keep me whole.
Perfect Thy holy will in me
Till all my will is stilled,
And power beyond my power from Thee
My poor weak life has filled.
Then send me with Thy saving word
To those who need Thy grace
Illumine, cleanse and use, dear Lord
Until I see Thy face.

Problems of our South America Ministers

John E. Kaufman

PAUL WROTE to the church in Galatians 6:2, "Bear ye one anothers burdens and so fulfil the law of Christ." Were he to return from a visit to South America, we believe he would write these same words to North Americans today. After living in Brazil a little over two years, and traveling approximately three months in company with Bro. A. J. Neuenschwander visiting our Mennonite colonies, (also in Uruguay, Argentine, Paraguay and our mission station in Columbia) one becomes keenly aware of the many problems our ministers and the people as a whole are encountering.

Many of the S. A. Mennonites had known the enjoyments of wealth. They had beautiful homes, churches and schools in the land they loved—Southern Russia. There they had passed their happy childhood years, with great future aspirations. But, alas, things suddenly changed. The first World War came along, and in the midst of it, a terrible revolution broke out. The rich became poor, terror reigned everywhere. People were watched and spied upon and could hardly move without government permission. Maidens and young men have seen brothers, sisters, fathers, and mothers die from disease or starvation or shot to death on the streets by the Bolsheviks. Children could not be brought up in the Christian manner, for Christian training was forbidden. Conditions became almost unbearable and many decided to flee. With no money, but with confidence in God, they turned their faces westward toward a land of promise.

THE IMPORTANCE OF FRIENDS

Indescribable hardships awaited them in their pioneer days in the new land—South America. Extreme poverty exists even today in spite of the fact that much help has come from the North American Mennonites. Much remains to be done. In this effort we need first of all to learn to understand each other, to foster goodwill, brotherly love, and friendly relations. Their contacts and training in Russia and the experiences of their wonderings left its impact upon the lives of the people and ministers as well. It is therefore essential that we learn to look for the good in people. We ought to go the second mile to prove that we are their friends. "It is not only the blankets, food, clothing etc. that makes us happy," they say, "much more the knowledge of having friends." After they are convinced that we are trying to understand them, the battle is won and the way open to help them in their thinking and doing and in the solving of their problems.

WHERE ARE NEEDS GREATEST?

Now, what are some of the specific problems? First of all, I wish to mention the lack of ministers and Christian leaders. Among the thousands of Mennonites, we found less than a half dozen elders among them. In some cases there were as many as 2,000 people to be shepherded by one elder, which under existing circumstances is an impossibility. Through much encouragement, effort and prayer, younger men out of their own ranks have come forth and are taking their places as spiritual leaders which is indeed gratifying. Through the sad experiences of recent years, the South American Mennonites are hungry for the Word of God, which presents a great challenge. Since a great majority of the refugees are General Conference Mennonites, they are looking to us to help them supply the necessary qualified leadership. If we do not take advantage of our opportunities, they no doubt, will seek help elsewhere and our conference will lose them.

John E. Kaufman is pastor of the Bergtal Mennonite Church, Pawnee Rock, Kansas.

Another problem of the South American minister is to earn a livelihood for himself and his family and at the same time take care of his ministerial duties. The minister as well as his people starts making a livelihood from the very beginning with a total lack of means. He begins cutting down the forest and clearing the ground for homesteading. Everyone can understand that this alone brings great disappointments, much sweat and determination. In addition, he is to shepherd his flock. It is gratifying that our Home Mission Board has undertaken to give some financial assistance to a number of our South American ministerial brethren. Much more could be done along this line.

Then there is a lack of church buildings. Until 1939, there were no church buildings among our Mennonites. At present, the General Conference group in Witmarsum, Brazil, has a fine building and in Curitiba all Mennonites together built two nice churches a few years ago, which is also true of Karlsruhe, Paraguay. At the time of our visit in Philidelphia, Paraguay, the General Conference group started digging the basement for a new church edifice. It was our privilege to throw a few shovels of dirt there. In all other places worship services are held in school houses in various villages. These, in most cases are dark, crude structures, far too small to hold the large number of adults and children. There are little or no seating facilities and in general these buildings hardly compare with chicken houses in our country. Yet, the people are eager to attend. Do we not have a definite responsibility to help provide church buildings?

Another problem of the South American minister is transportation. Many of the ministers in the newer colonies have no means of transportation. Others may have a team of oxen or horses and a primitive wagon. Their parishioners are widely scattered and the distance to the worship service may be as far as twelve miles away. I am thinking of the colony, Neuland, where Hans Rempel is minister. His people are scattered in thirty-one villages, covering a distance of thirty miles east and west and eighteen miles north and south. He often travels twenty miles for services with his horses and wagon on winding roads. We marveled at his untiring efforts. In our recent visit in that colony of 2,000 Mennonites, he somehow managed to bring us to our destination on scheduled time. To us it seemed we were going in circles as we drove through sand and brush, being cautious not to get broken glasses, torn clothes, cuts and bruises.

A fifth problem of our South American ministers is the lack of supplies. German books, magazines, Mennonite papers, literature, program material etc. What a scarcity of all such material in South America. In Brazil during the war our ministers and others were required to destroy the meager supply of German books, magazines and other materials they had acquired through the years. Reading material is, therefore, very scarce and much in demand. We were pleasantly surprised when on one occasion the MCO sent $50 to us to be used in the Witmarsum colony as needed. In consultation with the leaders, their wish was expressed that it be used to secure good reading material for young and old. How anxious they are to build up a good library. We can hardly imagine what it would mean to be without a daily newspaper, a weekly or monthly magazine, or good book? Much could be done to remedy this situation which is much the same in all colonies.

INSUFFICIENT MATERIAL

In general, ministers in strengthening their devotional life could make good use of German Bibles, concordances, expository books, sermon books and minister's handbooks. Our German Mennonite conference papers help tremendously to tie North and South American Mennonites together. The Home Mission Board is helping to get the Bote into South American homes. Other supplies that would be greatly appreciated would be program materials for special occasions, Sunday school material, pictures, etc. Refugees have brought few books and German reading material is at a premium everywhere. Our General Conference needs to be encouraged to print and make available more German reading material for our South American brethren.

(The Bethel College Historical Library serves as a collection center for German literature to be sent to our South American brethren. Thousands of books have already been gathered here and sent via M. C. O. channels to Paraguay and Brazil.)

Lastly, the South American people need educational opportunities for ministers and others desiring Bible or college training. The training of good Christian leadership is definitely a growing need. This is especially true of Brazil where Mennonite schools were closed by the government. Now again, the colony offers some Bible instruction to the children and young people, but Bible schools in the German language, as judged by our standard, are scarce in South America if found at all. Our South American brethren are much concerned about this great need of Christian training for leadership.

In addition to all these problems I have mentioned with which ministers in this country are not much affected, our South American brethren, no doubt, have many of the same spiritual problems that we have in this country, in molding worthy Christ-like character, in bringing comfort and hope to the discouraged and heart broken, and in winning souls to Him, who said, "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life."

In all these areas, ministers of South America still need encouragement and help. The Mennonites of North America have greatly aided them in various ways. Assistance has been of inestimable value, and gratefully acknowledged by the recipients.

These pioneers of faith, whose trust in God led them to face hardships with steadfast courage and resourcefulness, are worthy of our continued assistance. May we pray for them, reach our helping hand to them and give them a lift in their hour of need. "Let us not be weary in well doing: for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

TEACHING CHRISTIANITY THROUGH COLLEGE CURRICULUM

science teachers and students discussed problems relating to field trips and laboratory studies, voluntary service and campus living and especially the importance of helping students to carry Christian convictions into their community living after graduation.

Coordinator Pannabecker, who had presided at all general meetings now closed the conference with these issues: How can we Mennonite colleges find right foundations and direction for giving personality its proper place; developing students' will or evaluative power as well as intellect; avoiding confusion between ends and means; making room for the centrality of God; seeing clearly the legitimacy of a purpose (that of Christianity) in education? An overall summary seems to suggest itself in the goal of developing in students an enlightened, spirit-directed subjectivity.

The Christmas Spirit

by Marjorie Myers*

MY name is Janey Brown. I would like to tell you how I found the spirit of Christmas. It was in my sixteenth year.

My mother had been an invalid ever since I could remember. Every evening after dinner I would go to my Mother's room to spend some time with her. But as I look back now I can see how restless and impatient I was. I never seemed to be able to find enough time to visit with my patient little Mother, and to get to know her.

At this particular time, it was just a few days before Christmas. I was about to enter my Mother's bedroom, but tonight it was different. I was filled with eager anticipation of what was to come. Tonight I would receive my Christmas gift. My Dad wasn't much for shopping, and Mother couldn't shop, so they always asked me what I wanted and then gave me the money to buy it. This year I wanted a party dress and the price was twenty-five dollars.

I opened my Mother's door quietly. She sat in her rocker, her afghan thrown over her knees. Her eyes shifted from the clock to the door and she smiled a welcome. I slipped inside the room. I didn't have to pretend to be gay.

"Good evening, Mother, you look beautiful tonight."

She smiled prettily; her cheeks, usually so pale, were deeply flushed.

I fidgeted about nervously, "I'm sorry I can't stay long dear, but I want to do my shopping before the stores close. I came for my gift, you know."

She motioned me to sit down, her eyes avoiding mine. She was trying to tell me something.

Something was definitely wrong. My father hadn't had a very good year. "But lawyers always have work." Not the honest ones. One of my father's clients had had a bad break. He had several children to support. My father had only me—he could wait for his money. "But what about us?" Of course, we had plenty.

Another client, a woman, had lost her husband and was trying gallantly to keep her small daughter. "Are they all like this? Why doesn't father get a decent job?" I was shouting at my frail little Mother. I had hurt her, for she was so proud of him.

I tried to cover up my impatience. She was speaking again. It wasn't exactly hopeless, because she was handing me ten dollars. She thought I might be able to find happiness somewhere.

"Happiness, with ten dollars? Don't you know what you're doing to me? I wanted a dress like Carol's. I already told her I would get it. She told me hers cost twenty five dollars." I waited for the effect. There was none, so I continued.

"I'll be the laughing stock of the school. I've told everyone."

What was my Mother saying. I had spoken too quickly. I was selfish and unreasonable. Only today Mrs. Grey had been to see her and showed her the dress she had bought for Grace. I could buy one like that. I laughed hysterically. She wanted me to look like Grace! I looked disgustingly at the ten dollar bill. I didn't notice the tears running down my Mother's cheeks because of the angry ones in my own eyes.

I turned quickly and left the bedroom, slamming the door behind me. I ran down the steps, slipped into my coat and went out on the porch. The snow was beginning to fall. The sound of carols came drifting over the town—"Peace on Earth." Unconsciously I covered my ears with my hands.

I started down town; I don't know how many windows I passed before I stopped in front of a gayly lighted toy window. I don't know why I stopped, I wasn't interested in toys. I glanced from one corner to the other. I saw the stuffed dogs, the dolls, and the train circling the track.

*Lansdale, Pa.

There was a little girl standing in front of the window, her nose pressed against the glass. I was about to turn away when the child's voice stopped me.

"Isn't she beautiful," she was saying.

"Isn't who beautiful?" I asked her.

She jumped suddenly, with embarrassment. She hadn't known I was there.

"I was speaking of the doll," she said, "She is beautiful, isn't she?"

"Oh, I suppose so, I'm a little too old to be interested in dolls."

"I don't think I should ever be too old for dolls." Her nose went back to the glass.

I started to leave again when she suddenly asked me what I was interested in.

Why didn't I leave? What was there about this grubby little girl that held me stationary? I found myself telling her about the dress. She was most sympathetic. She told me she knew just what it would be like. It would be white with ruffles and lace and I would look like an angel. I told her I'd better be going. I was going to try to meet my father. Surely he would understand and give me the rest of the money.

As I turned, she placed a hand on my coat. "Please, before you go, would you tell me—is she in blue?"

"In blue—who? Oh the doll! Why yes, she's in blue. Don't you know your colors?"

"Well, not too well. And she's reaching for me, isn't she?"

"Yes, I guess she is."

"She always reaches for me every year. Her hair is like an angel's."

"Well, if angels have black hair."

"Oh, well it doesn't matter."

I was not helping to put this child at ease. She was still talking. "I know just what she feels like. I held one once. It belonged to a friend of mine."

She was still staring into the window as she was when I first saw her. Something in her manner made me ask the next questions.

"What is your name?"

She told me it was Susan.

"Tell me, Susan, where in the window is the doll?"

"Oh—there—perhaps?" She pointed in the opposite direction.

"No," I shook my head, "She's over here."

She smiled up at me, "It doesn't matter, Janey, just so she's there."

"Tell me, Susan—you don't see the doll, do you?"

"No, not really, but I know what she looks like."

"Susan, don't you mind not having a doll?"

"Sometimes, around Christmas," she told me. "But not too much, because "Thou shalt not covet."

"Thou shalt not covet," the words struck me like a blow. I had coveted my friend's dress. I had stolen the light from my Mother's eyes. I had killed the spirit of Christmas. All these commandments, and how many more had I broken.

Was it too late? No, I didn't think so.

"Susan, how would you like to hold the doll?"

We came out of the toy store and the snow was beginning to lay. Susan held the doll, and I had a shoulderette for my Mother.

At the steps we stopped, "Janey," Susan asked me, "What about the dress?"

"The dress? Oh I didn't tell you. I have ever so many. Listen, Susan, the carols, aren't they beautiful? Peace on earth. Thank you Lord."

The Bible a Light and Guide

HOW can a man find God? In a world of confusion and uncertainty and doubt, where is the path that leads to His blessed presence? If there were no Bible, this would indeed be, of all questions, the most difficult to answer. But in the providence of God we do not live in such a world; we do have the one Book to guide the way.

For him who is sincere in his search for the beauty and truth and goodness that Christ came to bring, there are many lights to point the way, but none that is quite so indispensible as the light that comes from God's Holy Word. Without the Bible to guide us into an understanding of Him, how helpless would we be in our search for Him?

Not only does the Bible lead us to God. It leads us into a larger understanding of the problems of daily living and how to deal with them. The Bible points out to us how God wants us to live and what He wants us to do in the making of a better world. The main purpose of the Bible is to help men find God and live as God would have him live. Satisfaction and true happiness come not through self-seeking but through self-giving. As we give ourselves unselfishly to the task of endeavoring to help our fellow men to a larger understanding of God and of His purposes, we ourselves discover life at its highest and best.

It is no accident that, on the one hand, the Bible is such an unread Book; and, on the other hand, that the world is filled with discord and fear and strife. The question is, will we continue to stumble on in darkness, or will we read God's Word and thus learn to walk in the light of His truth?

It may be we need to offer more specific guidance in Bible reading. A mere exhortation to "read your Bible" might lead one to get "lost" in Leviticus or Deuteronomy. People do need guidance and encouragement, if Scripture reading is to be as fruitful for them as it is designed to be.

Your Social Life During the Christmas Holidays

We may remember when we give a gift to Dad or Mother, our best friends or anyone else that it is not their birthday we are celebrating. It is not Santa Claus's birthday either, by the way! The Worship programs should point to the true birth we celebrate.

The Christmas season offers many other opportunities for youth—things they may do. It is a happy and joyous season. Let that not diminish in significance. Here are some suggestions for your youth group:

1. Have a banquet and homecoming for all the students and others who have been away from home and have returned for the holiday season. Make it a great occasion for fellowship and fun as well as worship together. Use the talents at hand for singing, special music, talks, etc.

2. Go caroling. This hardly needs to be suggested for it is done so universally. You might try to really get practiced up before you go and make your caroling of real musical value. To do that, you must start working early in December.

3. If at all possible, get your young people to hear an oratorio—or to be in one. If "The Messiah" is sung nearby or in your community make full use of the opportunity to become well acquainted with it. That masterpiece will be a thrill the rest of your days for you.

4. Besides your own Christmas programs in your church, you might seek out other Christmas services that are significant in the community and attend them. And, if it is possible, the midnight mass in a Catholic church would be something for

Question: In our community the church takes second place to the school. The young people are completely absorbed by school activity. How can the church be an influence in such a situation?

Answer: There are a number of concrete steps any group can take to improve the situation described above.

1. Long-range planning: Very often school and community events are scheduled far in advance. This calendar of events then becomes the schedule into which church activities must be geared. Your young people's group can plan in advance and have this schedule become the calendar into which other school and community activities are geared. This will have the effect of giving church dates precedence and importance in the minds of your members. Haphazard, on-the-spur-of-the-moment planning suggests second-place importance.

2. Every-member participation in planning programs: The Y. P. U. suggestions for local youth groups include a three-area emphasis in a local program. The entire membership may be divided into these three divisions called commissions. These commissions may be entrusted with the responsibility of planning programs for their respective area. Every-member participation will give the programs precedence in the minds of those who helped to plan it.

3. Church-night: Seek to clear one or two evenings a week for church functions. Plan your activities on these evenings. Cooperation with civic and school organizations of the community in this matter will create mutual respect and general appreciation for the place of the church.

4. Interesting programs: Young people will respond to interesting, well planned, and well presented programs that meet their deepest needs. Keep your programs on a high spiritual level and Christ-centered. Over a long period of time this will be the most permanent solution to your problem of putting first things first.—Jacob Friesen.

TOO FEW MEN OF GOD

We have too many men of science, too few men of God. We have grasped the mystery of the atom and rejected the Sermon on the Mount. . . . The world has achieved brilliance without wisdom, power without conscience. Ours is a world of nuclear giants and ethical infants. We know more about war than we know about peace, more about killing than we know about living.—General Omar N. Bradley.

Sunday Morning

THE STORY begins with father shutting off the alarm, trying to decide whether to get up in good time or to relax a few more minutes and get a few extra winks. Father relaxes and consoles himself that chores will not take quite so long this morning. Suddenly he bounds out of bed, startled at the morning light and realizes he has slept at least thirty minutes longer than he had planned.

Soon the whole family is out of bed, but for some reason the furnace is more sluggish than usual, the work at the barn takes as much or more time than usual. A few minutes are gained by omitting family worship. Dishes are quickly stacked; there is no time to wash them. Johnny and little Ruth object to the speed with which their ears are washed; they just won't hurry.

Father backs the car out of the garage. His blood pressure is mounting, and he gently taps the horn at some unreasonable delay in the house. Finally the family is in the car and the pilgrimage to church is begun. Mother notes with some satisfaction that their neighbors have not started as yet. After racing the car for the five miles, the family with some anxiety approaches the church. The home clock was usually five minutes fast, and the chorister often started the first song about five minutes late. But there is a sinking of heart and a depressed feeling of mind as the family hears the strains of the first song floating across the churchyard. Father mutters something to the effect that this will never happen again.

Is this story familiar? Is this family prepared for divine worship? — Sunday School Materials, Mennonite Publ. House, Scottdale, Penn.

your young people to attend and discuss after attending. This usually is held on Christmas eve.

5. Make Christmas real by making up gifts and baskets for poor children and poor families in your community. One group had a Christmas party for poor negro youngsters. Everyone had a very rich experience for having done it. You might seek out a needy group in your community to remember.

6. Encourage everyone to find good Christmas programs on the radio. Announce them and share them with one another.

7. Have as much of an emphasis as possible on family experience and the neighborliness of parties as a part of the Christmas season. It takes the commercialism out of Christmas and makes it more the real celebration of the birth of the Lord of life when families and friends draw together in rich fellowship.

Our Colleges and Seminary

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

BIBLE LECTURE week proved to be one of rich blessings for those privileged to attend. The lectures by Dr. Blair were lessons on important Biblical themes, with the subject matter taken directly from the gospel. The women's meetings were well attended, in fact the registration for this series of meetings was the highest on record. Six colleges were represented at the academic conference on the teaching of Christianity through subject matter courses, Bethel, Tabor, Freeman, Messiah, Goshen, and Bluffton. Those who attended felt that this conference was exceedingly valuable.

President Ramseyer gave the chapel address at the Christian Workers School in Findley, Ohio, Sunday afternoon, November 26. On December 6 he will perform a similar function at Fayette, Ohio.

The annual rendition of the Messiah will be Sunday, December 17, at eight o'clock in the Bluffton High School Gymnasium. The soloists this year are Hilda Ohlin, Soprano, Denver, Colorado; Helen LeClair, contralto, New York City; Dwight Weldy, tenor, Goshen, Indiana, Professor of Music in Goshen College; and Warren Allen, bass, Professor of Music, Bowling Green State University, Bowling Green, Ohio.

BETHEL COLLEGE

THE BETHEL COLLEGE Corporation met in its annual session, Friday, November 24. Acting President, D. C. Wedel, presented a comprehensive report of the condition of the college for the school year 1949-50. The report, supplemented by other members of the faculty and staff, emphasized the current problems of small colleges such as the uncertain international situation, declining enrollment, rising costs of maintenance, difficulties of financing. Conference representatives elected to the Board of Directors are N. S. Schrag, of Newton, to succeed Dr. Abraham Lohrentz, of McPherson; and Rev. Willard Wiebe, of Lind, Washington, to succeed Rev. P. K. Regier, now of Newton. Rev. Henry Hege, of Corn, Oklahoma, was re-elected as corporation representative to the board.

The second number of the Memorial Hall Series, Monday, November 27, featured the duo-pianists, Arthur Ferrante and Louis Teicher. On Monday, December 4, the Little Singers from Paris, a boys' choir appeared in concert.

The January, 1951, issue of Mennonite Life featuring the flight of the Mennonites from the Ukraine in 1943, the Mennonites in Winnipeg, voluntary service, and Mennonite publication efforts, has been placed in the mails.

FREEMMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

THE UNIVERSITY of South Dakota Orchestra came to Pioneer Hall for a concert under the sponsorship of the College band. Under the direction of Usher Abell the orchestra gave a very enjoyable concert with such numbers as the "Unfinished Symphony'" by Schubert, Overture to the "Barber of Seville" by Rossini and others.

Rev. Russell Mast presented the students with a thought provoking message in a recent chapel on the subject "Don't let your Christianity be stolen." He presented the case of Micah the Ephramite, Judges 17:1, who put his trust in graven images and a Levite priest only to have both stolen from him. This was contrasted with Micah, the prophet, whose faith rested on spiritual convictions.

The Student Association discussed its projects for the fiftieth anniversary year. A new movie projector was the major item and a new time clock and bell system was chosen for the second part of the project, both will require about $800. A faculty committee has been set up to look into available films and to book them for use as soon as possible.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

THE MENNONITE Biblical Seminary delegation to the MCC Study Conference on Nonresistance returned to Chicago impressed with the soundness of this educational method for growth in Christian understanding and unity.

It was fitting that President Rufus D. Bowman chose the week following the Winona Conference to bring a strong message in which he announced that the Church of the Brethren had reaffirmed its position of nonresistance in the following words, "However laudable the purposes of the Korean action by the United Nations, the conflict has taken on the essential features of war, the intent of which is to use violent methods to destroy sufficient human life and property until one party surrenders to superior military might."

Dr. N. E. Byers concluded his visiting lectureship this week in what was generally pronounced as a very successful and enriching course in the Philosophy of Religion. We greatly appreciated his fellowship here in the school not only for the value of his course but for his interesting comments on Mennonite education as he has seen it during the past fifty years.

The speaker at the Vesper Service November 19, was Dr. Willard Smith of Goshen College who spoke on the subject "The Challenge of Latin America."

Beyond Our Own

At a recent CONFERENCE OF CHURCHES IN LATIN COUNTRIES held at Torre Pellice, Italy, two important resolutions were passed: To denounce emphatically the denial of religious liberty in certain countries with a Roman Catholic majority, and second, in relation to Roman Catholicism the following principles were set forth:

1. The primary mission of these churches is to bear witness before all men to the Truth as revealed by God in His Word.

2. To fulfill this mission churches must refrain from any misrepresentation or derogatory attitude.

3. To rojoice in the tendency of the Roman Catholic Church to return to the Bible for its increasing interest in the Ecumenical Movement and a more objective attidude to the Reformation.

4. The realization that the Roman Catholic church does not encourage tendencies toward mutual understanding.

5. The aim of Ecumenism can never be the victory of any one church over another church.

HARTFORD TIMES reports nine Connecticut education groups are opposed to universal military training. At a meeting of Connecticut Secondary School Principals U.M.T. was branded as "ineffective in providing adequate progress for the nation's youth."

IRELAND'S SUPREME COURT has ruled that the Roman Catholic Church has a "special position" and therefore agreements made with it are legally binding. This decision reverses the principle that the father has supreme and final authority over his children in matters of religion.

NEW YORK'S P.T.A. CONGRESS has made a violent protest against liquor advertising on the air. In a proposed legislative program it suggested prohibition of alcohol advertising on television and radio, in the newspapers and on commercial vehicles.

CHIEF OF THE PSYCHO-NEUROTIC SERVICE of the Veterans Administration states that in 1948, 10 per cent of all World War II patients discharged the previous year entered with an original diagnosis of alcoholism.

At the UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA, scheduled lectures by Kagawa had to be moved from the University's Memorial Hall to a neighboring Methodist Church. Why? Because a university ruling says that Negro and white hearers must sit separately!

OVER 50,000 YOUNG PEOPLE in the United States have contributed at least $50,000 to the International Christian University Youth Campaign. This money has been sent to Japan for the building of the new university at Mitaka.

THE HILLEL FOUNDATION, which supports Jewish students, has recently made available an annual $300 scholarship to the University of Minnesota in memory of Sweden's King Gustav V.

RADIO TALKS ON THE BIBLE have again been encouraged by the Mutual Broadcasting Company. Dr. Francis Carr Stifler of the American Bible Society, has been invited for the fifth consecutive season to speak on the Bible over the facilities of Mutual's coast to coast network.

THE CHURCH OF CHRIST IN JAPAN, formed by the union of the Protestant communions, has 1,307 congregations and 133,057 members. Latest statistics on Christianity in Japan reveal 2,374 congregations and 324, 734 members. They are primarily Protestant: 2,000 churches and 213,000 members.

TWO LETTERS BY OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENT. OLIN A. KREHBIEL

TO OUR MISSIONARIES IN INDIA:

Greetings with Isaiah 52:7 and Hebrews 6:10. This is indeed a time of rejoicing in the Lord. Those who have gone forth to sow the seed, to water and to harvest are rejoicing. Those at home who have supported the work with gifts, prayers and interest are rejoicing. Those who have received the seed and sprung up to newness of life are rejoicing. Those in heaven are rejoicing.

For these fifty years God has been most gracious to our Conference as we have sought to carry out the great commission of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. We give Him all the glory and honor. As we look toward the future we pray for continued Divine guidance and blessing, yes, even beyond what we ask or think.

The Conference has reason to be grateful for the splendid group of self sacrificing workers who have responded to the call of God and the church to go to India. May the Lord enrich your lives as you enrich the lives of others. I Corinthians 15: 58.

Your co-worker in the gospel,
Olin A. Krehbiel

TO OUR CHRISTIAN BROTHERS AND SISTERS IN INDIA:

Greetings with Philippians 1: 2:6. Our hearts are filled with love and joy when we think of the marvelous grace which God has bestowed upon us. It is wonderful that while we were yet sinners Christ died for all men that those who receive Him as Savior and Lord may be children of God. We rejoice with you as you observe the 50-years Golden Jubilee of the proclaiming of this good news of salvation in your section of India. Although separated by a great distance of space and unfamiliar with one another our congregations can have spiritual fellowship together.

It was a rich pleasure to have Brother Puran Banwar attend our Conference at Berne, Indiana, three years ago. Now we want to return the kindness of the greetings which he brought to us and so we have sent Brother J. N. Smucker, the past president of our Conference, who will communicate our greetings in person. With him will be other representatives from the churches in America.

We praise God for what He has done in the past half century and pray that many more will be born into the kingdom in the time allotted ahead. May the Lord encourage and strengthen you in the faith and make you a means of blessing to others. II Thessalonians 2:13-17

Your brother in Christ,
Olin A. Krehbiel

THE IRONY OF CHRISTMAS

THROUGH the centuries Christmas, like Good Friday and Easter, has been God's supreme contradiction to the ways of men and nations. The millions now reveling in the tinsel of the Christmas season, would not dare to really know the Christmas Savior. The world has a way which is proud and hard and ruthless, but God also has a way. It is preeminently His way. The world forces God out of its heart. It forces peace on others. God never forces any man against his will. He always changes the heart of man first. I suppose that is why worldlings often "accept" or "receive" Christ, but only Christians know what it is to trust in Jesus.

Do the millions of church members realize that Christmas means God sent His Son as a babe in a cave, rather than as a heaven-born general to the gates of Rome? Generals change history, but babes change history by changing hearts.

The year 1809 is not found in most history books. It is crowded out by the surrounding years of Trafalgar and Waterloo, for the great Napoleon was on the march! But God had His plans for 1809. Far off in England Gladstone was born. Another babe with the name of Alfred Tennyson saw the light of day that year, as did Charles Darwin. Music was forever enriched by the birth of Felix Mendelsohn. Far across the Atlantic in a humble Kentucky cabin baby Lincoln was born, while up in New England in a comfortable home, Oliver Wendell Holmes, came into the world. On a cold January morning in Pennsylvania, a happy father took down the old Basle Bible from the shelf in his Berks County farmhouse and wrote on the leaf, "In this year 1809 on the 10th of January, John Oberholtzer is born." Napoleon ruled the world, but already God ruled Napoleon through these babes! Yet how insignificant are these babes compared to the insignificant Babe, born in a Bethlehem cave at the command of a Roman Emperor—the Redeemer of the world! Yes, the world has a way, but God has His way, and it is the best way!

THE PEACE OF GOD

How peaceful was that night,
All was quiet and serene;
When mild, Our Lord, in humble birth
Began His peaceful reign!

How glorious was that light
Borne by the angel herald;
Good tidings of great joy and peace,
Unto a slumbering world!

Born King of Glory, veiled;
Born Sovereign Prince of Peace;
Born Man of Sorrows yet to taste
The bitterness of death.

All settled is the night,
O'er all the world again;
Thy children watchfully await
That promised peaceful reign.

The night of sin weighs hard;
The powers of evil throng;
With upward lifted eyes, we plead:
"How long, O Lord, How long?"

SANTA CLAUS OR SAVIOR CHRIST?

DID you ever watch children talking to a Santa Claus? Last Christmas season in a large Philadelphia department store, I did, as I had often done before. But this time I began thinking—how true to life all of this really is! Alas, how many of us Christians approach the mighty God as though he were a sentimental Santa Claus or a benevolent grandmother!

In certain seasons of personal need we suddenly realize that there is a God. We promptly put on our best clothes and line up our lives to appear "nice" before God—we think. When we finally get to him to tell him what we want, we imagine him jovially nodding his consent to our latest fancies. It is not strange that before too long we suddenly realize that this type of God listens to all we say but does nothing to really help us—then that period of secret cynicism—the cycle has been completed, and so we "grow up" to accept our Christianity as something cold and commonplace.

At the first Christmas, God gave not what the world wanted, nor even what his own people wanted, but He gave what everyone needed—a Savior from sin—the perfect Christmas gift!

What do you want for Christmas—Santa Claus or Savior Christ?

ARE WE AFRAID?

WHEN one reads over the titles of the new books and articles in our magazines, the impression grows that man is afraid. For many of the leading articles and best sellers have to deal with the matter of overcoming fear, of being relieved from tensions, or of bolstering up our self-confidence.

Fears we have always with us. The fears of the primitive man are enormous and to us seem ridiculous. Recently a tribe in Africa was discovered which hastened to hide their bows and arrows at the approach of the white man. They did not want to learn the secret of their weapons. This seems strange living in the age of the hydrogen bomb. But we are not free from fear by any means.

Is there no solution to fear? The Bible has the answer; "Perfect love casteth out fear." There is no fear in such love; love that gives itself fully to God and goes out to our fellow-men.

A Christian Is - - -

J. H. Enns

WHAT are the characteristics of a true Christian? In his letter to the young congregation of Christians at Philippi the great apostle Paul describes his vision of a real Christian in chapter 4:4-7.

9449

J. H. Enns, pastor of the Schoenwiese Mennonite Church, Manitoba, Canada.

THE HAPPINESS OF A CHRISTIAN

First, a Christian is a very happy man. Why should he be happy? He knows from whence he comes and to where he goes. He believes in God, his Creator. And God, the Almighty is to him a loving Father. He finds himself a child of God. He believes in his Saviour Jesus Christ. He has forgiveness for all his sins and therefore peace in his heart. The world to him is his Father's world. For him life gains meaning—it is for him a great challenge to serve in the manner and spirit of Christ. This service is not a burden for him but rather joy and thanksgiving for all the good he receives. In time of trouble and need God is his refuge and strength. He has the assurance of knowing that all his loved ones too are in God's care. Why should not a Christian then be a very happy man?

A Christian is also unselfish and thoughtful toward other people. He is very kind in his relations with them. He knows that he himself lives by mercy so he is merciful toward others—toward his own, his neighbors and friends, strangers and even enemies.

The world expects him to be so. He never will be called a Christian if he fails to be kind to his fellowmen.

A Christian lives steadily in the presence of his Lord. He realizes that wherever he goes, whatever he does—God knows it. So he fears the Lord and shuns sin. A Christian is a god-fearing man.

A CHRISTIAN IS CAREFREE

And a Christian is carefree. He remembers the kindly words of our Saviour about the beautiful flowers and the gay birds, and that Jesus allowed and commanded his fellowmen not to be anxious. So he reasons: God gave me my earthly life, he will provide for it. God in his mercy through the power of the Holy Ghost awakened my soul to a spiritual life—He will provide for that also. A Christian trusts in the grace and in the power of God, his Father. Therefore he is carefree.

But a Christian does not neglect his obligation. He endeavors to do his daily work as well as he possibly can. In the smallest as well as in the greatest duties he strives to be true, and he constantly asks the help of his Lord.

A Christian is a man of faith. He shows this especially when he is praying. Prayer is for him joy and comfort. He cannot live a single day, not even an hour without lifting his eyes unto the hills, from whence comes his help.

A Christian is thankful. There are so many things he has for which to thank. He counts them and tells God in his prayers how grateful he is for all His mercy.

A Christian is content and knows himself to be a rich and blessed child and heir of his heavenly Father.

A CHRISTIAN TRUSTS GOD

And therefore a Christian has a profound feeling of peace in his heart—the peace of God. He is not troubled by the dark storms of life. He trusts in God.

And a Christian, who walks in the presence of the Lord, becomes transformed into the likeness of Christ "passing from glory to glory" (II Cor. 3:18). All his thoughts and all his feelings become more and more Christian. He does not lose himself in the many different confused ways and fanaticisms of this age but develops a noble, fine and really Christian character.

So we find that a Christian is a man god-fearing and righteous, believing in God and in Christ, faithful and true, kind to his fellowmen, content and thankful for the blessings of his life, carefree and very happy.

Are we such people? Have not we humbly to confess: "O Lord, forgive, so often we are not true followers of Thine, and so seldom are we what we ought to be." There is no "enjoyment in the Lord," no mercy toward men, no fear of God, no faith or constant prayer, no peace or growth through grace —but only a faint longing for these things. . .

Let us go to Jesus. No one else can teach us to become happy and true and to attain peace and strength.

"I am trusting Thee, Lord Jesus
Trusting only Thee!
Trusting Thee for full salvation,
Great and free.
I am trusting Thee to guide me;
Thou alone shalt lead.
Every day and hour supplying
All our daily needs.

Non-resistance and the Gospel

Henry A. Fast

THE charge is sometimes made that those of us who hold to the principle of non-resistance emphasize it so strongly and persistently that we give the impression that this doctrine is the center of our faith. They say we make it appear that to be non-resistant in relation to war and military training is equivalent to being a Christian and that one must be a pacifist in order to be saved.

It is, of course, possible to become guilty of this charge. A person may, in spite of good intentions, unwittingly leave a wrong impression. Or he may occasionally take too much for granted in his hearers assuming that the basic elements of the Christian faith which he regards as self-evident will be self-evident to them. And it is, of course, possible to think superficially and wrongly on this question.

Henry A. Fast, in charge of the Bible and Christian Education Department and professor of Bible at Bethel College, North Newton, Kan.

HISTORICALLY SPEAKING

Historically, however, our Mennonite people as such have never been confused about the real center of their faith and they are not unclear about it now. "Other foundation can no man lay——," "There is salvation in none other——," "Jesus Christ and Him crucified———the power of God and the wisdom of God." are passages which were anchors of their Christian faith and experience and they held to them firmly. Unwaveringly they believed Jesus to be their savior of the world. They were imperfect and often all too human and weak in their discipleship but the reason was not lack of certainty about the centrality of Christ in Christian faith and practice.

But once having accepted Christ as truly the Savior of the world they were also willing to trust Him and His teaching as adequate and true for all relations of life. They took Jesus at His word. They did not try to soften His demands because they appeared difficult, to expain them away as intended for another age or dispensation, to ignore them as too ideal for a world like ours and possible only in a perfect society, or to shield themselves against its sharp thrust by taking refuge behind some other passage of Scripture which appeared to approximate more nearly our human weakness and "wisdom." Jesus was God's answer to the problem of human life and relationship and so they must follow Him without wavering whether His teachings sounded "practical" or not. They did not say "Lord, Lord" and then proceed to follow the law of expediency preferring the wisdom of this world above the wisdom of the cross. When they discovered themselves or any of their members falling short of the demand of Christ they did not blame Jesus for setting an impractical standard but frankly charged it to their own lack of loyalty, faith, and courage.

NON-RESISTANCE AND THE GOSPEL INSEPARABLE

How can anyone claim to have made the complete surrender to Christ and to have experienced the new birth in Him and then hesitate to follow Christ when he not only endorsed the old law "thou shalt not kill," but forbids as well angry and scornful attitudes toward the fellowman; how fail to follow Him when he forbids not only all spirit of revenge but bids men turn the other cheek and go the second mile; how fail to follow Him when He bids men love their neighbor as themselves and that with a love so deep and everpresent that it keeps on loving him and praying for him even if he becomes an enemy; how fail to follow Him when He pictures human life and personality as the most priceless value in the world, and instead begin to treat human life as cheap because a state orders you to do so and to become part of its machine of murder and destruction; how fail to follow Him, who in His effort to save men from themselves and their sin and violence went to the very Cross pouring out His blood in a tremendous concern of redeeming love charging His disciples that if they would truly follow Him in His redemptive work they must walk the same way of the cross, the way of self-giving, saving love.

TRUE FOLLOWERS ARE PEACEMAKERS

Non-resistance is not something which the Christian can take or leave. It is the love of Christ constraining a man to refuse to yield to ways of sin and violence even under the heaviest pressure and the fiercest provocation. It is love working redemptively in every human relationship no matter how difficult and desperate the situation. It is I Corinthians 13 proving itself in a crisis. It is love overcoming evil with good. It is therefore an everpresent, inseparable, and inescapable part of the Kingdom citizen. If he is a true follower of Jesus he is a peacemaker, not merely ought he to be one.

Non-resistance therefore, is not the root nor merely the fruit of the Gospel. It is an inseparable part of its very life stream, its essence which determines the character not only of the fruit but of the tree itself. Non-resistance and the Gospel are not identical but inseparable. The Gospel is first but it is a Gospel of love, reconciliation, and peace.

FROM THE MISSON FRONT

Dedication of Indian Church

Herbert M. Dalke*

THE dedication service of the new church, November 5, 1950, was a milestone in the history of the Arapaho Mennonite church which began seventy years ago. The first missionary work of the General Conference of the Mennonite church was started in Oklahoma at Darlington in 1880 with a mission school, and a mission school at Cantonment in 1883. The Mennonites have continuously carried on the work ever since. Each school was in operation eighteen years until the government built schools for the Indians.

Of those that attended the Mission school at Cantonment, thirteen are still living. Work among the Arapahoes was done indirectly at first. In 1895, direct mission work was begun among the Arapahoes by A. S. Voth. The church was organized by J. A. Funk in October 28, 1897, with five charter members. In October, 1900, the Arapaho chapel at Cantonment was dedicated. In 1905 the town of Canton was started, and a year later a camp meeting was held in the fall during which fourteen accessions to church membership were made. Among the new members received was Willie Meeks, who soon became a faithful helper and who has been an evangelist since 1900. Others have served as helpers since then and today there are Indian leaders in the church. In 1907 the chapel was moved to the new location, two miles south of Canton. This is also the site of the new church. Gambling, drinking and other evils have at times been great hindrances to healthy spiritual growth of the Indian churches as well as of other churches. The "flu" epidemic in 1918 greatly reduced the number of Araphaoes and also the church membership. At one time 39 deaths took place in nine days.

In 1920 the Funks resigned and the work was carried on by Willie Meeks under the direction of A. Classens who were working among the Cheyennes at Cantonment. After that the G. A. Linscheids served and later the H. T. Neufelds from 1921 to 1827. Others who also worked with the Arapahoes are the H. J. Kliewers, the Toews, the Arthur Friesens, the Alfred Wiebes and the present missionaries.

A total of 238 Arapahoes have been baptized of which there are 109 living members today. The oldest member, Frank Sweezy, 77, living at Greenfield, has been a member of the Mennonite church for 60 years. Quite a number of the members live in other places, but they come back occasionally.

The building of the new church began with the ground breaking service, August 4, with Dr. Howard G. Nyce as our guest speaker, representing the Mission Board. The excavation of the basement took place soon after that, the forms for the basement walls were built, and the work on the church progressed steadily until October 21, 1950, when the

Days Filled with Blessings

David Koop, Curitiba, Brazil*

FOR A LONG time our churches expressed a desire that J. J. Thiessen visit the South American Mennonites. Some of us remembered him from Russia, others have learned to know him through his reports in Der Bote. As a result of this feeling, the writer of this article directed a request to the Canadian Conference, that J. J. Thiessen visit the brethren in South America. At a later Conference session it was so decided. There was great joy and keen anticipation among the people and many asked: "When is Elder Thiessen coming?"

When a letter arrived telling us that he would arrive in Curitiba in the last week in July, the churches were in high expectation. The fact that Mrs. Thiessen would accompany her husband on the trip gave the sisters the anticipation that they would receive a great deal more help and inspiration for their phase of work, than is usually the case. The Thiessens arrived July 31 and Brother Thiessen preached on three evenings telling the people about the church work in Canada. Mrs. Thiessen took part in a women's meeting and related many things about women's work in her homeland. Thus her visit proved to be a real help and uplift for the Brazilian women's work. The time for the visit went so swiftly that a brother said: "We have waited for this visit so long and now they are leaving already."

Visit in Witmarsum

I accompanied the visitors to Witmarsum, a distance of 380 kilometer (236 miles). The days here were filled with blessings as in Curitiba. Their work, however, was interrupted when Brother Thiessen was suddenly taken sick with the grippe. Because of the quick and efficient work of Peter Dyck and many intercessions, the attack was quickly halted. The Thiessens wanted to go to Bage, in the state Rio Grande do Sul, to visit the newly established Mennonite settlement there.

The visit seemed all too brief for our churches and we got a promise from our visitors, to come to us again from Asuncion, after they had visited the brethren in Uruguay, Argentina and Paraguay. At that time they could bring a report to us about all our brethren in South America. The leaders in Witmarsum were also very anxious to profit from the report, so a Young People's Rally was planned for this occasion to be held in Curitiba. It might be added that by air it takes only three and a half hours to fly from Asuncion to Curitiba.

On October 17 a telegram was received from Thiessen saying that he would arrive in Curitiba October 20 and expect to remain four days. Mrs. Thiessen could not come because of a foot injury that required the attention of a doctor. The churches in Witmarsum were notified by telegram of the date and in great haste they arranged for the trip. Saturday noon two trucks filled with young people, some older ones and ministers started out and arrived in Curitiba early Sunday morning. Thiessen preached at the morning service using as his theme: "Deepening the spiritual life." In the afternoon the Young People's Rally got started. Again Thiessen directed his appeal to them to give their best for the spreading of the Gospel.

Farewell to Thiessens

Monday, October 23rd was made to serve a double purpose—a district conference day and a farewell for Brother Thiessen. This day made a deep impression for the establishing of our faith and for Conference unification. The opening of the meeting was in charge of the writer of this article. He greeted all the visitors and outlined the importance of the day. John Boldt, Witmarsum, was the second speaker using the second Psalm as text with the theme: "The attitude of men toward God and God's attitude toward men." Abram Dyck used I Corinthians 3:11 as his text and theme, emphasizing the true foundation of the Church. David Nikkel spoke on "Life Problems" demonstrating to the young people that the answer to all their problems can be found in Christ. The speaker made it clear that the true church is united even though local churches might be divided at times. Thiessen took as his subject: "The harvest is plenteous, but the laborers are few." Matt. 9:37-38. He made it plain that new workers must come from the ranks.

In carefully chosen words, the writer brought the thoughts of the day together in an appeal to the young people to follow Christ with more sincerity. He also expressed the appreciation of the Mennonite churches of Brazil to Brother Thiessen for his help and inspiration, and directed the thanks of the group to the Canadian Conference for sending Brother and Sister Thiessen into their midst. In closing Brother Koop read I Thessalonians 3:6-7 the name "Thiessen" was inserted instead of "Timotheus" and with verses 12-13 as applying to the occasion, an effective close was made. Indeed these were days filled with blessings.

Count your garden by the flowers
Never by the leaves that fall.
Count your days by golden hours;
Don't remember clouds at all.
Count your nights by stars, not shadows,
Count your life with smiles, not tears
And with joy on every birthday,
Count your age by friends, not years.

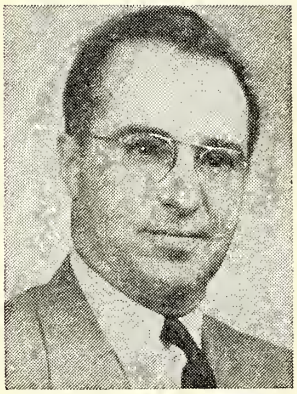
The Word Made Flesh

Alvin J. Beachy

WHEN WE THINK of Christmas we seldom connect the magnificant hymn of creation which we find in Genesis 1 with the birth of Jesus in Bethelehem. The mighty swelling chorus of that refrain which comes again and again, "and God created and God saw that it was good," seems far removed from the cries of a helpless infant or from the deeds of a mature man. Yet nothing seems more certain than this; that the writer of our fourth gospel intended his readers to make some such connection. Listen to the cadence of his opening words, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. He was in the beginning with God; all things were made through him and without him was not anything made that was made." (John 1:1-3. R. S. V.) Listen again to the breathtaking declaration that this same Word who was in the beginning with God "became flesh and dwelt among us, full of grace and truth; we have beheld his glory, glory as of the only Son from the Father." (John 1:14.)



Alvin J. Beachy, pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Bluffton, Ohio.

Our author wrote with the twofold purpose of proclaiming a Christian message and combating the Gnostic heresy which troubled the early church. We cannot be absolutely sure what the full Gnostic position was, so assiduously has it been suppressed by its opponents. Two things, however, are fairly clear: (a) the Gnostics did not believe that the creation of the material world was the work of a righteous and holy God, since there was so much of evil present in it. They taught that a demonic being had created the world, no doubt in opposition to the will of God. (b) Since in its physical aspect the human body partook of the nature of the material world, the Gnostics were driven to deny that our Lord lived a truly human life in a truly human body.

With this in mind let us listen a second time to the stirring refrain of the creation hymn, "and God created and God saw that it was good," and then look once more at John 1:1-3. Looked at in the light of the total situation to which John addressed himself, these words become a flaming affirmation of the faith that the whole creation bears the stamp of God's handiwork, and that man far from being evil because of his connection with the body, stands by virtue of his superior intelligence at the very apex of that creation. The Christ of whom the whole gospel is going to speak was God's agent at the time of creation. (John 1:3)

This very same Christ who was God's agent in the work of creation becomes now in his incarnation God's agent in the work of redemption. "He was in the world and the world was made through him, yet the world knew him not . . . . . But to all who received him who believed in his name he gave power to become children of God." (John 1:10b-12) Thus creation and redemption are linked together as parts of one whole.

When creation was completed and man placed at the head of it as the only creature capable of having fellowship with his creator, there was yet something lacking in man, namely, the desire for such fellowship. To one who feels no kinship of spirit or purpose with his maker God can only issue a divine command which man in his self-alienation from God is never inclined to obey. None the less, disobedience has its consequences in expulsion from the garden and an angel with a flaming sword is set to guard the approach to the tree of life. Here the story of creation which had such a magnificent beginning ends in a funeral dirge! Man, who was made for its crown, proves to be its downfall. Creation makes sense only if the God who created the world is able to redeem it. John intends to show that God has demonstrated his ability to do so in Jesus Christ, who was "the Word made flesh."

GOD, THE HIGHEST MEN CAN KNOW

Men who have struggled through the centuries with the question of how we may know God have always been troubled by the fact that man himself is not God and never can be. Hence thoughtful men have always been aware that anything they said about God was colored by their limited human understanding. Yet it is also true that no one has ever spoken meaningfully about God without using words that are descriptive of human experience. We cannot speak meaningfully about God in terms of the experience of a mouse, for mice do not speak and we do not know what the experiences of mice are. When we wish to speak of God we must use the highest we know, namely, human experience, to describe that which we find indescribable.

An old Negro once said to me, "If he had come in all the glory which he had with the Father before the world was, we would not have been able to look on him. And besides what good would it have done if he had not shown us how to live as men." This aged saint of the darker races was expressing simply and profoundly what learned men have written volumes in an attempt to express that if men are to know God in a saving way, God must become man. He must reveal himself to men in terms of the highest men can know.

The Eternal Word came into the world which was made through him and the world knew him not. So does John picture for us the reception given the Creator of the universe as he walked our dusty wayside planet. There is something pathetic about it. This transcendent, majestic, divine being to whom all men owe the level of intelligence which separates them from the brute beasts is ignored by some and rejected by others. But how could it be otherwise? When God comes to men as a man he is hidden as well as revealed in order that men may not be overwhelmed by the evidence which confronts them.

THE WORD INCARNATE

So the eternal "Word" became flesh. Not any flesh would do. It had to be a human flesh and a human brain that carried the message of eternal love to men. Contrary to so great a theologian as Karl Barth, the incarnation would have had no value for men if it had occurred in the flesh of a cat or in anything other than the flesh of man. The eternal "Word" became truly human, and we beheld the glory of God shining through his humanity. Thus could we paraphrase John 1:14. That he was God incarnate, did not seem at once apparent, even to the members of his immediate family or to his closest disciples. Only as they walked with him in the way, listened to his gracious words, and witnessed his deeds of compassion, were they moved to say, "No man ever spake like this man."

That he was a real human being they had no doubt. They had seen him take food when hungry and sleep when weary. They had seen him rejoice at a wedding and weep at the grave of a friend. But when they tried to describe him he was larger than the largest categories they knew. Peter's confession at Caesarea Philippi is the more remarkable because it comes after more than a year of intimate association. In his dealing with men the disciples were sure they had encountered the mind and spirit of God.

Christmas was the "Word" made flesh in the gracious words spoken to the woman at the well and to her who was taken in the very act of adultery. Christmas was the "Word" made flesh on the night of the last supper when "Jesus knowing that he had come from God and went to God, girded himself with a towel and washed his disciples feet." Christmas was the "Word" made flesh, not only in the manger at Bethlehem, but also and supremely so in the man on the cross who included in his dying words a prayer of forgiveness for those who hung him there. Christmas is divine love at work in human life.

So we speak not only of the Christmas that was, but also of the Christmas that is and of those Christmases that may yet be. We should think of Christmas as an experience that is repeated every time a human soul responds in faith to the good news of the Gospel rather than as an event which happened once for all in the year. Is it not the continuous working of that same divine love from within human life that John is thinking when he says, "But to all who received him, who believed in his name, he gave power to become children of God, who were born not of blood nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man but of God." John 1:12 R.S.V. It is the will of God that all men shall become his children.

If Christmas has become an event of the past for us, rather than the living experience of divine love working through human life, it may be that we have forgotten that the "Word" must also be made flesh in us. Not, of course, in the same sense that the eternal "Word" was made flesh, for there is only one Son of God, to us he gives the power to become sons or as the revised standard version puts it, children of God.

Yet it is well for us to remember that we do not catch the eternal "Word" in a creedal statement about him. We meet him in the discharge of the tasks which this love lays upon us. The nonbelieving world never reads the creeds we write. It looks at the deeds we do. How would you go about explaining the love of a father or a mother to a child who had never known either without yourself showing something of that love by the things you did for the child? Albert Schweitzer is the "Word" made flesh for the natives of equatorial Africa. The best argument for the truth of the Christian religion is not an argument at all but the quiet witness of a life.

Such a witness when it comes is always the gracious self-disclosure of the ever gracious God. The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth come by Jesus Christ is more than a verse of Scripture. It is the experience of the race. Men in their self-alienation from God always ask for a divine command, and the divine command always slays the man who shares neither the Spirit or purpose of the Eternal.

The grace and truth of Jesus Christ was not issued as a command. It came. That life was there in the midst of men quietly and unobtrusively as the sunlight, but it was there. Those who wished could close their eyes against the light, for he came to win men rather than to overwhelm them, "but to all who received him who believed in his name, he gave power to become children of God." (John 1:12 R.S.V.)

Do you see now how it is that Creation and Redemption belong together? Creation ended, you remember, in a funeral dirge. An angel with a flaming sword guards the approach to the tree of life as man is banished from the presence of God. Christmas removes the angel with the flaming sword and in his stead places the "Word made flesh" of whom it is said, "Now Jesus did many other signs in the presence of the disciples, which are not written in this book; but these are written that ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing you may have life in his name." (John 20:30-31. R.S.V.) In Christmas Creation and Redemption are brought together in the mighty hallelujah chorus. The Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Creation does make sense in the light of Redemption. Blessing and honor and glory and power be unto him that sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb forever and ever. Amen." (Rev. 5:13b. King James Version.)

WE MUST KEEP CHRISTMAS

We must keep Christmas
lest hate and mad revenge cast out the last vestige of hope and men grow like demons—mercy, joy, and peace unknown.

We must keep Christmas
not in its semblance, but in truth;
in kindly thought toward friend,
in mercy shown toward foe;
in self-denial, lest Mary fleeing fearfully from Bethlehem find no shelter for her holy Babe.

We must keep Christmas
in memory of happier days;
in faith that once again the Star will shine and men shall keep eternal Christmas in their hearts.

We must keep Christmas.
This year above all years
We must keep Christmas.

Youth Looks at Christmas

Verney Unruh

I am youth. I represent millions of young people both living and dead.

Tonight, all over the world, other young people are gathering for a celebration—a celebration honoring the birthday of a king. They are gathering, as youth has done for countless centuries, to praise God for the gift of His Son.

Christmas means something special to us. People sometimes think that we are frivolous and happy and carefree and uninterested in the important things of life. But how wrong they really are!

We want a finer world—we want happiness and joy—we want new friends and a faith that helps us meet the needs of the day. This evening we humbly pause from our busy world of youthful activities to honor the birth of a little child.

Perhaps it seems strange to some that we are impressed with the real meaning of Christmas. But we are. Of course, there are many holiday festivities, and there are gifts and vacations and fine times together. But this evening in all seriousness and humility and love, we worship the Christ Child.

We are fortunate—we know so much more than the shepherds and the innkeeper and the stablehand. We know that this little child is truly the Son of God. We know that He preached and taught people a new way of life. We know that He suffered and died for all men and we know that He rose again from the grave and is alive forevermore.

We worship Him, not blindly and foolishly; we bring Him our gifts—not great treasures—but our young lives. We open our hearts to the little Christ Child.

We face the world in this twentieth century. We are not afraid—we are not despairing—we know the influence of one life in this world—the life of this baby Jesus—and we in turn dedicate our love to His service and, joining hands with brother Christians the world over, we rise to serve and follow him.

A CHRISTIAN'S CODE FOR CHRISTMAS GIVING

1. I will not try to keep up with the Joneses.
2. I will keep my giving within reasonable bounds so as not to rob my family of necessities.
3. I will give the church first place in my planning.
4. I will teach my children to be happy with inexpensive gifts.
5. I will buy no war toys.
6. I will teach my children that it is more blessed to give than to receive.
7. I will remember that words of appreciation, comfort, good cheer and hope are often more helpful than material gifts.
8. I will remember that Christ is the world's greatest Christmas gift.

The Gospel Messenger

WHAT CHRISTMAS MEANS TO—

The Turkey: Doomsday.

The Mother: The time for making more sacrifices than usual for loved ones.

The Columnist: A day on which it's harder than usual to think up an idea that hasn't been done to death.

The Old: A day of memories and, maybe, regrets.

The Young: The only day in the year that counts.

The Hopeless: A day on which their misery is accentuated by the happiness of others.

The Lonely: A day for trying to lose themselves in crowds to fight off the feeling of aloneness; of venturing timidly into a church of unknown denomination, lured by the joyful pealing of the organ, or of pausing before a home to strain their ears for the happy voices of children.

The Average Man: The day on which he finds out he isn't as bad as he thought he was in moments of self recrimination, or as good as he supposed in periods of exaltation, but exactly the way he'd like to be always!

Most of Us: The day on which we call a 24 hour armistice on meanness, pettiness, thoughtlessness and other 364-day traits we could get along so much better without always.

—Dan Parker

CHRISTMAS

I wandered through the crowded square
To find a bit of Christmas there;
I deepy searched each worried face
That hurried by, but found not trace
Of anything that to my ken
Proclaimed the Christ Child here again.
And slowly from the gilded street
That glittered there in bold conceit
I turned my steps to walk alone
Where God is ne'er nor love is known.
What profit to my soul to plot
And plan a Christ where He is not?
I sought the haunts of men who curse
The Maker of the universe.
But there behind unheated sill
Through broken pane in winter's chill
A child with little hand out-thrust
Shared with the birds its only crust.

—Harold Buller

Berlin relief worker, 1949.

Keeping Christmas

Are you willing to stoop down and consider the needs of little children;
To remember the weakness, the loneliness of people who are growing old;
To stop asking how much your friends love you and ask yourself whether you love them enough;
To bear in mind the things that other people have to bear in their hearts
To try to understand what those who live in the same house with you really want, without waiting for them to tell you;
To trim your lamp so that it will give more light and less smoke, and to carry it in front so that your shadow will fall behind you;
To make a grave of your ugly thoughts—and a garden for your kindly feelings with the gate open—are you willing to do these things, even for a day?
Then you can keep Christmas.
Are you willing to believe that love is the strongest thing in the world—stronger than hate, stronger than evil, stronger than death and that the blessed life that began in Bethlehem nineteen hundred years ago is the image and brightness of the Eternal Love?
Then you can keep Christmas.
And if you keep it for a day, why not always?
But you can never keep it alone.

—Henry van Dyke

A Choice at Christmas

HUGE, feathery flakes of snow fluttered playfully and at last fell on the big crowd of Christmas shoppers. But they were playful only for a few minutes, for the wind began to blow and soon was swirling the snow everywhere.

The wind pounced the snow into Bobby's eyes, nose and mouth until he thought that he would suffocate. His feet soon grew numb in his shabby shoes and because he had not mittens or gloves his fingers soon burned and stung with pain. Bobby blinked rapidly to keep back the tears. And as a man hurried past he called, "Any paper today, Mister?" But the man did not hear and the crowd paid no attention to the weak voice, "Any papers today? Any papers?"

Suddenly a young lady rushed from one of the stores. Carrying a mountain of packages she could not see too well and in her haste stumbled into the lad.

"Pardon me," he apologized.

"Get out of my way," she snapped back. As though it wasn't enough to have to do her shopping at the very last minute, all the town had to get in her way.

She hurried on home to her big warm house. As she entered it she dumped all the packages on the floor to give her maid something to do, and sank into a big over-stuffed chair. She had shopped all afternoon in a pair of spike-heeled shoes and her feet were killing her. She called for a pan of warm water and soaked her feet as she rested.

Then, her weary feet refreshed and her tiredness gone, she marched to the kitchen to make certain that the bountiful dinner was being properly prepared. Satisfied that the meal was well on its way to success, she entered the large living room. The giant Christmas tree glittered with pride, its gorgeous decorations reflecting the lights of a hundred colored bulbs. And to top it off a huge star crowned the tree. On the mantle above the fireplace stood a miniature sleigh and eight tiny reindeer. The two small stockings hung in anticipation of a visit from Mr. Nicholas. Under the tree packages of many shapes and sizes were stacked high. Here was Christmas in all its splendor and glory.

Bobby had tried vainly to earn a few pennies by selling papers. Finally, he wandered sadly home. He dashed into his mother's arms, and bursting into tears told her of failure. Quietly his mother listened and had him soak his frostbitten feet. Then they sat down to a meager supper of tomato soup and stale bread.

When bedtime came, he climbed into his mother's lap for the usual bedtime story.

The widow asked, "Do you know what tomorrow is, son?" "No. What?" he asked eagerly.

"Christmas day."

"Oh, you mean the day when Santa Claus comes."

"Well, darling, that is probably what your school mates tell you, but let Mother tell you a true story about Christmas." Tenderly the mother took the old family Bible and read:

"And it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Caesar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed. And all went to be taxed, every one into his own city. And Joseph also went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judea, unto the city of David, which is called Behlehem, to be taxed with Mary, his espoused wife, who was great with child. And while they were there the time came for her to be delivered. And she brought forth her firstborn son, and wrapped him in swaddling clothes, and laid him in a manger, because there was no room for them in the inn. And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flocks by night. And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid. And the angel said unto them, "fear not, for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you; ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger." And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, 'Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, peace, good-will toward men.'

And it came to pass as the angels were gone away from them into heaven the shepherds said one to another, 'Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us.' And they came with haste, and found Mary, and Joseph, and the babe lying in a manger. And when they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying which was told concerning the child. And all they that told them concerning the child. Any all they that heard it wondered at those things which were told them by the shepherds. But Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart. And the shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen, as it was told them.

"Does everyone know that story?" Bobby asked.

"Well, perhaps not everyone, but almost everyone knows it," his mother answered thoughtfully.

"Well, I saw a lady today with ever so many packages and I'll bet that she didn't know about the baby Jesus, 'cause she bumped me and was grouchy. Do you think she knows it Momie?"

"Maybe not," she answered softly.

As Bobby drifted into dreamland, she murmured into his golden curls, "Some people have Christmas without Christ; others have Christ without Christmas. Dear God,"she prayed, "may my son ever choose the richer of the two possessions."

DEDICATION OF INDIAN CHURCH

building was completed. A number of Indian people worked on the building.

Contributions toward the new building show that there is an active interest in the work of the church. The greater part of the finances came from the Mission Board. A $1,000 donation toward this church was made by Mr. and Mrs. John Epp, Jr., of Whitewater, Kansas. We are also thankful for the oil furnace which the Board bought from the Inman Electric Company. J. B. Neufeld, Nick Martens, and Wilber Martens installed it in the new church. Above all we appreciate your prayers and interest.

Today the Arapaho tribe in the Canton area numbers about 500. Quite a number of the Indian children attend the government boarding school at Concho, north of El Reno. Others attend public schols and some go to college.

Summer Bible schools, an annual young people's retreat, an annual camp meeting, other special services, Bible study and prayer meetings, and regular Sunday services are conducted in each church. Formerly the sermons were interpreted in the Indian language but today that is seldom necessary.

Our
Colleges and Seminary

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

SEVERAL graduates have accepted positions as mission-church leaders; others, as Bible School teachers; one graduate went as far as Mexico to teach (under the auspices of the MCC), and still others are furthering their studies before entering full-time Christian service.

One of these graduates, Hugo Hildebrand, who has taken a position as temporary church worker in the Bethel Mission Church in Winnipeg, gave us a short talk during our Saturday evening Prayer meeting, November 25.

Another item of interest during the evening was a group discussion held immediately following the prayer meeting. The topic was "Non-resistance in relation to the Gospel." Challenging thoughts were put before the group by two of the students, one of whom had attended the Winona Peace Conference.

BETHEL COLLEGE

NEW students enrolled for the winter quarter at Bethel College are: Floyd Butz, Clarence Crozier, Raymond Harnly, Stanley Lehman, Charles Minsch, William Ewert, Willis Loganbill, Vernon Pauls, Elbert Esau, Warren Fuller, Paul Koehn, Benj. Sawatzky, Clair McFarlane, Margy Rickert, and Jacob Stobbe.

In the chapel service December 4, Walter H. Hohmann spoke on Christian symbolism, stressing particularly the symbolism present in the chapel and the administration building of the college. On December 5, H. A. Fast spoke challengingly of the true Christian answer to a time of crises such as exists today. Our response in the words of Jesus should be to take heed, watch, pray, and work.

An invitational debate tournament was held on the Bethel College campus December 8-9. Ten colleges participated. Orations and radio speeches were also included on the scheduled program.

Bethel College faculty members who attended the Council of Boards meetings of the General Conference Mennonite Church at Chicago, November 30—December 1, were H. A. Fast, J. Winfield Fretz, C. Krahn, Erland Waltner, D. C. Wedel, and Eldon Graber.

Lowell Adams appeared in a faculty music recital in the college chapel, November 30. Mrs. Erwin Goering accompanied.

The Dramatics Society and the Alpha Psi Omega presented a night of one-act plays Saturday evening, December 16, at 8:00 P. M. The plays presented and the student directors were "Bread," directed by Arthur Isaac; "Don't Be Technical," directed by Roland Ensz; and "The Littlest Shepherd," directed by Ruth Baer.

FREEMMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

DR. HENRY HITT CRANE, pastor of the Central Methodist Church, Detroit, and a nationally known religious leader and lecturer, was the speaker for Freeman Junior College's Fiftieth Anniversary Founders Day program, December 14.

The Academy Christmas Program was given in the afternoon followed by the showing of the Fiftieth anniversary pictures.

Rev. George Neufeld, missionary to Africa, spoke in chapel November 20, and showed movies. He gave a very inspiring message to the students and pointed out the methods of working with these people.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

THANKSGIVING Day was celebrated in real family fashion at the Seminary this year. The first phase of the celebration was a devout service of thanksgiving, and Willard Wiebe preached the sermon while the choir had special music. At noon there was a turkey dinner. Turkeys for the dinner were the gift of friends—A. T. Nickel, Will Regier, and Peter F. Pankratz of Mountain Lake, and the Kreiders of Goshen, Indiana.

Guests at the Thanksgiving Day dinner at the Seminary included Rev. and Mrs. H. J. Brown from Freeman, South Dakota; Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Claassen of Newton, Kansas; Dr. and Mrs. Richard Yoder and two children; Mary Ann Epp, Vera Good, Widick Schroeder, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Albrecht; and a number from Bethel College Jessie Brown, Irene Zerger, Randolin Hohmann, and Harold Duerksen.

Marvin Dirks held a week of meetings at the Eicher Church, Noble, Iowa, recently. Mrs. Pannabecker recently spoke to a women's missionary group at the First Church, Nappanee, Indiana, on "Crossing Denominational Lines."

The winter quarter began on November 28, when three new residents arrived, viz., Miss Mary J. Loewen and Mr. and Mrs. William Keeney. Miss Loewen is from Winkler, Manitoba, and the Keeneys have just returned from MCC service in Amsterdam.

Andrew R. Shelly has just returned from a six-weeks field trip for the seminary. He participated in the Western District Conference and visited churches in Western Kansas, California, and Montana. A very worthwhile trip is reported with widespread interest in the Seminary. Brother Shelly has been giving about half of his time in the last two years to field work for the Seminary and the other half to his church in Kitchener, Ontario. The Kitchener church has now secured a new pastor and Brother Shelly will begin serving the seminary full time with the new year.

Jottings

MIDDLE DISTRICT

—Apostolic Church, Trenton, Ohio: Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Amstutz, Mrs. Earl Gingerich, and Mrs. Clarence Gingerich attended the Bible lectures and missionary conference held at Blufton, November 14-17. United Council of Church Women meetings in Cincinnati were attended by Mrs. Otto Augspurger and Mrs. Hazel Kennel. The men of the church have formed an organization under the name of the Brotherhood. The church choir sponsored a community sing, Sunday evening, November 5. The Thanksgiving service offering for relief was taken December 3.——Edna Kinsinger, Corr.

—First Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: Peter Klassen of Brazil was with us the evening of November 9, preaching in English, then telling of the South American work in German, our pastor translating. We now have a junior choir which sang at the Union Thanksgiving services at our church.——George McBride, Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: The annual Thanksgiving sale brought $225.40 and the offering at the worship service preceding the sale amounted to $106. The Dorcas Sunday school class contributed to this sale in a special way by sewing aprons, clothespin bags, hot pad holders, etc., and baked goods. Church services for November 26, were cancelled because of the snowstorm. —Mrs. Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

NORTHERN DISTRICT

—Bethesda Church, Marion, South Dakota: Our harvest-mission festival was held Thanksgiving day with Miss Aganetha Fast as guest speaker. October 30, Irwin Wedel spoke and showed pictures of his work. November 17, Aganetha Fast brought the Sunday morning message. Missionary George B. Neufeld spoke and showed pictures of the work in the Congo Inland Missions in the evening service. Christian Youth Volunteers of Freeman Junior College gave a program Sunday evening, November 19.—Amelia Becker, Corr.

—Gospel Church, Mountain Lake, Minn.: The commissioning service for Miss Louise Loewen was held November 12. She left for India from New York on the Queen Elizabeth November 23. Thanksgiving services were observed morning and afternoon with Erwin Wedel bringing the messages. He also conducted the missionary conference during the preceding days. The young people's conference was well attended. John Esau and a quartet from Grace Bible Institute took part in the programs.—Elizabeth Lohrenz, Corr.

EASTERN DISTRICT

—Zion Church, Souderton, Pa.: The Tabitha Circle, an organization of young ladies of the church who meet monthly for devotions, study and sewing, recently purchased and donated to the church a new Singer sewing machine. The seventh annual rendition of the Messiah was given December 3, by a choir of 90 voices. Mr. and Mrs. Harold D. Alderfer are parents of a son, Harold, Jr., born November 21.

—First Church, Fairfield, Pa.: Missionary J. W. Shank from South America, visited in our church recently. Churches of Fairfield and surrounding communities held a union service December 3, with Mr. Rasmussen of the Gettysburg Seminary as guest speaker. This service was in recognition and celebration of the organization of the new National Council of Churches formed by merging ten former interdenominational organizations. Our annual business meeting was held December 10.—Corr.

PACIFIC DISTRICT

—First Church, Caldwell, Idaho: Sunday, November 19, we held our harvest festival with H. N. Harder from Aberdeen and Robert Garber from Nampa, Idaho, bringing the messages. Topics included in the day's services were "The mission of the Church," Acts 1:8; "Blessings according to faith," and "You are under orders." A dinner was served in the church basement at noon to approximately 100 people. Fourteen persons were present from the Aberdeen church and several brought special numbers during the day, as well as our own choir. Our annual meeting was held November 20. —Mrs. Leonard Schmidt, Corr.

—Calvary Church, Barlow, Oregon: Andrew Shelly, field representative of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago, spoke here Thursday, November 16. Our Missionary Society sent one wool comforter, three dozen dish towels and one dozen wash cloths to the Lame Deer, Montana, Mission station. In October, 195 pounds of new and used clothing, including two new wool comforters, was sent to the MCC center at Reedley, California, for overseas relief. —Mrs. Ivan Learfield, Corr.

—Grace Church, Dallas, Oregon: Our young people rendered a program at Pratum, November 5. Grace Mission Workers met November 7, with Mrs. Titus Nickel, missionary to Peru, as guest speaker. Family church night was observed Wednesday, November 8. Youth for Christ presented the film, "Contrary Winds," in this church, November 11. Our pastor held meetings in Lynden, Washington, November 13-17. —Corr.

—Glendale Church, Lynden, Washington: Special services were held November 7-17 with J. J. Regier of Dallas, Oregon, as speaker. The series ended with a candle-light consecration service. November 15, the ladies of the Mission Circle were guests of the Whitehorn Brethren group at an all-day work and worship meeting in their church. The choir is busy practicing the Christmas cantata, "The Great Light." —Mrs. Clarence O. Schmidt, Corr.

—First Church, Reedley, California: Our supply pastor, H. G. Wiens, was honored by the congregation at a surprise birthday celebration Sunday afternoon, November 5. The young people of the church sponsored a miscellaneous shower November 12, for a young DP couple who have moved to our community. Our annual church dinner and program was held November 19. Our pastor conducted a week of meetings in Aberdeen recently. —Mrs. H. Harder, Corr.

OFFERING SCHEDULES

CHURCH OFFERING SCHEDULES are being set up by our General Conference churches or church boards for 1951.

Under the new constitution gifts may be designated in the following manner:

1. For The Board of Missions—gifts received for this board will be divided between the Home and Foreign Mission Sections according to the size of their respective budgets. Gifts earmarked for either section or for a specific cause will be handled as designated.

2. For the Board of Education and Publication— gifts received for this board will be used for Conference publications and for the work of the following committees: Editorial; Educational; Historical; Publication; Church, Home, and Community. Special contributions for OPS Educational Rehabilitation, for Foreign Student Aid, and for the Student Scholarship Fund will be appreciated.

3. For The Board of Christian Service—gifts received for this board will be divided among the Committees on Relief and Hospitals, Peace Service, and Mutual Aid according to the size of their respective budgets. Gifts earmarked for a particular committee or for a specific cause will be handled as designated.

4. For the Board of Trustees and Finance—this board has not set up a budget for 1951 except the Ministers' Aid Fund which is under the supervision of The Committee on Pensions.

5. For The General Conference Treasury—"Expenses __of __the Conference connected with its sessions, as well as the upkeep and current operating expenses of the Conference Headquarters and such other expenses as cannot properly be charged to any one Conference board or committee" are being defrayed out of this fund.

P. K. Regier,
Gen. Conf. Exec. Secretary

UNIVERSAL WEEK OF PRAYER FOR THE CHURCHES

For many years it has been customary for our Churches, together with those of other denominations, to observe the first week of the new year as a week of prayer. How better could a Church begin the new year than by assembling themselves every evening or on selected evenings in the House of Worship and approach the Throne of God and beseech His guidance and blessings for the year that lies ahead? This is surely a commendable practice and should be encouraged in every way so as to really become universal in that it is practiced in every church.

Let us especially do so this year in view of the tensions that exist on the international scene. Let us humble ourselves and pray, and seek His face, and turn from our wicked ways; and then God will hear from heaven, and will forgive us our sin, and heal our land.

A program pamphlet has been prepared as an aid in setting up these worship services and may be ordered from the following address:
